CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

* A. I. R 1929 Calcutta 1

C. C. GHOSE AND JACK, JJ.

Kazi Bazlur Rahman—Accused—Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Death Ref. No. 17 and Criminal Appeal No 565 of 1928, Decided on 7th September 1928, from judgment of Addl. Sess. Judge, Chittagong.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 277—Junior pleader present in Court—Senior pleader absent—Accused cannot be said to be unrepresented—Junior pleader not challenging jurors—Constitution of jury cannot be assailed—Criminal P. C., S. 340.

A junior pleader, who had been engaged on behalf of the accused, was present in Court. There was another gentleman who was his senior who had also been engaged on behalf of the defence but he was absent.

Held: that it is not correct to say that the accused was wholly unrepresented and that it was open to the defence to challenge the jurors as their names were called out but, as the junior pleader did not challenge anybody but contented himself by saying that he was only a junior, the constitution of the jury cannot be assailed. [P 6 C 1]

* (b) Legal Practitioner—Counsel of person accused of serious crime must have entire devotion to interest of client and must exercise his utmost learning and ability and must have warm zeal in maintenance and defence of client's rights—Counsel assigned for defence cannot decline office or abate duty to accused and to Court because of querulous attitude of another counsel.

Entire devotion to the interests of the client, warm zeal in the maintenance and defence of his rights and the exercise of his utmost learning and ability, these are the points which can only satisfy the truly conscientious advocate. Every man accused of an offence has a constitutional right to a trial according to law and the duty of his counsel requires him to scan with legal knowledge the forms of the proceeding against the accused. Counsel assigned for the defence of an accused charged with the offence of murder cannot decline the office, nor can he abate a jot of his duty to the accused and to the Court, because of the querulous attitude taken by another counsel who is asked to associate himself with the counsel assigned to the accused. [P 6 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 299—It is for jury to decide whether prisoner when he committed offence was incapable of distinguishing right from wrong—Penal Code, S. 84.

It is for the jury to determine whether the prisoner, when he committed the offence with which he stood charged, was incapable of distinguishing right from wrong or under the influence of any delusion which rendered his mind at the moment insensible of the nature of the act he was about to commit, since in that case he would not be legally responsible for his conduct. [P 7 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 84—To establish defence of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing act accused was labouring under such defect of reason from disease of mind as not to know nature of act or if he did, that he did not know that he was doing wrong—Standard to be applied is whether according to ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men act was right or wrong.

To establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if that act was at the time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable. The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men the act was right or wrong. [P 7 C 2]

(e) Penal Code, S. 84—Disease of mind.

The accused's disease of the mind must have been formed before the act was done. [P 7 C 2]

(f) Penal Code, S. 84—Onus of proving insanity lies on accused.

The onus of proof where the plea of insanity is taken on behalf of the accused lies on him and it must be proved affirmatively that the accused was insane at the time when he committed the act in question. [P 7 C 2]

* (g) Penal Code, S. 84—Uncontrollable impulse with full possession of reasoning powers is no defence, nor is moral insanity any defence.

Uncontrollable impulse co-existing with the full possession of the reasoning powers is no defence in law nor is moral insanity, i.e., existence of delusions which indicate a defect of sanity such as will relieve a person from criminal responsibility, any defence in law. [P 7 C 2]

* (h) Penal Code S. 84—Mere eccentricity or singularity of manner is no defence.

It is not mere eccentricity or singularity of manner that will suffice to establish the plea of insanity; it must be shown that the prisoner had no competent use of his understanding so as to know that he was doing a wrong thing in the particular act in question. [P 7 C 2, P 8 C 1]

* (i) Penal Code, S. 84—Evidence of premeditation and design or resistance of arrest negative plea of insanity.

If there is evidence of premeditation and design or evidence that the prisoner after the act in question tried to resist arrest, the plea of insanity may be negated. A prisoner trying to resist arrest after he had committed that act in question shows that he is well aware that he has committed an act which in law is criminal: Per Erle, C. J., R. v. Leigh, (1866) 4 F & F 915, Foll. [P 8 C 1]

* (j) Penal Code, S. 84—Scientific evidence of insanity is unnecessary to satisfy jury—Existence of facts indicating unsound mind is sufficient.

It is a mistake to suppose that in order to satisfy a jury that the plea of insanity is well-founded, scientific evidence must be adduced. If the existence of facts is such as to indicate an unsound state of mind, that is quite sufficient: Per Bret, L. J., R. v. Dart, (1878) 13 Cox. C. C. 143, Foll. [P 8 C 1]

(k) Criminal Trial—If facts proving commission of crime are clear, motive is irrelevant.

If the facts are clear so far as the act complained of is concerned, the motive is irrelevant. If the facts are not clear, motive may explain what otherwise would be difficult of explanation. The want of motive for the commission of a crime and its being committed under circumstances which renders detection inevitable are important points to be taken into consideration coupled with other evidence on record bearing on the question of insanity. [P 8 C 2]

(l) Penal Code, S. 84—From absence of apparent motive in committing crime conclusion of madness cannot be drawn.

It is not the law that because a horrible crime has been committed with no apparent motive, one may conclude therefrom that the perpetrator of the deed in question must have been mad at the time. [P 8 C 2]

A. K. Fazlul Huq, Jahnnavi Charan Das Gupta and Nurul Huq—for Appellant.

B. L. Mitter and Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjya—for the Crown.

C. C. Ghose, J.—The accused in this case was charged under S. 302, I. P. C., with having committed the murder of Mr. G. H. W. Davies, I. C. S., District Magistrate and Collector of Chittagong, on 20th April 1928, and was tried before the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Chittagong Mr. A. E. Porter and a jury.

It was urged on behalf of the accused in the Committing Magistrate's Court and also in the Sessions Court that at the time when it was alleged that he had committed the murder in question he was of unsound mind and that, in the circumstances, he was not responsible for what he did. The jury unanimously found the accused guilty under S. 302, I. P. C., and further that the accused could not claim any exemption under the provisions of S. 84, I. P. C. In answer to a question put by the learned Sessions Judge, whether the jury were of opinion that the accused was of unsound mind at all, six of the jurors were of opinion that he was not but the remaining three thought that he might have been. The learned Judge accepted the unanimous verdict of the jury and sentenced the accused to death. The learned Judge observed as follows:

"I agree with the minority of the jury that the accused was of unsound mind at the time when the crime was committed. As there is a clear finding that his unsoundness of mind was not such as to exempt him from criminal liability, however, I do not consider that this opinion, especially in view of the finding of the majority of the jury, justifies the imposition of any sentence by me save the maximum. I therefore sentence the accused to be hanged by the neck until he be dead, subject to the confirmation of the High Court."

In his letter of reference to this Court the learned Judge further observed as follows:

"There is clear oral evidence on the record that the conduct of the accused for some considerable time preceding the commission of the offence was such as is identical or analogous with conduct upon observation of which the Civil Surgeon declared it to be his opinion that the accused is of unsound mind; there is no reason to disbelieve this evidence and it is corroborated by a considerable number of documents, in the proved handwriting of the accused, which must have been in preparation over a long period and which there is no reason to believe to have been fabricated for any fraudulent purpose. There appears to me to be no ground for holding that the madness displayed by the accused was feigned. I am clearly of opinion that, upon the evidence, the jury erred in not finding that the accused was of unsound mind when he committed the crime although I hold that, there is nothing to show that, even so, he is entitled to the benefit of S. 84, I. P. C. In view of the clear verdict of the jury, however, I did not consider it open to me to give effect to my own conviction that the accused is of unsound mind and was so when he committed the offence."

The facts involved, shortly stated, are as follows: The accused Kazi Bazlur Rahman called on the late Mr. Davies at his bungalow on 20th April 1928, at about 7 a. m. and asked the orderly on duty Kala Mian to take in his card which ran as follows:

"Kazi Bazlur Rahman. I have got title Byron Lord. And Student Oxford University England."

This card is Ex. 11 in this case. Mr. Davies had not come to his office room then and the orderly asked him to wait. In the meantime, another visitor, namely Babu Kali Sankar Dutta (Witness No. 8) who is the local Government pleader attached to the Munsif's Court, arrived. He too, was asked to wait. Shortly thereafter Mr. Davies came into his office room and the orderly Kala Mian took the accused's card to him and, under Mr. Davies's orders, the accused was called in. The accused sat down on a chair on the left of Mr. Davies who was facing the west. Mr. Davies gave to Kala Mian a key to open a box containing certain papers. Kala Mian opened the box and took out the papers and then went outside the room. Mr. Davis and the accused were then conversing. The Collectorate Nazir Babu Mahendra Lal Sarkar (Witness No. 2) had meanwhile arrived with a deputation of about 50 people for submitting a representation to the Magistrate in connexion with a night-soil depot for the removal of which the Municipality had taken and was taking no steps. About 5 or 6 of the members of the deputation accompanying the Nazir came inside the southern verandah where Bubu Kali Sankar Dutta was waiting and some others remained in the compound and some on the steps leading up to the gate. The Nazir was speaking to Kala Mian when the latter heard a sound of something falling. What happened thereafter is described by Kala Mian as follows:

"I heard the Collector say 'pakro pakro.' I ran forward up to the threshold of the room. I saw that the Collector had fallen with his head slanting and on a shelf which had fallen. He was on his back and was struggling. The accused was drawing out a knife from the chest of the Collector who was kicking. The accused stabbed again and the blow fell on his leg. I can't say which leg it fell on. I went to seize the accused and he threatened to stab me. I jumped back and the Nazir caught hold of the accused from behind. After that I also seized his elbow and Kadar Baksh (the Collectorate peon, witness 4), seized his wrist. The gardener and others came and seized him and Kader Baksh snatched away the knife which I can recognize. This (Ex. 1) is the knife and the price ticket on it was on it then. It was then open. The Collector was bleeding from the chest. He could not speak. The Ayah and the bearer Dasarath took him away. He took the accused on to the verandah. The police came and took him into custody. The accused is the man who came and stabbed the Collector. The Collector died 4-5 minutes after. I was then present. He was unable to say anything after the wound. There was no one but the Collector and the accused in the room."

The Nazir's account is as follows:

"I saw that the accused was then withdrawing a knife from the chest of the Collector. The Collector was kicking. I raised an alarm. I called out that the Collector was stabbed, catch the murderer. Kala Mian and I entered the room. Kala Mian went to the right and I went behind him. The accused was then trying once more to stab the Collector on the chest but as he was kicking the blow fell on his left leg. Kala Mian went to the right and tried to catch the hands of the accused. He was trembling. Seeing him the accused jumped up and threatened to stab him. I went round to his back and pinned his arms to his sides with my arms. Kala Mian, Kadar Baksh, Abdul Malek (Witness 5) and Antil came up and seized the accused. Kadar Baksh caught the right wrist of the accused in which the knife was and took the knife from him. The Collector was bleeding from the chest. The bearer and the Ayah took the Collector away. The Collector looked at me when I pinned the accused's arms to his side but he could not speak. We removed the accused to the verandah. I left the accused with my peons etc., and went into the room to see the Collector. I found him gasping but unable to speak."

Kadar Baksh (Witness 4) after describing how he seized the accused's wrist states:

"We did not strike nor abuse the accused. He did not say anything to us. He struggled to escape when we seized him."

Dasarath, the bearer (Witness 6) who was in the southern verandah of the house talking with the Nazir gives a similar account and states as follows:

"I saw the accused taking out a knife from the chest of the Collector. He struck again but, as the Collector was kicking his legs, the blow fell on his leg. Kala Mian went to catch him but the accused aimed a blow at him and he went back. The Nazir went to the back of the accused and secured him."

After the accused had been taken into custody he was brought to the bungalow of the Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate (witness 10). The latter's evidence is as follows :

"I told him I was a Magistrate, that he was not bound to make any statement, but that if he made any statement I should record it and it would go in evidence against him. He replied that if it was to be used against him he would not make a statement."

The Sadar Sub-Divisional Magistrate wrote in his order-sheet as follows :

"Accused Kazi Bazlur Rahman brought under arrest under S. 302, I. P. C. He is remanded to jail till 2nd May 1928. He refused to make any statement before me. He has got slight marks of injury on the left temple and right leg."

At the trial before the learned Additional Sessions Judge the main contention on behalf of the defence, as indicated above was that the accused was insane at the time when it was alleged that he had committed the crime in question. No less than 29 witnesses for the defence were called in support of this contention. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has in the course of his very careful charge to the jury analyzed the evidence on behalf of the accused including the documentary evidence and has shown what the state of the accused's mind was from 1921 up to shortly before the date of the occurrence. According to the witnesses on behalf of the accused, the latter was subject to fits of insanity, the last of which beginning in 1925-1926 had been practically uninterrupted up to or shortly before the date of the occurrence. It is not necessary for the purposes of this judgment to reiterate herein the summary of the evidence as given by the learned Judge. The learned Judge states as follows :

"We have evidence which, if believed, shows him suffering from delusions, e. g. that he is a person with ability and qualifications which he has not, with titles to which he has no right, claiming unusual powers (a saint, Imam Mahdi etc.) anxious to complete his education in England. All these delusions are evidenced not by witnesses only but by documents whose volume makes it unlikely that they were fabricated for the purposes of any possible action. They are amongst the observations on which P. W. 1 (Major Hodge, I. M. S.) the local expert, bases his opinion that the accused is unsound in mind. As I said before whilst directing the jury to consider the fitness of the accused to stand his trial, the opinion of P. W. 1 (Major Hodge) on the point may be disregarded but only on very valid and certain grounds and to disregard it, would be extremely unusual and unwise. If the jury accept it for the present state of the accused and believe the evidence of conduct of the accused before trial I am unable to point to any consideration on which the jury can fail to come to the conclusion that from 1925-1926 up to the day before the crime the accused was of unsound mind. That unsoundness also evidently was of the cognitive faculties for it prevented him from knowing what he was doing when, e. g. he addressed imaginary audiences, thought he was a person of distinction, imagined he could become a barrister in England within a few months, etc. If the unsoundness that is now present is proved up to a short time before the crime, in the absence of evidence, the presumption is that it continued up to the time of the commission of the crime."

It appears that the accused was committed on 16th May 1928 after the necessary preliminary enquiry by the Committing Magistrate to the Sessions Court for trial. At the enquiry before the Magistrate the accused was represented by a vakil named Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta, a Member of the Comilla Bar. On 17th May 1928 the Sessions Judge directed that the trial should begin on 11th June 1928. On the last-mentioned date the trial opened before the Additional Sessions Judge and the charge under S. 302, I. P. C. being read over to the accused he pleaded not guilty. The jurors were then chosen in accordance with the directions contained in the judgment of this Court dated 5th December 1927*. Babu Rama Prosanna Singha, pleader, a member of the Chittagoing Bar, who was present in Court, intimated to the learned Additional Sessions Judge that he had been engaged and had received a power from the accused, but that a senior having been also engaged under whom he was to act he had no instructions. The senior referred to was apparently Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta and he was absent. Babu Rama Prosanna Singha stated that he had received instructions from his senior that in the event of the trial being taken up on 11th June the accused would be undefended, whatever that might mean. A petition purporting to be filed by the brother of the accused was put in applying for an adjournment. This application was refused. The case thereupon proceeded and the first point for determination was whether the accused was in a fit condition to stand his trial. Major Hodge, the Civil Surgeon of Chittagong, was examined-in-chief. Babu Rama Prosanna Singha having stated that he was not prepared to conduct the case for the accused in the circumstances, the accused was asked to cross-examine Major Hodge. He refused or was unable to put to Major Hodge any relevant questions in cross-examination. The jury after listening to Major Hodge's evidence were unanimously of opinion that the accused was capable of making his defence and of standing his trial. The learned Judge agreed with and accepted the verdict of the jury on this point and it was directed that the case should proceed. It then became necessary to consider whether steps should not be taken to secure the representation of the accused by a legal adviser. The learned Judge in his order-sheet observed as follows.

"In the present case the accused was represented in the Committing Court by Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta. Three lists of witnesses were filed for him after the commitment. He was represented in this Court by Babu Rama Prosanna Singha who, on 5th June 1923, filed an application for adjournment on his behalf. At the time of hearing, Babu Rama Prosanna Singha intimates that he is a junior only in this case and is not prepared to prosecute the defence as he has not acquainted himself with the brief, and that his senior is Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta. No power for this pleader has been filed in the Sessions Court, but none is apparently necessary. I see no reason to disbelieve Babu Rama Prosanna Singha. If what he says is true, legal advice was retained for the accused and I cannot find that he is unable to afford to employ counsel for his defence. I am prepared to certify in the circumstances that the accused can afford to engage lawyers for his defence. At the same time the rules do not appear to take away my discretion to require the accused to be represented for the ends of justice. In the present case I am clearly of opinion that he should be represented because there is already on the record evidence that the plea of insanity suggested in the lower Court is a genuine plea and I hold it to be essential in the interests of justice to determine the fact of the accused's sanity at the time of the crime. A large number of witnesses have been cited for the defence and their evidence cannot be elicited satisfactorily without great waste of time unless a pleader appears for the accused. The District Magistrate will therefore be requested to arrange as early as possible for the representation of the accused. Meantime the witnesses for the prosecution will be examined and the accused will be given an opportunity to cross-examine them. If he applies for their recall for further cross-examination after the appointment of a representative they will be recalled for further cross-examination."

It appears that thereafter the District Magistrate appointed Babu Mahim Chandra Guha, Vakil, of the Chittagong Bar, to defend the accused. Mr. Wilkinson, the District Magistrate, in his affidavit filed in his Court states as follows :

"That it was on 12th June that I was asked by the Additional Sessions Judge to engage a pleader to defend the accused and that I thereupon selected Babu Mahim Chandra Guha, a leading pleader of this Bar and of the same calibre as the Government Pleader in order that the accused might be defended as ably and vigorously as possible."

But Mahim Chandra Guha appeared before the learned Additional Sessions Judge on 12th June, but as he had no previous instructions the learned Addl. Sessions Judge acceded to his request to allow him to take notes of the deposition of the prosecution witnesses who had been examined up to that date and to postpone their cross-examination till all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and then to begin the cross-examination from the next day, i. e., 13th June 1928. On 13th June Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta of the Comilla Bar appeared for the accused before the learned Additional Sessions Judge but he said that he would refuse to act as junior to the vakil appointed by the Crown for the defence of the accused. There was some discussion about the power which Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta had from the accused. The facts will be found set out in the learned Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 13th June 1928 in the order-sheet. In the end, the learned Addl. Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the trial should proceed and that in the circumstances the accused should be represented by the vakil appointed by the District Magistrate, i. e., Babu Mahim Chandra Guha.

It appears that thereafter all the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by Babu Mahim Chandra Guha and that 29 witnesses for the defence were examined by him. Major Hodge, the Civil Surgeon, who had the prisoner under his observation since 4th May and who had given evidence before the learned Sessions Judge on 11th June 1928, was not cross-examined by Babu Mahim Chandra Guha apparently because of the fact that according to him, Major Hodge's opinion on the question of insanity was not unfavourable to the accused.

The accused has been defended before us by a very able Advocate Mr. A. K. Fazlul Huq. If we may say so, the accused's case could not have been in better hands, Mr. Fazlul Huq has argued that there has been no proper trial in this case and that, in the circumstances which have happened, our obvious course is to set aside the verdict of the jury and the sentence passed on the accused and to direct a retrial. Mr. Huq's point is that at the time when the jury were empanelled the accused was unrepresented and that the jurors not having been challenged the constitution of the jury was not in accordance with law. Mr. Huq has further argued that the learned Additional Sessions Judge was wrong having regard to the provisions of S. 340, Criminal P. C., in not allowing Babu Jogendra Chandra Dutta to conduct the defence on behalf of the accused when he appeared in Court on 13th June 1928 and that the trial was vitiated thereby. Mr. Huq has also argued that Major Hodge, the Civil Surgeon, not having been recalled for cross-examination on behalf of the accused, his evidence should go out of the record altogether and that that in itself is a sufficient circumstance, justifying his prayer for a retrial of the accused.

Before I proceed further into the merits I propose to dispose of the three points taken by Mr. Fazlul Huq and indicated as above.

In my opinion it is not correct to say that on 11th June 1928 the accused was wholly unrepresented. As will appear from the order-sheet, Babu Rama Prosanna Singha, pleader, who had been engaged on behalf of the accused, was present in Court. Apparently there was another gentleman who was his senior who had also been engaged on behalf of the defence but he was absent. It was open to the defence to challenge the jurors as their names were called out but Babu Rama Prosanna Singha did not challenge any body. He contented himself by saying that he was only a junior. In this proceeding I am not concerned with the conduct of Babu Rama Prosanna Singha or of his senior. The only question which is immediately before me is whether the constitution of the jury was in accordance with law. There can be no doubt, in my opinion, on the facts appearing on the record that the constitution of the jury cannot be assailed and that Mr. Fazlul Huq's first point must be decisively negatived. The duty of an advocate charged with the defence of a person accused of a very serious crime will be found dwelt upon by Lord Brougham in his celebrated defence of Queen Caroline where the topic of fidelity to the client is exhaustively discussed. Entire devotion to the interests of the client, warm zeal in the maintenance and defence of his rights and the exercise of his utmost learning and ability, these are the points which can only satisfy the truly conscientious advocate. Every man accused of an offence has a constitutional right to a trial according to law and the duty of his counsel requires him to scan with legal knowledge the forms of the proceeding against the accused. (See in this connexion Professor Christian's note to 4 Blackstone's Commentaries, 356; Lord Erskine, 6 Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chancellors, page 361).

As regards Mr. Fazlul Huq's second point, there is no substance in it and it will appear from the record that there were justifiable grounds for coming to the conclusion that the absence of representation of the accused by legal advisers, the ineffective representation by them between the 11th and 13th June was part of a plan which had already been determined upon: See in this connexion the petitions put in on 5th and 11th June respectively. No exception can be taken to the conduct of Babu Mahim Chandra Guha for it is to be remembered that counsel assigned for the defence of an accused charged with the offence of murder cannot decline the office, nor can he abate a jot of his duty to the accused and to the Court, because of the querulous attitude taken by another counsel who is asked to associate himself with the counsel assigned to the accused: See per C. J. Hale 3 Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chief Justices 20; Sharswood's Professional Ethics, p. 92. I am satisfied that the learned Sessions Judge in the orders he passed on 13th June did not seek to interpose between the accused and his friends.

As regards Mr. Fazlul Huq's third point, I am satisfied from the affidavit of Babu Mahim Chandra Guha placed before us that in the circumstances of this particular case, no prejudice whatsoever has been caused to the accused by reason of the non-cross-examination of Major Hodge, the Civil Surgeon. The examination-in-chief of Major Hodge showed that his opinion was not hostile to the accused and I am not prepared to say that Babu Mahim Chandra Guha did not exercise a wise discretion in not cross-examining Major Hodge. The object of cross-examination is not to produce startling effects but to elicit facts which will support the theory intended to be put forward. If the facts are already on record, the skilful cross-examiner knows when not to make an unskilful use of the right of cross-examination.

In this view of the matter, I must negative Mr. Fazlul Huq's plea for a retrial of the accused and I will now proceed to consider the other points urged by him. Mr. Fazlul Huq has argued that at the time when it was alleged that the accused had committed the crime in question he was of unsound mind and that his condition of mind was such as would bring him within the rule of law laid down in S. 84, I. P. C. He said that upon the evidence it might be perfectly clear that the accused was the man who had inflicted the fatal wound on Mr. Davies but the question of his culpability for the act which the accused committed had not been properly considered. The Civil Surgeon was examined before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge who asked him if the accused was in a fit condition of mind to stand the trial. But that did not prove that the accused had lapsed into sanity at the time of the alleged murder. The Civil Surgeon also said that he did not know the accused's past history. There was evidence that the accused thought himself to be a great poet, he had written cart-loads of poetry and thought that he was Byron, Shelly, and Wordsworth, that he lectured before imaginary audiences on every conceivable subject under the sun for several hours together every day. The opinion of the Civil Surgeon should have been asked as to what he thought of the man with such a history.

The law relating to the plea of insanity has been laid down by eminent Judges from time to time, but it may not be wholly out of place to state very briefly what I conceive to be the true position. It is for the jury to determine whether the prisoner, when he committed the offence with which he stood charged, was incapable of distinguishing right from wrong or under the influence of any delusion which rendered his mind at the moment insensible of the nature of the act he was about to commit—since in that case he would not be legally responsible for his conduct. On the other hand provided the jury should be of opinion that when he committed the offence he was capable of distinguishing right from wrong and not under the influence of such a delusion as disabled him from discerning that he was doing a wrong act or one contrary to law, he would be amenable and held guilty in the eye of the law. In other words, to establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable. The standard to be applied is whether according to the ordinary standard adopted by reasonable men the act was right or wrong.

Once it is clear that the appellant knew that the act was wrong in law, then he was doing an act which he was conscious he ought not to do, and as it was against the law, it was punishable by law. It has also been said by a very high authority that one must see that the accused's disease of the mind was formed before the act was done. Any disease which so disturbs the mind that you cannot think calmly and rationally of all the different reasons to which we refer in considering the rightness or wrongness of an action, any disease which so disturbs the mind that you cannot perform that duty with some moderate degree of calmness and reason may be fairly said to prevent a man from knowing that what he did was wrong. The onus of proof where the plea of insanity is taken on behalf of the accused lies on him and it must be proved affirmatively that the accused was insane at the time when he committed the act in question. Uncontrollable impulse co-existing with the full possession of the reasoning powers is no defence in law nor is moral insanity i. e., existence of delusions which indicate a defect of sanity such as will relieve a person from criminal responsibility, any defence in law. It is not mere eccentricity or singularity of manner that will suffice to establish the plea of insanity; it must be shown that the prisoner had no competent use of his understanding so as to know that he was doing a wrong thing in the particular act in question. If there is evidence of premeditation and design or evidence that the prisoner after the act in question tried to resist arrest, the plea of insanity may be negatived. A prisoner trying to resist arrest after he had committed the act in question shows that he is well aware that he has committed an act which in law is criminal: per Erle, C. J., R. v. Leigh (1). It is a mistake to suppose that in order to satisfy a jury that the plea of insanity is well-founded, scientific evidence must be adduced. If the existence of facts is such as to indicate an unsound state of mind, that is quite sufficient: per Brett, L. J., R. v. Dart (2).

Bearing these principles in mind I have examined the record in this case minutely and I have not failed to keep ever present in my mind the terms of the verdict of the jury, of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and of his letter of reference to this Court. I am unable to come to the conclusion that the evidence on record discloses circumstances which would enable the accused to claim exemption under the provisions of S. 84, I. P. C. It is abundantly clear on the evidence on record that it was the accused who killed Mr. Davies and that there was premeditation and design on the part of the accused. Some evidence of the state of mind of the accused in 1924, 1925 and 1926 had been given which showed that he was of an eccentric character and had occasional delusions about his position and capacities. But what was his condition in 1928? He had come all the way from Tippera to Chittagong, written perfectly lucid letters, asked for an interview with Mr. Davies, went there correctly attired, and had taken the precaution of going there early in order to avoid the presence of other interviewers. When he was caught, he struggled. Six hours after the occurrence when the Committing Magistrate saw him and told him that if he made any statement to him (Magistrate) the same might be used against him (accused) the accused declined to make any statement. The accused had provided himself with a knife which was new: see the evidence on record, pp. 16, 19, 21, 22, 25 and 26. If as a matter of fact there was premeditation and design, as we hold there was, the plea of insanity must at once be negatived. The accused cannot claim any exemption whatsoever under S. 84, I. P. C. Further, there is considerable evidence that immediately after the act in question there was a struggle between the accused and those who rushed up to him for the purpose of arresting him. The accused tried his best to resist arrest. He did not succeed because he was overpowered by the people who had assembled in the verandah of the Magistrate's bungalow. The fact that the accused tried to resist arrest shows unmistakably that he was well aware at the time that he had committed an act which in law was criminal. This circumstance would also show that the accused cannot claim any exemption under S. 84, I. P. C. The jury found that the accused cannot claim exemption under S. 84, I. P. C., an opinion with which the learned Judge agreed. Nothing has been shown to me which would justify me to take a different view. I am therefore constrained to hold that the accused has committed an act punishable under S. 302, I. P. C. It was argued before us that no motive is discernable on the record and that that lent considerable support to the plea of insanity. Now if the facts are clear so far as the act complained of is concerned the motive is irrelevant. If the facts are not clear, motive may explain what otherwise would be difficult of explanation. The want of motive for the commission of a crime and its being committed under circumstances which render detection inevitable are no doubt important points to be taken into consideration coupled with the other evidence on record bearing on the question of insanity. In my opinion it is not the law that because a horrible murder has been committed with no apparent motive, in circumstances as have been spoken to by the prosecution witnesses, one may conclude therefrom that the perpetrator of the deed in question must have been mad at the time.

The question now arises about the sentence which we should pass on the accused. There can be no doubt that he was not in a healthy state of mind for some considerable time before the date of the occurrence. His mind was one which had been morbidly affected. The evidence on record abundantly justifies that view and we are to a considerable extent fortified by the opinion of Major Hodge. On the question of sentence the learned Sessions Judge's opinion must carry great weight with us. In these circumstances, we think the ends of justice will be sufficiently met by our commuting the sentence of death passed on the accused to one of transportation for life. We direct accordingly.

Jack, J.—The appellant has been convicted of the murder of Mr. G. H. W. Davies, I. C. S., and sentenced to death.

The prosecution case is that on the morning of 20th April the appellant called on Mr. Davies and, at the close of an interview lasting about 10 or 15 minutes, stabbed him in the chest with a knife inflicting injuries of which Mr. Davies died in the course of a few minutes. No one was present at the time but, hearing the noise caused by Mr. Davies falling and crying out, Mahendra Lal Sarkar Nazir and Kala Mian, orderly, who were in the verandah attached to the office room where this took place, rushed into the room followed by others. They saw the appellant withdrawing a knife from Mr. Davies' chest and then inflicting another wound on his leg as he lay on the floor helpless but kicking out with his legs. The Nazir seized the appellant from behind and Kala Mian then snatched from him this knife Ex. 1.

That the appellant stabbed Mr. Davies with a knife and so caused his death is not now disputed. It is merely urged that he did not use the knife Ex. 1 to which a price label is attached showing that it was newly purchased. This suggestion loses all force in so far as it is intended to negative premeditation, when we find that during the course of the examination of the prosecution witnesses, the accused stated that his knife had no price ticket, he had removed it the night before. This statement shows that, in any case, he brought a knife with him. Moreover there is overwhelming evidence that Ex. 1 is the knife actually taken from the hand of the accused at the time.

It is admitted that the learned Judge's summing up was eminently fair but it is urged on behalf of the appellant that he was not properly represented at the trial inasmuch as the learned Judge refused to allow the pleader engaged by the appellant's brother, to defend the appellant. The order on the order-sheet dated 13th June 1928 shows that, in fact, the learned Judge refused to allow Babu Jogendra Dutta to appear for the accused on that date without a power from the accused whom the jury had found to be capable of defending himself and as the pleader refused to certify that he was satisfied that the accused had validly executed a power. Whatever may have been the propriety of this order, a perusal of the affidavit filed by the defence pleader Babu Mohim Chandra Guha Dey Barma (one of the leaders of the Chittagong Bar) shows that there is no substance in this objection to the manner in which the trial was conducted. On the first day of the trial, viz., 11 June Babu Rama Pd. Singha intimated to the Court that he had received a power from the accused and that a senior was also engaged under whom he was retained, but that he had no instructions and that his senior had instructed him that if the trial were taken up that day the accused was to be undefended. Thereupon Mahim Babu was appointed by the District Magistrate to defend the accused.

It is urged that the accused was prejudiced inasmuch as Major V. S. C. Hodge, the Civil Surgeon was not recalled for examination after he had had the past history of the accused put before him as detailed by the witnesses. However, in the affidavit referred to above, it is explained that Major V. S. C. Hodge was not recalled because his evidence as it stood was very favourable to the accused, and that Mahim Babu's decision not to examine him again was entirely approved by the relatives of the accused. It is significant that in the very detailed and elaborate petition of appeal filed by the appellant there is no suggestion that the appellant was in any way prejudiced by the District Magistrate's appointment of a pleader to defend him, on the contrary he candidly admits that the vakil did whatever lay in his power, and further makes no complaint regarding the non-appearance of Babu Jogendra Dutta.

But in any case these preliminary points need not be considered as the learned advocate for the appellant does not press them in view of the order which we propose to pass.

The only question which remains to be considered is whether, at the time he stabbed Mr. Davies, the appellant was, in the words of S. 84, I. P. C. by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law.

There is evidence indicating that since 1925, the appellant used at times to talk incoherently and to himself. In 1926 he claimed at different times to be (or to have received the titles) Shelley, Wordsworth, Byron, and Iman Mahdi. Then in 1927 we find him writing the incoherent and unintelligible letters Ex. D, Ex. D/1, Exs. E and E/1 which certainly indicate a disordered mind.

On the day before the occurrence he wrote the letter Ex. 18, which, though indicating a weak intellect and wandering mind, is quite intelligible. Finally just before the occurrence he sent in his card to Mr. Davies inscribed :

"Kazi Bazlur Rahman—I have got title Byron Lord and student Oxford University, England."

It is clear therefore that up to the time of the occurrence he was more or less mentally unsound. Notwithstanding this, his conduct up to the time of the occurrence and the evidence of the Post Master and other witnesses regarding his enquiries on the previous day about the non-delivery report of a telegram, shows that he was quite capable of transacting business intelligently.

The evidence of Mr. Siddique Rahman, Public Prosecutor, Comilla, throws some light on the object of his visit to Mr. Davies. Eight or ten days before the occurrence he wanted to see the District Magistrate at Comilla in connexion with some previous correspondence (cf. Ex. D and Ex. D/1) and Mr. Siddique Rahman told him that, Mr. Nelson, the Magistrate with whom he had corresponded was no longer there. He then said that he would go to see the Commissioner at Chittagong if his case had been transferred there. He further made a parade of his poetic powers referring to Byron, Shelly and Wordsworth and said he had heard that Mr. Nelson talked very highly of his diction and language and he had wanted to pay his respects to him. In the correspondence referred to (Ex. D and D. 1), so far as it conveys any sense at all, he complains of domestic troubles and that his wife had been hypnotizing him, also he wants to be recognized as a great poet and to be permitted to go to College. On the day before the occurrence as the evidence of the Post Master and Station Master shows he had wired to his uncle for Rs. 3,000 and was agitated because no reply had come; he wanted also a passport to go to England. On Mr. Davies' table were found five note books of the accused containing unintelligible poetry and the inference is that the appellant wanted recognition of his poetic powers and some facilities for going to College in England. There is evidence showing that at times the appellant acted violently when opposed e. g. when witness Hosani (D. W. 18) pressed the appellant to take medicine the latter gave him a kick on the chest and knocked him down. Again Amir Hossen (D. W. 24) says the appellant used at times to get furious with people who tried to remonstrate with him and when urged to take food would beat those who approached him. We can only conjecture what took place at the interview with Mr. Davies. It was just after Mr. Davies had concluded the interview by saying "good morning" that the appellant stabbed him. There is no evidence as to motive but on the one hand it seems possible that the appellant was exasperated by not getting what he wanted or again it may be that the apparently morbid condition of his brain had produced a grave craving for relief by some such passionate action.

Whatever may be the explanation of his cruel and apparently unprovoked attack there are circumstances which seem to indicate that the appellant realized at the time what he was doing and that he was doing wrong. When Kala Mian went to seize him the appellant threatened to stab him. Again Kader Bux (P. W. 4) says the appellant struggled to escape when seized and this seems to be corroborated by the fact that he received slight injuries which the doctor says might have been caused by a struggle. When questioned few hours later by the Magistrate and told that any statement he made would be used in evidence he said that, if his statements were to be used against him, he would not make a statement. His purchase of the knife of this unusual description and bringing it with him probably indicates premeditation and, in any case, since he must have opened it (and its hinge is quite stiff) before stabbing Mr. Davies there was at least some deliberation. Finally his statements show that he remembers clearly the circumstances in which he stabbed Mr. Davies and, altogether, the facts are clearly incompatible with the theory that he did not know the nature of the act. The Civil Surgeon who had the appellant under observation from 4th May up to the time of his trial gave his opinion that he was of unsound mind during that period. He added however:

"As far as I can judge his cognitive faculties are all right. His knowing and perceiving are correct, but his power of conceiving must be to some extent 'biased' if his delusions are genuine . . . . there is that in his behaviour and in his physical condition which suggest that his nervous system is unbalanced."

As to his mental condition subsequent to the occurrence we have also the appellant's post card (Ex. 6) written in the jail two days after the occurrence. Apart from bad English this does not necessarily indicate an unsound mind and a post card (Ex. 5) written two days later is quite sensible and shows that, whatever delusions he suffered from, he quite realized his position. The same applies to another post card (Ex. 3) written a fortnight later.

Taking all the circumstances leading up to and connected with the occurrence into account, there can, to my mind, be no doubt that the appellant has failed to show, at the time he fatally stabbed Mr. Davies, he was, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. He cannot therefore claim exemption from criminal liability under S. 84, I. P. C. The weapon employed, an unusually large and heavy clasp knife, pointed like a dagger, the force used, which was sufficient to cut through a rib, the accuracy with which the blow penetrated the heart and the second blow all show that the appellant must have deliberately intended to kill Mr. Davies; he has therefore been rightly convicted of murder. There remains the question of sentence. On the evidence there can be no doubt that the learned Judge is correct in his opinion that the appellant was of unsound mind at the time of committing the offence. The six jurors who were of opinion that he was not of unsound mind must have thought that he was feigning insanity, but the apparent absence of motive and many other circumstances indicate that this cannot have been the case. The learned Judge seems to have thought that he was bound by this finding of the jury to pass a capital sentence. This is not so, and though the appellant is guilty of an atrocious and dastardly murder, in view of the evidence as to his mental condition at the time, and particularly the evidence of the Civil Surgeon, I think that this is a case in which a sentence of transportation for life will meet the ends of justice.

The appeal is dismissed except that the sentence of death on the appellant is commuted to a sentence of transportation for life.

B. B. Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of a final decree made by the Subordinate Judge in a suit on a mortgage. The appeal is by the defendant. The mortgage suit was settled between the parties by a compromise and what is said to be the preliminary decree was passed on 26th May 1916. In that decree it was provided amongst other things that the appellant should pay the decretal amount to the extent of Rs. 12,500 within 15 days of the decree and the remainder Rs. 11,500 in certain instalments spreading over several years. The last instalment was said to be payable on 30th Baisakh 1333 B. S. There was a further stipulation that in default of payment of two instalments the whole amount of the balance then remaining due would at once be recoverable. It was stipulated that the mortgage lien would remain intact and the plaintiffs would be entitled to execute the decree by obtaining a final decree with reference to their dues still remaining unpaid. One of the persons named Kali Prosanna Seal who was entitled to the decretal money died on 15th February 1922. The instalments were paid up upto 1329. Default was made of the instalment payable in 1330. Thereupon the plaintiffs made an application for the final decree according to the terms of the compromise. The objection on behalf of the defendant was that the suit had abated and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to a final decree as prayed for. An application was made for substitution of the legal representative of the deceased person Kali Prosanna Seal by a petition which was filed on 7th June 1923. The petition was alleged to be a joint petition by Tarak Nath Seal, the legal representative of the deceased Kali Prosanna and of the defendant the appellant before us. In that petition it was stated that the amount of Rs. 1700 payable for the Baisakh kist of 1329 was received by Tarak Nath Seal and the prayer was that Tarak Nath Seal might be substituted in the place of his father and the payment of Rs. 1700 recorded. The plaintiffs admitted that payment and, therefore, their contention before the Subordinate Judge was that although there was no order substituting the representative of the deceased plaintiff on the record made by the Court, as a matter of fact, by consent of parties he was substituted. There was also an objection raised by the defendant that the application was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plea of limitation. He, however, held that there was abatement of the suit so far as the share of Kali Prosanna Seal was concerned. In that view he made a final decree for half of the amount due under the compromise to which sum the surviving plaintiffs were entitled according to his view, and he also held that a half of the properties would be liable under the final decree.

Defendant 1 has appealed from that judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and the plaintiffs have preferred a cross-objection against that part of the decree which is against them. On behalf of the defendant it is urged that the mortgage decree is one and indivisible and if the suit fails so far as one of the mortgagees is concerned the whole suit abates. The decree made by the Subordinate Judge therefore cannot be maintained. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the whole question that was discussed by the Subordinate Judge was irrelevant. The fact was that the suit was brought by a firm. The compromise decree was with the firm and, therefore, under O. 30, R. 4, Civil P. C., if one of the persons who was a member of the Firm died during the pendency of the suit it would not be necessary to join the legal representative of the deceased as a party to the suit; and therefore assuming that the suit was a pending suit after the compromise decree there is no question of abatement on account of the death of Kali Prosanna Seal. It is further contended that it is not a case in which the decree was made under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C. It was a compromise decree in which according to the agreement between the parties the decretal amount was made payable by instalments spreading over a large number of years. Although there was a stipulation that on failure of payment of two instalments the decreeholders would be entitled to apply for a final decree being made, that application could not be an application under O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C. The compromise between the parties took the case quite out of the provisions of O. 34, Civil P. C.

And therefore the plea that the suit abated on the death of one of the partners of the firm cannot be maintained. This argument of the respondents covers both the appeal as well the cross-objection preferred by them. It was further urged that the Subordinate Judge had on insufficient grounds rejected the contention of the plaintiffs that the application for substitution of the legal representative of Kali Prosanna Seal was jointly made by Tarak Nath Seal, the representative as well as the defendant.

The last point is quite a short one and may be disposed of in a few words. It appears that the vakalatnama which bears the signature of defendant 1 was tendered to a pleader named Panchanan Mukerji by a gomasta of Utankalal Mukerji, the defendant. On the margin of the vakalatnama it is written that "this vakalatnama is presented through me on behalf of the defendants. Finis 6th June 1923."

The signature is of Madhob Chandra Sinha, gomasta. The endorsement on the vakalatnama is :

"Received from Madhob Chandra Sinha, agent for the executant and I am satisfied that he has authority to deliver this vakalatnama to me and accepted. (Sd.) Panchanan Mukerji, pleader."

The petition was filed on the strength of this vakalatnama. The Subordinate Judge observes with reference to this matter as follows:

"The pleader's endorsement on the vakalatnama shows that he received it from a servant of the defendant but he does not mention any written authority of the servant in this behalf. So this application cannot be taken as a consent of the defendant to the substitution of Tarak or to the setting aside of the abatement. Moreover, this application was dismissed by the Court as the applicants did not comply with the Court's order for payment of process fees for service of notice on the parties."

With regard to this matter it seems to me that the Subordinate Judge held that the application could not be taken as made with the consent of the defendant on very insufficient grounds. Defendant 1 of course says that he did not authorize his gomasta to present the vakalatnama. The mere fact that the pleader does not mention that there was written authority does not go against the authority given to him by the vakalatnama. It was the duty of the pleader to satisfy himself as to the authority of the person who presented the vakalatnama and he stated that he was satisfied that the gomasta had authority to deliver the vakalatnama to him. The pleader has not been examined by the defendant nor has the gomasta been examined. Under such circumstances it cannot be supposed that this vakalatnama and the petition were filed without the authority of defendant 1. Moreover in the petition, receipt of Rs. 1700 from defendant 1 is admitted which is adopted by the other plaintiffs as having been received by them. It can hardly be supposed that the admission was made by the legal representative of Kali Prosanna Seal of having received Rs. 1,700 without the knowledge or consent of the defendant or his agent. Then with regard to the fact about the dismissal of the petition there was no other person on whom it was necessary to serve notice for the substitution. Defendant 1 was the only defendant who was liable under the decree and the other persons concerned were the plaintiffs. So it is difficult to understand what procedure was followed by the Subordinate Judge in dismissing such an application as that.

The most important point, however, in the case is the first point raised on behalf of the respondents. The point as I have already stated was by the proprietors of the firm under the name and style of late Nitai Charan Seal and Kali Prosanna Seal situated at 41, Moirahatta Street, Calcutta. After that the names of the proprietors are given. Under O. 30, R. 4, Civil P. C. to which reference has already been made, where two or more persons sue in the name of a firm, if any of such persons dies, whether before the institution or during the pendency of any suit, it shall not be necessary to join the legal representatives of the deceased as a party to the suit. Now assuming that the suit was pending after the compromise decree as if it was a continuing suit under O. 34, Civil P. C. Under this rule it is not necessary to join the legal representative of the deceased Kali Prosanna Seal as a party in order to have a final decree made. It is argued on behalf of the appellant by reference to R. 2, sub-R. (3) of O. 30, that where the names of the partners are declared the provisions of O. 22 cannot be said to be inapplicable. Reference is made to the concluding words of the sub-rule which run thus :

"The suit shall proceed in the same manner and the same consequence in all respects shall ollow as if they had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint."

But there is a proviso which follows the sub-rule which says :

"Provided that all the proceedings shall nevertheless continue in the name of the firm."

This sub-rule in no way contradicts the provisions of R. 4 where the words are :

"Where two or more persons may sue in the name of a firm."

In this case two or more persons have sued in the name of the firm. There is nothing therefore which prevents the operation of R. 4, and in that view it was not at all necessary that there should be any substitution of the legal representative of the deceased Kali Prosanna Seal in order to entitle the plaintiffs to obtain a final decree. Reference has been made by the respondents to the case of Bal Kissan Das Daga v. Knahya Lal (1), which is quite in accordance with the provisions of this rule.

The next point urged is that the compromise decree is not a preliminary decree under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C. and therefore after the compromise decree the suit could not be considered as a pending suit. It has been settled in this Court by a long series of cases that a compromise decree in a mortgage suit in which the decretal amount is payable by instalments according to the agreement between the parties is not a preliminary decree as contemplated by R. 4, O. 34. The earliest case that may be referred to on that point is the case of Abir Pramanik v. Jahar Mohammed (2), and the latest case is that of Hemendra Lal v. Fakir Chandra (3). This principle has also been laid down in the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court in Askari Hasan v. Jahan-giri Mal (4). In that view it may very well be said that the compromise decree put an end to the suit. Although under the terms of the compromise the decree-holder was bound to make an application for a final decree, that application would not be an application falling strictly under O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C. As there was no suit pending in the Court there was no reason for applying for substitution of the heirs of the deceased person Kali Prosanna Seal. But it would be sufficient if the application was made by the persons entitled to do so under the decree at the time when the application was made, if the application was made within the period of limitation. The appellant relied upon the case of Kashi Chandra v. Priya Nath Bakshi (5) in support of his contention that it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to have the final decree made in terms of the compromise. But in that case it has been clearly laid down that the obligation to have a final decree was based upon the terms of the compromise and it was not an application under O. 34, R. 5. This contention of the respondents also seems to me to be quite substantial and in my judgment it is right. In this view it is not necessary for me to consider in this case whether a suit in which a preliminary decree has been passed abates if one of the parties dies and no substitution is made within the period of limitation under O. 22, Civil P. C. The only observation that I think it necessary to make is that this point requires consideration in a proper case, as it would be very inconvenient if after the preliminary decree all persons who are parties to the suit are required to be on the alert to see whether any of the decree-holders or judgment-debtors under the preliminary decree dies before the application for the final decree is made.

In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed with costs and the cross-objection allowed with costs. The hearing fee for the appeal as well as the cross-objection is fixed at 500 Rupees altogether.

There was nothing in their statements to show that the bombs and pistols were to be used for any innocent purpose.

Held: that even if G knew nothing about the possession of these things by S before they were made over to him, it is quite clear that from the moment that these things were made over by S to G, there was an agreement between these two persons to keep the bombs, pistol and gun cotton and to keep them for the purposes described in sub-S. 4 (b), Explosive Substances Act, namely, with intent either themselves to endanger or to enable other persons by means of them to endanger life. The charge under S. 120-B had therefore been clearly brought home to both the persons. [P 17 C 1]

Cuming, J.—These are the appeals of of two persons Gour Chandra Das and Satish Chandra Dang. The two appellants were tried by a Special Tribunal appointed under Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925 on charges under S. 120-B, I. P. C. of conspiring to commit offences punishable under S. 4-B and S. 5, Explosive Substances Act and also under S. 19-F, Indian Arms Act and also on substantive charges under the same sections and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment on these charges.

The facts of the case are briefly these: the police in consequence of certain information received searched the house of Gour Chandra Das at 191, Babudanga Road on the early morning on 27th August when certain articles which the prosecution contend were bombs and pistols were discovered. Gour Chandra made a statement as the result of which the house of Satish Chandra Dang at 15, Kaldanga lane was also searched and Satish Chandra Dang was arrested. Satish also made certain statements. The result was that the two persons were put upon their trial as stated above. Gour Chandra pleaded not guilty to a conspiracy to commit offences punishable under S. 4-B, S. 5, Explosive Substances Act and under S. 19-F, Arms Act, and pleaded guilty to the other charges. Satish pleaded not guilty to all the charges.

The main evidence which may be considered as practically the whole evidence in the case is the statements of the two accused persons and also the finding of the articles in Gour Chandra's house.

The first point that has been taken is that the trial was bad for misjoinder, at any rate so far as regards the substantive charge of being in possession of explosive articles and being in possession of the pistol. The case on this point is that Satis was in possession of the articles in his own house during April while Gour Chandra was in possession of the same articles at a different place and at a different time. Hence the offences were separate and could not be tried together. The short answer to this contention is that it would appear on a consideration of the whole case that the prosecution case was that the possession of these articles at different places at different times by different persons formed part of the same transaction.

The next point that has been urged on behalf of Satish is that the charge as to the possession of bombs in both cases viz., the case against himself and also Gour Chandra related to the same bombs and that Satish understood that he was charged with being in possession of the bombs and pistol which were found in possession of Gour. It has been contended that there is nothing to show and that the prosecution have failed to prove that the bomb or bombs kept by Satish were the same bombs as were found with Gour. It has been contended on behalf of Satish that he was not charged with being in possession of bombs generally but of those specific bombs. I think it is quite clear, if I understand the Crown rightly, and it was not seriously contended that it was not the case of the Crown in the trial Court that Satish had been in possession of the identically same bombs that were found in the possession of Gour. This, I think, is quite clear from the fact that Satish was charged with being in possession of 11 bombs. Now it was the case for the Crown that 11 bombs were found in possession of Gour Chandra. Satish himself in his statement merely states that he was in possession of bomb without giving any number. It is then argued that the only evidence to show that they were the same bombs is the confession of Gour who stated that he had received the bombs found in his possession from Satish. The question then remains as to whether the confession of Gour can be used against Satish so far as the charges of being in possession of bombs and pistol are concerned. So far as the charges against Satish of being in possession of bombs and pistol are concerned Satish was no doubt being tried jointly with Gour Chandra on other charges. But Gour was not being tried on a charge of being in possession of explosives and arms at Kaldanga lane between April and May. Only Satish was being tried on those particular charges. So far therefore as the charges against Satish under heads 2, 3 and 4 are concerned Gour and Satish were not being tried jointly for the same offence. The expression "same offence" in S. 30, Evidence Act means, in my opinion, the identical offence and does not mean an offence of the same kind. If the legislature had intended the section to cover different offences in the same transaction by different persons it would have said so. The illustration to S. 30 which was added in 1891 makes the meaning of the section quite clear in my mind. The charges under headings 2, 3 and 4 related to the articles found in the house of Gour. There is no evidence to show that they were in the possession of Satish if the confession of Gour is excluded. Satish therefore must be acquitted on charges 2, 3 and 4.

It has further been urged that Gour's confession is not a confession but only a self-exculpatory statement and so not admissible and cannot be taken into consideration as against Satish. It is, I think, sufficient to read the statement of Gour to dispose of this objection. It is quite clear from a perusal of Gour's statement that he implicates himself equally with Satish.

It has next been argued that Gour retracted his confession and, therefore, it cannot be taken into consideration against his co-accused Satish. I am not aware that the Evidence Act makes any distinction whatever between a retracted or unretracted confession. Both are equally admissible and may be taken into consideration against the accused though it may be that less weight would be attached to a retracted confession. This, however, is not a question of admissibility but a question of weight to be attached to the confession which will depend to a great extent on the confession itself and the intrinsic evidence which may or may not be found in the confession showing that it was genuine.

Then it has been argued that Gour pleaded guilty to charges 2, 3 and 4 and so far as they were concerned he was no longer being tried jointly with the accused Satish. No doubt it is correct to say that Gour was not being tried jointly with Satish on those three charges. The point is not, however, of any importance, because I have already held so far as regards charges 2, 3 and 4 against Satish, the confession was inadmissible and Satish has been acquitted on these charges. But Gour pleaded not guilty to the charges of conspiracy to commit offences under S. 4-B and S. 5, Explosive Substances Act, and S. 19-F, Arms Act, and on this charge he was being tried jointly with Satish. As it was the same offence the confession of Satish was admissible against Gour and that of Gour against Satish and could be taken into consideration so far as this charge is concerned.

I now have to consider whether the charge of conspiracy to commit the offences has been proved against the appellants. The evidence against these two appellants is their two confessions and the finding of an article in Gour's house. I see no reason to think that these confessions were not genuine and voluntary looking at the circumstances and the confessions themselves. There is internal evidence in the confession of Satish as has been pointed out by the learned Commissioners to show that it was his own untutored statement. It is suggested that it was a tutored confession put into his mouth by the police. In his confession we find these statements "I did not do the moulding" and "I do not know the work of moulding." As the learned Commissioners have pointed out, had this confession been a tutored one it is unlikely that we should find those two statements in it. After a careful consideration of the evidence I am of opinion that the confessions of both these appellants are genuine and voluntary.

The question that now remains is whether these two confessions and the finding of bombs and pistols in the house of Gour are sufficient to establish that there was a conspiracy between these two persons. As has been pointed out in numerous cases direct evidence of conspiracy will seldom be forthcoming and it is necessary to look at the circumstances to see whether the conspiracy actually existed. Satish on his own statement kept the bomb, pistol and cotton wool for some three months in his possession and then for fear of the police made them over to Gour. If he was not keeping the bomb and pistol for some unlawful purpose where was the fear of the police. Then it will be found he made these things over to Gour. Surely Gour must have asked why he was making over these things to him. That is a fact that requires some explanation. Neither Gour nor Satish would seem to suggest in either of their statements that the bombs and pistols were to be used for any innocent purpose. Nor has it been suggested to us that the bombs could be used for any innocent purpose. Even if Gour knew nothing about the possession of these things by Satish before they were made over to him I think it is quite clear that from the moment that these things were made over by Satish to Gour there was an agreement between these two persons to keep the bombs, pistol and gun cotton and to keep them for the purposes described in sub-S. 4 (b), Explosive Substances Act, namely, with intent either themselves to endanger or to enable other persons by means of them to endanger life. I am therefore of opinion that the charge under S. 120-B, I. P. C. has been clearly brought home to both the appellants.

With regard to charges 2, 3 and 4 against Gour he pleaded guilty and it has not been shown that he did not understand what he was doing. Gour is a person of education and not merely an ignorant or illiterate person. So far as Satish is concerned he is acquitted on charges 2, 3 and 4. But his conviction and also that of Gour under S. 120-B, I. P. C. and the sentence passed against both the appellants under that section must stand.

We have been addressed on the question of sentence. The sentence, no doubt, is a heavy one, possibly these young men were dupes of some other persons who have kept themselves in the back ground. But the offence is a most serious one and in view of the extremely serious nature of the offence we are not prepared to interfere with the sentence.

With the modification stated above in Appeal No. 823 both the appeals are dismissed.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree generally with the conclusion to which my learned brother has come. I should have thought that a charge of being in possession of 11 bombs on a particular date would have been sufficiently proved if evidence were given of less than 11 bombs being in the possession of the accused irrespective of the course which the prosecution took. I do not, however, think it necessary to disagree upon this point.

ability of S. 151—Acceptance of application for review is not without jurisdiction.

A suit in forma pauperis was dismissed for default. The plaintiff applied under S. 151 to restore the case. The application was dismissed, the Judge holding that S. 151 was inapplicable. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court for revision of this order. The High Court refused to interfere with order of the lower Court. The plaintiff ultimately applied to the lower Court for review of the order under O. 47, R. 1.

Held : that the refusal to revise the order of the lower Court did not imply approval of the view of that Court as to the inapplicability of S. 151 to the case, and that the mere fact that the plaintiff was unsuccessful in revision does not prevent him from applying for review and an acceptance of such application by the Court is not without jurisdiction. Judgment. — This rule is directed against an order passed by Mr. B. K. Pal, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, on 22nd September 1927. The facts which led up to the passing of the said order, shortly stated, are these : The petitioner in this rule was the defendant in a suit which had been instituted by the opposite party in forma pauperis some time ago. That suit was dismissed for default on 19th May 1926 as neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant appeared. On the same day, an application was made by the plaintiff, the opposite party in this rule under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. On 14th

August 1926 when this application was taken up for hearing, neither the plaintiffs nor their pleader happened to be present in Court and it was dismissed for default at about 12-35 p. m. On the same day, the plaintiffs opposite party filed another application for the restoration of the application under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., that had been dismissed for default as aforesaid and it is this last-mentioned application which has given rise to the proceedings and the order against which this rule is directed. This application was filed as an application under O. 9, R. 9 and also under S. 151, Civil P. C. So far as O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., is concerned, it is obvious that it had no application to the case and the learned Subordinate Judge Mr. A. C. Banerji holding that O. 9, R. 9, had no application whatsoever to the case and expressing the opinion that S. 151 was also inapplicable dismissed the said petition by his order dated 2nd October 1926. On that, we are told, this Court was moved in revision under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C., and it ultimately declined to interfere in revision with the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 2nd October 1925.

On 17th December 1926, a further application was made in the Court below by the plaintiffs opposite party headed as one under O. 47, R. 1 and S. 151, Civil P. C. It was entertained by Mr. A. C. Banerji who had passed the order of 2nd October 1926, and the said learned Judge ordered the issue of notices of the said application upon the present petitioner. This application was ultimately heard by Mr. B. K. Pal and disposed of by him on 22nd September 1927, and it is against this order of Mr. B. K. Pal dated 22nd September 1927, that the present rule is directed. The rule is to show cause why this order should not be set aside as having been passed without jurisdiction. In order to make out that the order was passed without jurisdiction, reference has, in the first place, been made to the fact that an application for revision of the order passed by Mr. A. C. Banerji on 2nd October 1926, was made to this Court and was unsuccessful, the petitioner's contention being that the refusal on the part of this Court to interfere with the said order should be taken as implying an approval of the view of S. 151, Civil P. C., which was expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge in that order. We are unable to agree in this contention of the petitioner. There may have been very good reasons why this Court did not feel it necessary to interfere under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C., and, simply because the opposite party was unsuccessful in having the order revised by this Court, there was nothing to prevent them from applying under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., to the lower Court for review of its own order.

It has next been contended on behalf of the petitioner that the order which Mr. B. K. Pal has passed was passed without jurisdiction, inasmuch as O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., does not apply to a case of this nature. What is said is that the view which Mr. A. C. Banerji took of the provisions of S. 151 of the Code may have been an erroneous view and yet it cannot be said that there was in Mr. A. C. Banerji's order an error apparent on the face of the record which would justify his successor Mr. B. K. Pal to review the said order. Now, so far as this argument is concerned, two questions would arise for consideration. First of all, whether or not the view which Mr. A. C. Banerji took of the scope of S. 151, Civil P. C., was correct and secondly, whether, if that view was erroneous, it can be said that it was an error apparent on the face of the record within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. In order to show that the view taken by Mr. A. C. Banerji was in point of fact, correct, reference has been made on behalf of the petitioner to the case of Shib Prakash v. Jhinguria (1). That case, however, is clearly distinguishable because there the party who had made the application under S. 151, Civil P. C., had neglected to avail himself of another remedy which was available to him under the Code and, after the time during which such remedy could be pursued had elapsed, made the application under S. 151. In that case, it was held by the learned Judge that, although it was frequently desirable to apply the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C., to a case in respect of which the Civil Procedure Code is silent, the following qualification should always be applied to cases of this nature, namely, that where the applicant's laxity resulted in a neglect on his part to avail of the provisions of the Code itself, the applicant could not get the benefit of S. 151 of the Code. The facts of that case are entirely distinguishable from the facts of the case before us. On the other hand, as regards the true scope of S. 151, Civil P. C., reference may be made to one of the recent decisions of this Court, namely, the decision in the case of Sarat Krishna v. Bisseswar Mitra (2). In that case, it has been said that in order to meet cases in respect of which there is no provision in the Code expressly providing for a remedy and none which prohibits a remedy being administered and such remedy is called for in order to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which the Courts exist, the provisions of S. 151 may and should be resorted to. In support of the proposition enunciated as aforesaid, several other decisions have been referred to in that case and these decisions amply support the said proposition. In our opinion, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge Mr. A. C. Banerji took a wrong view of S. 151, Civil P. C., and, acting upon that erroneous view, he refused to exercise a jurisdiction which the law vested in him and which he might have exercised if a proper case had been made out calling for action under that section.

Turning now to the other question which arises, namely, whether this error which appears in the order of the learned Subordinate Judge Mr. A. C. Banerji was or was not an error apparent on the face of the record, in view of the fact that the learned Judge declined to deal with the merits of the case upon an erroneous view of S. 151--and it so appears from the order itself which the learned Judge passed—it is clear to our minds that it cannot be gainsaid that it was an error apparent on the face of the record. In any case, even if it be assumed that the Subordinate Judge was mistaken in his interpretation of the expression "order apparent on the face of the record," that will hardly be a legitimate ground for our disturbing the order that he has passed, especially in view of the circumstances under which the application of 14th August 1926 was dealt with and dismissed in the absence of the opposite party. The only effect of our not interfering in this rule will be to enable the Court to consider the application of 19th May 1926 and see if the dismissal of the suit for default on that date should be set aside or not.

(2) A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 534=54 Cal. 405.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the order against which this rule is directed is not one which can be said to have been passed without jurisdiction and, in this view of the matter, we decline to interfere with the said order. The rule is accordingly discharged; but in the circumstances of the case, we make no order as to costs.

Appeal No. 32 of 1926, Decided on 22nd December 1927 from a decree of President, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, D/- 17th November 1925.

(a) Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), S. 23 as amended by Calcutta Improvement Act (5 of 1911), Sch. S. 9—An owner is not entitled to compensation for having been prevented from taking active steps in order to make an income out of the property.

Under the provisions of sub-S. (3), S. 23, Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Calcutta Improvement Act, Cl. (b), the owner is not entitled to compensation for having been prevented from taking active steps in order to make an income out of the property. [P 20 C 2]

Where the owner claimed that he was entitled to compensation for being obliged to keep the land vacant after the scheme had been sanctioned as he could not erect any structures for the building of which he had pulled down the old structure.

Held: that he was not entitled to any compensation. [P 20 C 2]

(b) Land Acquisition Act (amended by Calcutta Act 5 of 1911), S. 23 (3) (b)—Owner includes the owner of a leasehold right.

The lessee is certainly the owner of the leasehold interest in the property and he is the "owner" within S. 23 (3) (b). [P 21 C 1]

B. C. Mitter, Probodh Krishna Shome and Kusi Prasun Chatterjee—for Appellant.

Langford James and Surendra Nath Guha—for Respondent.

B. B. Ghose, J.—The appeal is by claimant 2 arising out of the acquisition which has been dealt with in the judgment immediately delivered in Swarananjuri Dasi v. Secretary of State (1). If it had been a question of apportionment between the parties, we should ordinarily have remanded this case also for consideration by the President. But having regard to the agreement between the parties in the lease of 1st March 1920 no question of apportionment arises, as claimant 1 would get the whole amount of compensation which has been awarded on account of the acquisition of the land. This case may, therefore, be decided on its own merits.

The contention raised on behalf of this appellant is that he is entitled to an excess amount of money as compensation under the provisions of sub-S. (3), S. 23, Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Calcutta Improvement Act. Cl. (b), which is specially referred to in the course of the argument runs thus:

"If it be shown that, before such declaration was published, the owner of the land had taken active steps and incurred expenditure to secure a more profitable disposition of the same, further compensation based on his actual loss may be paid to him."

It is pointed out that in awarding the compensation for his actual loss the Collector has only given the appellant the value of the structure and damages for preparing the plan of the site. He claims that he is entitled to compensation for being obliged to keep the land vacant after the scheme had been sanctioned as he could not erect any structures for the building of which he had pulled down the old structure. Now this clause as I read it is a rider to Cl. (a) which runs thus:

"The market-value of the land shall be deemed to be the market-value according to the disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under S. 6."

and under Cl. (b) further compensation based on his actual loss which is payable to the owner must be on account of his having taken some active steps and incurred expenditure to secure a more profitable disposition of his property. In this case the argument amounts to this that the claimant is entitled to compensation for having been prevented from taking active steps in order to make an income out of the property. I do not think that this falls within the provisions of this clause. It may be a grievance that the claimant, although he had demolished the old structure, was unable to build a new one on account of the sanction of the scheme and thus had to incur loss. But it seems to me that the legislature has not provided for any compensation on that ground.

I must, however, observe while rejecting the contention of the appellant that the opinion of the learned President that the lessee should not be considered to be an owner under this clause cannot be supported. He is certainly the owner of the lease-hold interest in the property and I fail to understand why the learned President had dealt with this person as if he was not the owner. The learned Government Pleader does not support the learned President's view of the meaning of the term, but he explains to me the reason why the learned President has made such a distinction by referring us to S. 23 of the Act where the expressions "owner" and "person interested" are used for the purpose of determining the compensation payable to different persons and probably the learned President was pressed with that distinction in his mind. It seems to me, however, that if the lessee suffers loss as provided in that clause that should be taken into consideration in determining the market-value of the land and compensation awarded with reference to it. To hold otherwise would amount to this that if a lessee erects a building even at a very great cost no compensation would be allowed for such buildings. That would lead to a very undesirable result. The appeal, however, should be dismissed with costs for the reason already stated.

statement showing cause against the aforesaid order and alleging that there had been litigation between the parties and ultimately a passage five feet wide had been left for the public. The Magistrate, who succeeded the previous Magistrate, on perusing the statements of the parties, but without taking any evidence, cancelled the order under S. 133, Criminal P. C.

Held: that the Magistrate had not followed the provisions of Part 4, Ch. 10 and that the order could not, therefore, be allowed to stand.

Mritunjoy Chatterji and Bholanath Roy—for Petitioner.

Santosh Kumar Pal, Sachindranath Banerji, Sudhansu Kumar Bose, Hiran Kumar Roy and Sukumar Hazra—for Opposite Party.

Facts.—A petitioner applied in the Criminal Court at Howrah, alleging that a public pathway, which was the only exit from the garden house of the petitioner's master, had been encroached upon and obstructed and praying for an order under S. 133, Criminal P. C., directing the persons causing the obstruction to remove the same. The Magistrate thereupon called for a police report. The police submitted a report stating that the disputed pathway was "a public pathway used by the people of the locality" and that the same had been obstructed by the opposite party. Thereupon the Magistrate made a conditional order requiring the opposite parties to remove the obstruction by a certain date or to appear before him on the said date, and to show cause against the order. On the appointed date, the opposite parties filed a written statement showing cause against the aforesaid order and alleging that there had been litigation between the parties and ultimately a passage five feet wide had been left for the public. The succeeding Magistrate, on perusing the statements of the parties, but without taking any evidence, cancelled the order under S. 133, Criminal P. C.

Judgment.—In these cases we are satisfied on an examination of the record that the Magistrate has not followed the provisions of Part 4, Ch. 10, Criminal P. C. The order complained of cannot, therefore, be allowed to stand and they are accordingly set aside. The matters will go back for a proper enquiry in accordance with law. The rules are accordingly made absolute.

Appeal No. 486 of 1925, Decided on 17th January 1928, from appellate decree of District Judge, Burdwan, D/- 24th November 1924.

* (a) Landlord and Tenant—Mere payment of rent to a third person is not sufficient to terminate tenancy—Party alleging discontinuance of tenancy must prove it.

Mere payment of rent to a third party claiming paramount title is not enough to determine the original tenancy and discontinuance of the tenancy must be satisfactorily proved by the party who alleges that he took the lease from the paramount title-holder, without reference to the lessor and without giving the lessor to understand that he would thenceforward hold not under the lessor but under the paramount title : 3 C. L. R. 576, Ref.

[P 24 C 1 ; 2]

* (b) Landlord and Tenant—Attornment means act of putting one person in place of another under English law.

An attornment to a third party is a disclaimer. But "attornment" in the sense in which the word is used and understood in English law is not a mere agreement in favour of a third party to pay rent, but has been defined as "the act of the tenants" putting one person in the place of another as his landlord : Per Holroyd, J., Cornish v. Searell, 8 B. & C. 471, Ref.

(c) Evidence Act, S. 116—Estoppel operates as to beginning of tenancy—Plea of non-liability of rent does not amount to disputing landlord's title but amounts only to confession and avoidance and can be taken.

Estoppel would operate only as regards the denial in so far as it relates to the beginning of the tenancy and not to any other point of time. Though the tenancy may be continuing, it is quite open to the tenant to plead and show that his liability to pay the rent has wholly or partially or for a time ceased. Such a plea does not amount to disputing the landlord's title but is really one of confession and avoidance, and is available to the tenant : 2 Mad. 226 ; 12 W. R. 109 ; 14 *W. (d) Landlord and Tenant—Rent—Eviction by paramount title is a good defence for non-liability of rent—But there must be eviction from the premises, party evicting must have a good title and tenant must have quitted against his will.

Against the covenant to pay the rent, eviction by title paramount is a good defence and to constitute it three conditions must be fulfilled. The eviction must have been from something actually forming part of the premises demised ; the party evicting must have a good title and the tenant must have quitted against his will.

It is not necessary that the tenant should go out of possession, and if upon a claim being made by a person with title paramount he consents to an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking : *A. Braja Lal Chakravarti, Sures Chandra Das, Surjya Kumar Aich and Jyotish Chandra Paul—for Respondents.

Mukerji, J.—The facts, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of the present appeal, are these :

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was for recovery of minimum royalty (from kist Bhadra 1319 B. S. to kist 15th Joistha 1325 B. S.) and coal rent (from Aswin 1319 to Aswin 1324) for some coal lands which the defendants are alleged to be holding under the plaintiff under a darpatni lease. The lease is dated Falgun 1314 (= February 1908) being in respect of the three annas four pies share of touzi No. 12 lot Churulia, to the extent of which share the plaintiff had then the interest of a patnidar in the said lot under the zemindar, the Burdwan Raj, and is one for a period of 999 years. The defendants were at the date of the lease the patnidars in respect of the remaining share in the lot. They subsequently purchased at an auction two-thirds of the plaintiff's patni interest. The suit accordingly was for the amount due to the remaining one-third of the three annas four pies share which still belongs to the plaintiff.

Of the defences that were taken all that is relevant at the present stage is that the plaintiff is only a patnidar and as such has no title to the underground, that the defendants were evicted by title paramount, namely the Burdwan Raj, who in February 1913 served a notice on the defendants or their sub-lessees informing them that they had no title to the underground and asking them to stop work in the underground and that accordingly the defendants were obliged to take a prospecting lease from the Burdwan Raj on 19th Magh 1323 B. S. (= February 1917).

The suit was instituted on 31st August 1918. Thereafter in October 1919, the defendants, it is said, have taken a regular mining lease of the underground from the Burdwan Raj. It is clear, however, that the incidents of this transaction can have no bearing on the rights of the parties as they were during the period in suit.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit gave the plaintiff a decree substantially for the entire period in suit. Its correctness has not been challenged before us except as regards the view of the defendants' liability on which he proceeded and in respect of which the District Judge has differed from him. On the decree being thus given the defendants appealed to the District Judge. In the appeal the patni kabuliati under which the plaintiff is alleged to be holding under the Burdwan Raj was produced on behalf of the defendant and was proved and marked as Ex. 10, being received as a piece of additional evidence. The plaintiff complained that the question of eviction by title paramount was not put in issue in so many words and so he had no opportunity of meeting the point. On this the District Judge remanded the suit to the trial Court to determine two issues one of which was issue 3 and the other an additional issue on the question of eviction by title paramount.

Issue 3 was worded thus :

"Whether the plaintiff had no title to the underground coal when he created the lease for the same in favour of defendant 1 and his co-sharer? Whether the plaintiff has no title to the underground of the lease-hold? Whether defendant 1 executed the kabuliati under the representation of the plaintiff that he had such right and in honest belief in that representation?"

This issue had been decided by the trial Court in plaintiff's favour, but it was now to be decided again in the light of the document Ex. 10. The additional issue that was framed by the District Judge was in these words :

"Was there eviction of the defendants by title paramount prior to their taking a lease of the underground right from the Maharaja?"

The Subordinate Judge on remand found on the third issue that the patni kabuliati Ex. A was not the original patni kabuliati by which the patni was created but it was merely a confirmatory kabuliati which was executed by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiff by way of getting mutation of their names in the sherista of the Burdwan Raj, that the terms of the original grant not being in evidence it was not possible to ascertain whether the grant included minerals, that merely because the plaintiff was a patnidar it could not be held that he was entitled to the underground, that the defendants themselves being patnidars to the extent of about 15 annas cannot be said to have executed the darpatni kabuliati in plaintiff's favour by reason of any representation on the part of the plaintiff as regards his title to the underground and that they themselves had the belief that the plaintiff had such title. As regards the additional issue the Subordinate Judge held that there was no eviction of the defendants by title paramount, that they never went out of possession or surrendered their tenancy under the plaintiff but that they attorned to the Burdwan Raj only with a view to facilitate their subletting of the lands which was in their contemplation, but the effect of that attornment was not a renunciation of their character as darpatnidars under the plaintiff, though there was a sufficient claim or demand by the Burdwan Raj which was the reason for their adopting this course; in other words by adopting this course, to use a homely phrase, the defendants only added a second string to their bow.

On the findings arriving before the District Judge (who was the successor of the District Judge who had made the order of remand), that learned Judge came to a series of findings which, to my mind, do not seem to be altogether clear or reconcilable with each other except one very definite finding at which he ultimately arrived and which he put down in the following words :

"the legal dispossession by title paramount must be held to have taken place in this case with effect from 19th Magh 1323 B. S., that is, the date of the prospecting lease" (meaning the prospecting lease which the defendants executed in favour of the Burdwan Raj in February 1917). On that finding the learned District Judge modified the decree of the trial Court by limiting it to the period down to 18th Magh 1323 B. S.

From this decree of the District Judge the plaintiff has appealed. The arguments that have been advanced on his behalf give rise to two questions: first, whether the defendants are estopped from pleading that the plaintiff has no title to the underground, and second, whether there has been an eviction such as would disentitle the plaintiff to recover.

The first question must be decided upon the provisions contained in S. 116, Evidence Act. The section as applicable to the case runs thus:

"No tenant of immovable property . . . shall during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenancy had, at the beginning of the tenancy, a title to such immovable property."

The Judicial Committee in the case of Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1), had occasion to consider the provisions of this section and what was said by their Lordships in that case was this:

"Section 116, Evidence Act, is perfectly clear on the point and rests on the principle well established by many English cases, that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be so long as he was not openly restored to possession by surrender to his landlord.

This, however, it may be contended and indeed it has been so contended, is not an exhaustive exposition of the section, as the case in connexion with which these observations were made was one in which a tenant who had received a notice to quit never gave up possession and yet denied his landlord's title. At the same time in the words of the section the estoppel operates only during the continuance of the tenancy. There has not been, it must be conceded, a discontinuance of the tenancy in any of the modes by which a tenancy is ordinarily put an end to. Treating the matter as a matter of fact only, all that was done by the tenants, upon the findings of the Courts below, is that they took a prospecting lease from the Burdwan Raj and this they did, as far as can be made out, without reference to the plaintiff and without giving him to understand that they would thenceforward hold not under him but under the Burdwan Raj. As was pointed out in the case of Parbutti Dassi v. Ram Chand (2), in which the circumstances were somewhat similar, mere payment of rent to a third party is not enough to determine the tenancy and discontinuance of the tenancy in such circumstances must be satisfactorily proved by the party who alleges it. Now

"a tenancy determines either by having run its prescribed course or by act of parties whilst it is running or by act of law. Instances of a determination of the first kind are where lease is made for a certain period and that period expires or where an event happens in itself uncertain (e.g., the death of the lessee or some other person), upon the happening of which the term is expressly limited. A determination of the second kind is brought about by one of the following acts: determination of the will (in tenancies-at-will), disclaimer and notice to quit (in yearly or other periodical tenancies), surrender, merger, and forfeiture (in tenancies generally). A determination of the third kind i.e., by act of law only, results from the operation of the Statute of Limitation." (Foa on Landlord and Tenant 6th Edition, p. 649).

An attornment to a third party is a disclaimer (Ibid p. 653); but "attornment" in the sense in which the word is used and understood in English law is not a mere agreement in favour of a third party to pay rent, but has been defined as "the act of the tenants' putting one person in the place of another as his landlord" [Cornish v. Searell (3), per Holroyd, J.]

In the present case the tenancy of the defendant under the plaintiff has not run its prescribed course, nor has it been determined by any act of the parties or by operation of the statute, and in my judgment that tenancy was continuing at the date of the suit. In connexion with the question of estoppel however, there is another part of the section that has got to be considered, namely, the point of time to which the denial would relate. It is true that the defence was that the plaintiff as patnidar had no title to the underground, and from that point of view the denial of title related to the beginning of the tenancy as well as to any other point of time, but the estoppel would operate only as regards the denial in so far as it relates to the beginning of the tenancy and not to any other point of time. Though the tenancy may be continuing it is quite open to the tenant to plead and show that his liability to pay the rent has wholly or partially or for a time ceased. Such a plea does not amount to disputing the landlord's title but is really one of confession and avoidance. One such plea is that of nonliability to pay the rent on the ground that the lessor's title has been defeated by a title paramount or in other words that there has been eviction by title paramount. In the case of a complete eviction it is not quite easy to see the distinction as the question of continuance of tenancy and the question of eviction by title paramount terminating the liability to pay the rent would go hand in hand. But in the case of a partial eviction demanding not suspension but abatement of rent the distinction is quite apparent. That under such circumstances a plea of this description is available to the tenant has been held in cases both before and after S. 116, Evidence Act came into being (Ammu v. Rama Krishna (4), Gopanund Jha v. Gobind Pershad (5), Burn & Co. v. Rushomoyee Dossee (6) and Mohan Mahtu v. Shamsul Huda (7)).

The second question then comes up for consideration. Against the covenant to pay the rent eviction by title paramount is a good defence. That defence obviously must be established by the party who sets it up. For this proposition of onus no authority is needed.

"Eviction by title paramount means an eviction due to the fact that the lessor had no title to grant the term and the paramount title is the title paramount of the lessor which destroys the effect of the grant and with it the corresponding liability for payment of rent; so that mere eviction from or deprivation of the use and enjoyment of the demised premises or part of them, whether such eviction be lawful or unlawful, is insufficient where the lessor's title is not affected or called in question. To constitute a good defence in this case three conditions must be fulfilled. The eviction must have been from something actually forming part of the premises demised; the party evicting must have a good title, and the tenant must have quitted against his will." (ibid p. 194).

Of these elements the first is undoubtedly present and as regards the last its presence on the facts is at the least extremely doubtful; but as regards the second element it is impossible to hold that the defendants have succeeded in making it out. To constitute eviction forcible expulsion is not necessary [Hill v. Saun- ders (8), followed in Nourjani Sardar v. Bimala Sundari Gupta (9)]. It is not necessary that the tenant should go out of possession, and if upon a claim being made by a person with title paramount he consents to an attornment to such person to change the title under which he holds or enters into a new arrangement for holding under him, this will be equivalent to an eviction and a fresh taking, [Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 6th Edition, pp. 194 and 195; Banka Behari v. Madan Mohan (10), Ram Chandra v. Pramatha Nath (11)]. But what the defendants did amounts not to an attornment in favour of, but merely an agreement to pay rent to, the Burdwan Raj, as I have already said.

Moreover as explained by Lord Denman, C. J., in Neale v. Mackenzie (12), title paramount is a title superior to those both of the lessor and the lessee against which neither is enabled to make a defence. This the defendants have failed to prove. The patni kabuliati Ex. 10 is not the original document creating the patni. It is dated 19th December 1818 only a few months prior to the enactment of Regulation 8 of 1819. It describes the status of the plaintiff's predecessors as being that of patnidars and neither adds to nor subtracts from the rights that they or their predecessor-in-interest had as holders of the patni. The preamble to the Regulation gives an idea as to the nature of the patni taluks such as they were understood to mean in those days, but the mere use of the words "patni" and "patnidar" would not enable one to judge the exact incidents of the tenures or the rights of the holders thereof to which or to whom the terms were applied. It is obvious that the terms of the Regulation cannot be called in aid for the purpose of determining the incidents of a pre-regulation patni such as the one in the present case.

In my view it was for the defendants to show affirmatively that the Burdwan Raj and not the patnidar had the right to the underground, and that they have failed to discharge that burden. It has been urged on behalf of the respondents that the fact that the Burdwan Raj is the superior landlord relieves them of the burden they have to discharge, but in this I cannot agree.

In this view of the matter I am of opinion that the effect of the grant made by the plaintiff in favour of the defendants has not been destroyed and that their liability to pay the rent therefor continued.

It is not necessary in the present case to deal with the question whether in the absence of evidence as to the grant itself the plaintiff as patnidar can be held entitled to the underground, a position that has been contended for on behalf of the appellant on the supposed authority of the decision in Rajeswar Prosad Bhakal v. Bhupendra Narayan (13).

The result is that in my judgment the appeal must succeed. I therefore allow the appeal, reverse the decision of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs in this and the lower appellate Court.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 22, R. 3—Some legal representatives applying to be brought on record—The fact that other representatives were existing brought to notice—No proof that the latter were unwilling to join—Suit abates.

During the pendency of a suit, plaintiff died and his two sons made an application for substituting them as legal representatives. The opposite party pointed out that there was a third son of the deceased plaintiff. The two sons did not apply to have him substituted.

Gunada Charan Sen and Subodh Chandra Roy Choudhury—for Appellants.

Basak and Radhikaranjan Guha—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit brought to recover possession of certain property by one Abdul Majid. During the pendency of the suit Abdul Majid died and an application for substitution under O. 22, R. 3, Civil P. C. was made by two of his sons. At or before the hearing the defendant pointed out that Abdul Majid died leaving him surviving a third son Ahamadulla. Notwithstanding this warning the other two sons did not apply to have Ahamadulla substituted as one of the heirs of Abdul Majid, nor did Ahamadulla apply to be made a party to the suit. At the trial an issue was raised as to whether Ahamadulla was one of the legal representatives of Abdul Majid, and the trial Court held that he was not, and, proceeding to hear the suit on the merits, decided the case in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed, and it appears that at the hearing of the appeal an application was made by the appellant to adduce further evidence in support of his contention that Ahamadulla was the son of Abdul Majid. Now, the respondents did not take their stand upon the inadmissibility of such evidence but applied for leave to adduce further evidence to rebut the appellants' contention that Ahamadulla was one of the sons of Abdul Majid. In the circumstances obtaining in this case we do not think that it is open to the appellants now to complain that this additional evidence was given by the appellants. We have considered whether there was evidence before the lower appellate Court upon which the learned District Judge could reasonably have arrived at the conclusion to which he came, namely that Ahamadulla was one of the sons of Abdul Majid. In our opinion, in second appeal, having regard to the evidence upon this issue of fact that was before the learned District Judge, we are unable to disturb the finding at which he arrived.

The learned District Judge dismissed the suit upon the ground that the legal representatives of Abdul Majid not having been duly substituted the suit abated under O. 22, R. 3, Civil P. C. On behalf of the appellants it is urged that O. 22, R. 3 does not apply because an application for substitution was duly made by the "legal representative" of Abdul Majid within O. 22, R. 3. In our opinion, "legal representative" in O. 22, R. 3 means the legal representative or representatives of the deceased plaintiff, or all the representatives of whom the representative applying knew or ought to have known: Ghamandi Lal v. Amir Begum (1), Haider Hussan v. Abdulahad (2). It may well be that if one or more of the legal representatives are unknown or are unwilling to join in the application under O. 22, R. 3, different considerations will arise, and that a bona fide application by all the representatives who are willing to join in making the application will be a sufficient compliance with O. 22, R. 3: Bhikaji v. Purshottam (3), Musala Reddy v. Ramayya (4) and Abdul Rahim v. Shahab-ud-Din (5). But that question does not arise in this case, for there is no evidence that if Ahamadulla had been informed that the application was to be made he would not have been willing to join in it. That contention, therefore, fails.

The learned advocate on behalf of the appellants further urged that, even assuming that that is so, under O. 22, R. 5 the trial Judge erroneously decided the issue as to whether Ahamadulla was the son of Abdul Majid, and, inasmuch as the learned District Judge has found that that erroneous finding did not affect the decision of the case within S. 105, Civil P. C., the failure on the part of Ahamadulla either himself or through his brothers to join in the application under O. 22, R. 3 was not fatal to the proceeding. Now, it has been held that "affecting the decision of the case" within S. 105 means "affecting the decision of the case" on the merits": (Sayma Bibi v. Madhusudan (6) and cases therein cited), and the learned advocate for the appellant contends that inasmuch as this error on behalf of the learned trial Judge did not affect the decision of the case on the merits, the appeal has not abated. The answer to that contention appears to be that any "error defect or irregularity in any order" under S. 105 (1) has been held to mean an error, defect or irregularity in law or procedure and not an incorrect finding of fact: Sankali v. Murlidhar (7) and Balabai v. Ganesh (8). In this case, however, the error which the learned trial Judge made was that he arrived at an erroneous conclusion of fact and, therefore, in our opinion, S. 105 does not apply. This contention also fails. For these reasons, in our opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Where a guardian of a minor is appointed but the minor is in custody of a third person, no direction can be made under S. 12 (1) of the Act. The proper course is to direct the third person to compel the minor to return to the custody of her guardian in obedience to an order under S. 25 (1). In the absence of such an order an order imposing a fine on the third person is not correct. [P 28 C 1]

Judgment.—In this case the appellant was directed to produce a minor in Court. The minor was according to the Judge's judgment a young woman of 20 years of age. Apparently she wanted only a few months to attain her majority. Under such circumstances it seems rather difficult to ask an old lady like the appellant to produce that young woman in Court. It is also doubtful whether the Judge had power to make an order under S. 45 (1), Guardians and Wards Act to direct this third person to produce the minor in Court. No direction was made under S. 12 (1) of the Act, and apparently as a guardian for the person of the minor was appointed no such order was competent. The learned Judge of course, could direct the grand-mother to compel the minor to return to the custody of her guardian in obedience to an order S. 25 (1) of the Act, but the learned Judge refused to make an order under S. 25 (1).

Under these circumstances the order imposing a fine on the maternal grand-mother does not seem to be correct. That order of the learned Judge is, therefore, set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded. Barring that order the observation made by the learned Judge in his judgment cannot be taken exception to in any way.

We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit for a declaration of his tenancy right in the disputed land and for recovery of possession of the same.

The facts of the case lie within a short compass. The defendants who are two in number and their cosharers had an occupancy holding which carried an annual rental of Rs. 10-4-0 under Nityamani Dasya who sued the defendants Erfen Bibi, Asirennessu Bibi, Chandjan Bibi who are her tenants and whose names are alleged to be recorded in the sherista of Nityamani for arrears of rent in respect of the said holding, obtained a decree in that rent suit (No. 1217 of 1919) and executed the same in Rent Execution Case No. 474 of 1922; the plaintiff purchased the holding in execution of the said decree on 12th September 1922; the defendants were living on the disputed land by the erection of huts and in Falgun 1329 the plaintiff called on them to give up possession of the land by removing the huts therefrom but the defendants refused to vacate. Hence this suit.

The defence of defendant 1 substantially is that the decree and the sale referred to in the plaint, are not rent decree and rent sale as all the persons having an interest in the said holding were not parties in the rent suit brought by Nityamani and that consequently only the right, title and interest of those persons, who are parties to the rent suit, passed by the sale.

It is common ground that the disputed holding belonged originally to one Bazari Sheikh, father of the defendants who died leaving behind him the defendants Tomez and Adam and Kadam and Gopal Sheikh, his four sons, and two daughters named Arfemassa and Masirunnessa Bibi as his heirs. It has been found that Garaz Bibi, the widow of Gopal, and the sisters of the present defendants were not impleaded in the Rent Suit No. 1217 of 1919. The Munsiff found that the persons who were defendants in the Rent Suit No. 1217 of 1919 did not represent the entire holding of Rs. 10-4-0 in the books of Nityamani Dasya. The Munsiff found further that none of the two defendants has got any subsisting title to the disputed land. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit declaring his title to 57/80th share in the disputed land and he directed that plaintiff do recover possession of the said undivided share with persons owning the remaining 23/80th share in that land.

An appeal was taken by the plaintiff to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Jessore against the decision of the Munsiff and the learned Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision of the Munsiff subject to this modification that plaintiff will recover possession of 57/80th share in the land in suit jointly with the defendants. The lower appellate Court found that the decree in the rent suit was not a rent decree, that not only the persons mentioned by the Munsiff were not included in the rent suit but also Junmat, the son of Gopal, was not impleaded in that case. The appellate Court found that persons who were parties to the rent suit did not represent the tenancy and the sale was not a rent sale.

The plaintiff has appealed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge to this Court and three grounds have been taken in support of this appeal : (i) that there has not been a proper determination of the question of representation of the tenancy in the rent suit by the persons who were parties to the same; (ii) that as the plaintiff obtained symbolical possession through Court on 3rd February 1923, against the defendant that possession is equivalent to actual possession as against them and the defendants who do not pretend that they have any manner of right to the disputed property after the sale cannot resist eviction; (iii) that as there was no appeal by the defendants to the lower appellate Court, the Subordinate Judge was in error in modifying the decree of the Munsiff by directing joint possession of the plaintiff with the defendants to the extent of their 57/80th share.

With regard to the first ground taken, the argument of the appellant is put in this way. It is true that the question as to whether the persons who are parties to the rent suit of 1919 represented the tenancy or not is in one sense a question of fact, but at every point in the process of reasoning considerations of law have to be regarded, and consequently the finding that there was not a proper representation of the tenancy could not be accepted as final: see Hyder Khan v. Secry of State (1). The following elements which were necessary to be considered in determining the question of representation were not taken into account by the lower appellate Court, (i) the settlement proceeding under Chap. 10, Bengal Tenancy Act, shows that persons against whom the rent suit was instituted were the persons who are recorded as tenants of the holding in the finally published Record-of-Rights; (ii) no step had been taken by the heirs of Bazari Sheikh who were not made parties to the rent suit to set aside the decree of sale; (iii) that no proper weight has been attached to the circumstance that Erphan Bibi and the other sisters of the defendants were not in possession of the disputed holding at the time of the rent sale; (iv) the endorsement on the back of the writ of delivery of possession shows that symbolical possession was delivered to the plaintiff as against the defendants and the Court of appeal below is in error in finding notwithstanding this endorsement that symbolical possession was not delivered; (v) it has not been hinted in the present litigation that the arrears claimed in the rent suit were not due in fact or that the decree was erroneous or otherwise unjust in any particular. It is further said that the question as to whether the tenancy was not adequately represented in the rent suit and that the decree made therein did not operate as a rent decree has not been tested with reference to the considerations of the five matters just referred to. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ganpat v. Bindubashini (2), and on the decision in the case of Sarat Chandra v. Bibhabati (3).

On the other hand it is argued for the respondent that as Exs. 3 and 3-A show that the recorded tenants are the persons against whom the decree was obtained and Ex-B shows that the defendants Julmat and Erfan are the tenants, the landlord knew at some point of time that Julmat, son of Gopal, was interested in the tenancy and that Nityamani knew that there were tenants other than those against whom the rent decree was obtained. It is pointed out that the Record-of-Rights have not been filed in the case. It is also urged that the name of the original tenant Bazari Sheikh appeared in the sherista of Nityamani so that it is not a case where the names of the persons who were parties to the rent suit were recorded as tenants in the sherista of Nityamani so that it could not be said that the suit was brought against the recorded tenants. It is strenuously urged that the questions as to whether the tenancy was adequately represented or not is a question of fact and it is not permissible to me sitting in second appeal to interfere with the said finding.

After giving my most anxious consideration to the case I think the contention of the respondent must prevail. Both the Courts below have concurrently found on evidence before them that the parties to the rent suit did not adequately represent the tenancy and by this finding of fact I am bound in second appeal. It is not said that there was no proper evidence before the lower appellate Court to sustain the finding on this part of the case. I am unable to see how the defendants can be estopped from contending that the decree was not a rent decree or that the sale was not a rent sale. In the case in Sarat Chandra v. Bibhabati (3), the sale was not set aside for a number of years. Ram Narayan and Lakshmi Narayan the two brothers of Tara Prosad were joined as defendants. The interest of Ram Narayan as a cosharer of the tenancy was identical with that of his nephews. The evidence showed that the defendants were aware of the suit, the decree and the execution proceedings. Although many years elapsed since the decree was made and the sale was held, no endeavour had been made to reopen the proceedings. In those circumstances the Court held that there was an adequate representation of the tenancy in the rent suit. The facts of this case are not similar to those of the present. Here the family is a Mahomedan family and it could not be said that the brothers and sisters were members of the same family. The first ground, therefore, taken by the appellant, fails.

In support of the second ground reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sundar v. Parbati (4), and it is argued on the authority of that decision that the plaintiff being a cosharer to the extent of 57/80th share are entitled to evict the defendants who are mere trespassers. An examination of the case before the Judicial Committee will, however, show that in that case the widows were in lawful possession of the property of their deceased husband and it was held that they have an estate or interest therein in respect of their possession notwithstanding that under an adoption or a will by the deceased husband a preferable title thereto might exist. It was said by their Lordships that they (the widows) were entitled to maintain their possession against all new-comers except the only person who can plead a preferable title but as the possible claimants were not in the field each of the widows could divide the joint estate between them. This case is no authority for the proposition that where a plaintiff brings a suit in ejectment he can get a decree for possession of the whole of the lands from which he seeks ejectment although he may be entitled to a lesser share in the said lands. All that the case decides is that a cosharer of joint property can maintain possession of the whole of the joint property as against a trespasser. Reference has also been made to Art. 343 of Freeman on Co-tenancy and partition in which the author states that a cosharer of joint property can recover possession of the whole of the joint property from a trespasser and not merely to the extent of his share therein. But the same learned author points out that there is a respectable body of authority even in America, the opposite way and it is held in some of the States that a cosharer can only recover joint possession even as against the trespasser to the extent of his share in the joint property. The true rule is laid down in the decision in the case of Doe Hellyer v. King (5), where Baron Parke said that a tenant-in-common is entitled to recover possession as against a trespasser only to the extent of his share. This was the view which was adopted by the majority of the Court. Baron Parke said:

"I am, therefore, of opinion, that the lessors of the plaintiff being tenants-in-common with other persons are not entitled to a verdict for the whole of the premises though they might recover less."

Baron Parke and Baron Alderson took a view different from Baron Platt who said:

"Now a tenant-in-common is the owner of the whole estate in common with his co-tenants; therefore as soon as he has proved his right to the possession in common with others and that the defendant having no such right is a wrong-doer as against him, he is, in my opinion, entitled to a general verdict for the purpose of recovering possession of the whole."

The view of Baron Platt is the view contended for by the appellant but as Baron Platt was in the minority the appellant cannot rely on his view as his opinion did not prevail.

In this view I think the second ground taken fails and the lower appellate Court was right in granting a decree to the plaintiffs for joint possession with the defendants to the extent of the plaintiffs' 57/80th share.

I now proceed to deal with the third ground. Although there was no appeal by the defendants it was open to the lower appellate Court to make a decree which would be proper in the circumstances of the case under O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C. The decree of the Munsif directing that plaintiff should have joint possession with the other cosharers who were not parties to the suit does not seem to be in accordance with law. The lower appellate Court has put the decree in the right form. There is no substance in this ground also.

All the grounds fail and the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Probodh Kumar Das—for Appellant.

Narendra Nath Mitra—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was instituted by the plaintiff to recover arrears of rent for the years 1325 to 328. The plaintiff's case was that the defendants held 8 bighas 2 kottas of land under them at an annual rental of 14 aris of paddy. He alleged that rent for the period covered by the suit had not been delivered notwithstanding demands and, therefore, he prayed for recovery of Rs. 360 being the total amount calculated at the rate of Rs. 5 per ari of paddy together with cesses and damages. The defendants contended that the rent of the holding was Rs. 21 and that in any case the plaintiff was not entitled to recover at a rate in excess of the said rate of Rs. 21 as that was the rate mentioned in the Road Cess Return which the plaintiff had filed under the provisions of the Cess Act 9 of 1880. The trial Court decreed the suit at the annual jama of Rs. 21 only together with cesses and damages at the rate of 25 per cent. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has reversed that decision and calculating the price of 14 aris of paddy at the rate of Rs. 2 he has arrived at a certain figure on which he has added the cesses at 6 pies per rupee and damages at 25 per cent and has thus enhanced the decree that was passed by the trial Court. The defendants have then preferred this second appeal.

The contention that has been urged in support of this appeal is that the learned Subordinate Judge has been in error in enhancing the amount of the decree of the trial Court, because the plaintiff is precluded from suing for or recovering at any higher rate than what is mentioned in the cess return. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the annual rent of the holding had not been changed at any time and has pointed out that it was nobody's case that it had undergone any alteration. He has observed further that the prohibition contained in Cl. (b) of S. 20, Cess Act, does not apply, because it is difficult to say that the paddy rent of 14 aris is higher than the money rent of Rs. 21 and although in the present suit the plaintiff's claim was laid at Rs. 70 for 14 aris of paddy per year, still as the price of paddy varies from time to time though the plaintiff would get rent at a higher rate than Rs. 21 in this suit, it does not follow that if in any particular year when the price of paddy goes down the plaintiff would not get a less amount for rent in that year. The appellants contend that the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge is unsustainable in view of the clear prohibition contained in Cl. (b) S. 20, Cess Act.

The section says :

"Every holder of an estate or tenure in respect of which a return has been made as required by this chapter shall be precluded from suing for or recovering rent at any higher rate than is mentioned in such return for any land, holding or tenure included in such return, unless it be proved that the rent of such land or tenure has been lawfully enhanced subsequently to the lodging of such return."

There being no suggestion that there has been any enhancement of rent subsequent to the lodging of the return by the plaintiff in the present case the prohibition contained in S. 20, Cess Act, will unquestionably operate as a bar, if the section itself can at all be held to be applicable to the present case.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is contended that the plain words of S. 20, Cess Act, cover the present case. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is said that the section does not apply and reliance is placed in this behalf on the decisions of the Patna High Court in the cases of Upendra Lal v. Moti Thakur (1) and Ram Gobind v. Thakur Dyal (2). In the former of these two cases Chamier, C. J., said :

"It appears to me to be impracticable to apply S. 20 (b) to such a suit as this. Strictly speaking the plaintiffs are not suing for rent at all but for compensation, and what they entered in their return was not the rent but the annual value of the whole or part of an estate. The rate of rent which they were entitled to recover when they made their return was, and now is, not any sum in cash, but one half of whatever their share may be of the produce of holding. The reference in the latter part of Cl. (b), S. 20 to the enhancement of rent suggest that the clause is intended to apply only to cash rents."

This was, no doubt, said in a case relating to a bhaoli batai holding in which the rent is an indefinite quantity of produce which varies from year to year and is fixed at half the produce of each year and in respect of which, under S. 4 of the Act, the money value representing the price of produce deliverable calculated on an average taken for three years is to be put down in column 5 of the return. But it having been found in the present case that the real rent is a fixed quantity of paddy, Rs. 21 that was entered in column 5 was not the rent itself but what was considered the fair value of the paddy deliverable as rent. The suit strictly speaking is not a suit for rent. The entry, therefore, in my opinion, is not a bar, and to a case such as the present S. 20, Cess Act, has no application.

The view taken by the Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, is correct and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent against the appellant company and the Naihati Municipality for a declaration of the plaintiff's right of way over a certain public road called Radhaballav Road and for other consequential reliefs. The plaintiff's case is that long ago a temple was built and dedicated by one of his ancestors on Radhaballav Road, a little away from another public road called Ferry Fund Road connected by Radhaballav Road. The plaintiff further claimed easement of necessity over the road. He sought for a further declaration that the act of the Municipality in closing up the road was ultra vires and also for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his right of way over the road to reach the temple and for a direction on the appellants to remove obstructions put by them across the road. The facts are that there was a road called Radhaballav Road leading from Ferry Fund Road westward to the Hooghly; there were houses on both sides of the road all of which except the temple were acquired by the appellant company and they have erected at great cost a jute mill which they are working. The defendant Municipality sold the whole of Radhaballav Road to the appellant company who have included it in their mill compound by a boundary wall. The road from the Hooghly to the temple has been closed and there is no objection to this because the appellants have acquired all the lands on both sides of the road. The dispute is with regard to the portion of Radhaballav Road from the temple to Ferry Fund Road. The Municipality finding it probably not worth while to maintain this portion of the road sold the entire road to the mills. In order to allow the plaintiff to reach the temple a passage was given to the plaintiff by the appellants of which we will speak later.

The defence of the appellants and of the Municipality is that in the exercise of the power vested in the Municipality under the law it has transferred this road to the appellants that the plaintiff has no absolute right of passage over it and that the passage given by the appellants to the plaintiff is sufficient for the purpose. The trial Court found for the plaintiff on all the points on which he based his title to the road, and held that the Municipality had no right to sell the land to the mill; and further that the plaintiff had an easement of necessity over the road. The lower appellate Court confirmed all these findings but in view of the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Fazal Haq v. Maha Chand (1) thought that the plaintiff should be given a passage in lieu of the road and the passage proposed by the appellants from Ferry Fund Road to the temple almost diagonally across the appellant's lands would suit but that it should be walled up on both sides by the appellant without the gate put up by them at the head of the passage. In this view the learned Additional District Judge passed a decree to the effect that the appellant company should remove their gate from the passage keeping an intermediate space of at least six feet in width and should wall it up on both sides. If they failed to do so in a fortnight the plaintiff would be at liberty to execute the decree and to have the old Radhaballav Road reopened on demolishing the company's boundary wall and to have access to the temple by that road. This order to a certain extent, makes our position easy and leaves us to consider what should be the proper order passed in the circumstances of the present case. But as the lower appellate Court has confirmed the views of the first Court on the questions of law raised which have been pressed before us by the learned advocate for the respondents it is necessary to examine them in brief.

It is argued in the first place that the Municipality has no power under Act 3 of 1884 to sell the road to the appellants. The learned counsel for the appellants has, on the other hand, broadly contended that the Court has no power to question the discretion of the Municipality in this matter. This contention should not be acceded to for if the Municipality has acted ultra vires the civil Court has the power to interfere as also the power to grant proper relief to the aggrieved party. This is the principle on which civil Courts interfere with acts of public bodies, such as Municipalities, created by statutes. There are numerous cases on this point but it is enough to refer to Kameshwar Pershad v. Chairman of the Bhabua Municipality (2).

Now with regard to the Municipality selling the road to the appellants it is contended on behalf of the respondents that no such power is vested in the Municipality whereas it is argued by the appellant that the act of the Municipality was within the law. Under S. 30, Bengal Municipal Act 3 of 1884 all roads including the soil have been made to vest and belong to the Commissioners of the Municipality. The words "including the soil" were introduced by Act 4 of 1894. The section, as it now stands means that the roads together with the sub-soil belong to the Municipality and so do all bridges, tanks, ghats etc., but not the soil under them. Under S. 34, the Commissioners are empowered to sell, let, exchange or otherwise dispose of any land not required for the purpose of this Act. Before the amendment of 1894 it would appear that the Commissioners had no power to dispose of the roads and after the amendment it would equally appear that they have obtained a proprietary right over the roads. Now the question is whether the word "land" as used in S. 34 includes roads. The learned advocate for the respondent has strenuously argued that "land" in S. 34 does not include road but means lands other than roads which belong to the Municipality. We are unable to agree with this interpretation of the law. Land has not been defined fully in the Act but in S. 6 (5) it is said to include the benefits arising out of the lands etc. This definition does not help us very much in determining whether the word "land" as used in S. 34 includes road and the soil. There does not appear to be sufficient reason why the ordinary significance of the word "land" should be abridged by excluding roads only. The amending Act of 1894 left S. 34 which is reproduction of S. 34 of the Act of 1875 and of S. 13 of the Act of 1864 untouched, but widened the rights of the Commissioners over roads without any reservation. In the old Acts of 1864 and 1875 only the surface of a road vested in the Commissioners and, therefore, the view was rightly held that under the old law the Commissioners had no power to dispose of or transfer a road as it may now be maintained that they have no such power over bridges, tanks &c., the sub-soil of which does not vest in them.

This brings us to the next question as to whether the land, assuming it to include road, was disposed of as it was no longer required "for the purpose of this Act." If it was, then the civil Court has no right to challenge or investigate into the propriety of the Commissioner's action. If it was not, then, however reasonable the act of the Commissioners might appear, the Court would declare such act illegal and ultra vires. Now "the purpose of the Act" is not defined in the Act itself but some indication as to what the purposes of the Act are may be gathered by a reference to S. 69 of the Act which details some of the objects to which the Municipal fund may be devoted. After indicating some of the heads on which the Municipal funds may be expended, Cl. (17) of the section, says "generally, to carry out the purposes of the Act." This does not bring us very much nearer to what "the purposes of the Act" means. In Cl. (3), S. 69 it is again said that the Commissioners may do all things, not being inconsistent with this Act, which may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section. The purposes of the Act must be the purposes for which the Municipalities in the mufussil are created. The preamble to Act 3 of 1864 which may be taken to be the earliest Act relating to mufussil Municipalities runs in these words :

"An Act to provide for the appointment of Municipal Commissioners in towns and other places in the Provinces under the control of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and to make better provision for the Conservancy, Improvement and Watching thereof, and for the levying of rates and taxes therein."

The objects therein mentioned may be taken to be the purposes for which the Municipalities came into existence. The power of the Commissioners to transfer lands including roads &c., must, therefore be exercised for the improvement &c. of the Municipality. Now, in the present case we find that Radhaballav Road as a road had become useless to the general public. The greater portion of it had been closed and was of no use, only a small portion still remained from the temple to Ferry Fund Road. It can only be used by the plaintiff and votaries of the temple. In these circumstances we cannot say that the Municipal Commissioners were acting beyond the power vested in them by the law in regarding this portion of the road as no longer required for the purposes of the Act and selling it to the appellant. They did not certainly do something prohibited by law or inconsistent with the Act.

It has again been argued that no Municipality has the power to close or divert a road. If we are right in our view that the Municipality has the power to sell or dispose of a road under the law as it stands, it cannot be argued that it has not also the power to close or divert a road "for the purpose of the Act." In fact it was conceded that it had such power in the Allahabad case on which the Court below has relied. There is an old case of this Court to which reference may be made in this connexion. In Empress v. Brojonath De (3) it was held that the Municipal Commissioners had no power under the law to stop or divert public ways. That decision was passed before the amending Act of 1894 and therefore is not of much help to us. If it is of any authority at the present day it has to be reconsidered. The English Law relating to highways is not of much assistance to us in construing a Bengal Act. Under that law the soil beneath the road belongs to the owner of the land or to the owners of the lands on the two sides of the road. There is no enactment there which vests the subsoil of the highways in a local authority. But although under that law the local authority has not been expressly empowered to stop or divert a road it can do so by observing certain formalities mentioned in the Highways Act of 1835.

In Brojo Nath Das's case a reference was made to the Calcutta Municipal Act. It was pointed out there that such power is vested in the Commissioners of the Calcutta Corporation, but as it was not expressly given by the Bengal Municipal Act to the Commissioners of the mufussil Municipalities, it must be held to have been denied them. The same reasoning has been adopted in this case but it seems to us that though it may be permissible to construe an Act with reference to another Act when they are pari materia, the absence of an express provision in one does not necessarily import intentional omission in the other without clear words to that effect. The Act, as it stands, must be construed within its four corners. There is nothing in the Act which prohibits the Commissioners to stop or divert a road or to dispose of a road. The only limitation to their power given by the Act is that they must exercise such power only for the purposes of the Act. We cannot say that the sale of the road by the Municipality to the appellant was not in the proper exercise of the power vested in it by law. It was for the purposes of the Act, namely, the improvement of the

Now, we are to consider the propriety of the passage suggested by the Court below which must be provided to the respondent for access to the temple. The passage which is suggested runs through the mill area and the appellants agreed to it if they could exercise control over it for the protection of the mill. In our opinion it is not a convenient passage even if the directions given in the decree of the lower appellate Court are accepted.

It appears that in place of the Radhaballav Road a new road has been substituted a little to the north called New Road as shown in the map. It seems to us that there can be no objection to access being given to the plaintiff from this road. The plaintiff-respondent maintains that he has the legal right to claim access from the Ferry Fund Road. We think that he has no such absolute right; but he is entitled to claim a reasonably convenient access to the temple. The appellant before us has suggested a road opposite the temple running straight on the New Road which seems to us convenient. This is objected to by the respondent on the ground that it is so close to the septic tank. We are unable to determine the exact site of the passage and what directions should be given to make it a convenient road for the plaintiff and those people who have to visit the temple.

We must accordingly send this case back to the lower appellate Court in order to determine what should be the proper passage to the temple from the New Road and of what width it should be; and also directions should be given to make it a convenient passage. Whatever directions are given should be to the Municipality which is liable to provide a suitable passage to the plaintiff.

As a result of the above observations this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Court below is set aside and the case is sent back to the lower appellate Court in order that it might take into consideration all the circumstances of this case and determine the alignment of the road as suggested above. Each party will bear his costs so far. Future costs will be in the discretion of the Court below.

No order is necessary in the rule.

Nandalal Dubey—Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 30 and 31 of 1928, Decided on 12th September 1928 from appellate decrees of Mitter, J., D/-9th March 1928, in Appeals Nos. 554 and 553 of 1926.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Person claiming to be permanent tenant must prove existence, nature and extent of interest granted to him.

When a person claims to hold land as a permanent tenant, it is for him to prove the existence, the nature and the extent of the interest which the owner of the full rights has granted to him. It is not the business of the landlord to explain the possession, it is the business of the tenant to show that it leads to the inference of a permanent tenancy: 16 Cal. 223, Foll. [P 41 C 1, P 38 C 1]

The proper effect of a proved fact is a question of law and the question whether a tenancy is permanent or precarious is a legal inference from facts and not itself a question of fact: A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 102, Foll.: 32 Cal. 51 (P.C.), Ref.: 8 Cal. 960, not Foll.: 3 Cal. 696 and 25 Cal. 896, (F.B.): Cons. [P 39 C 1]

For the purpose of ascertaining the character of the tenancy an inference based merely upon facts which are in themselves ambiguous or equivocal, in the sense that they are not necessarily referable to the existence of a permanent right in the tenant, is an inference which is unwarranted in law. [P 39 C 1]

(d) Landlord and Tenant—Permanent tenancy—Presumption—Residence of tenant and his family for very long time without variation of rent is by itself insufficient to hold that tenancy is permanent.

The mere circumstance that the tenant and his family have for a very long time been allowed to continue residing in the same place without any variation in the rate of rent is a circumstance which by itself is an insufficient foundation for holding that the tenant's right was permanent in its origin: 16 Cal. 223 and A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 309, Rel. on.: 34 Cal. 902 and 30 C. W. N. 709, Cons. [P 40 C 1]

(e) Landlord and Tenant—Permanent tenancy—Land held for residential purposes—Absence of permanent structure is not evidence negating permanency of tenancy—Existence of permanent structure is not unequivocal fact for inferring permanent tenancy.

Where land is held for residential purposes, the absence of permanent structures is not to be regarded as evidence negating the permanency of the tenancy, nor can it be laid down that the existence of permanent structures is the only unequivocal or unambiguous fact for the purpose of an inference in favour of the tenant: A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 309, Rel. on. [P 40 C 1, 2]

(f) Landlord and Tenant—Prior to Transfer of Property Act, non-permanent tenancy was not heritable—Tenancy created before Transfer of Property Act—Successions are poor evidence that tenancy is heritable.

Although prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent would not be heritable, successions are in themselves poor evidence that the tenancy is being treated as a tenancy heritable as matter of right. The effect of such evidence is in no way comparable to the effect of a recognition by a landlord of a tenant's claim to transfer the original tenancy to an assignee. [P 40 C 2]

(g) Evidence—Circumstantial evidence should not merely point to inference but must lead to no other inference.

Per Mukerji, J.—Circumstantial evidence should not merely point to the inference that is to be drawn, but that the evidence must be of such a nature that it can possibly lead to no other inference. [P 41 C 2]

(h) Landlord and Tenant—Origin of tenancy known—Inferences from history of tenancy and circumstances obtaining during last fifty years cannot be drawn upon same principles as when origin is unknown.

If the origin of tenancy is known, if for example it was created by an agreement which is evidenced by writing, inferences from the history of the tenancy and the circumstances obtaining during last fifty years cannot be drawn upon the same principle as are applicable to a tenancy of unknown origin. [P 39 C 1]

Per Mukerji, J.—Abstention to enhance the rent, to lead to an inference, of permanent tenancy should be accompanied by circumstances making it unlikely to be due to mere inaction on the part of the landlord. [P 42 C 1]

Rupendra Kumar Mitter and Bijon Behari Mitter—for Appellant.

N. C. Sen Gupta and Urukramdas Chakaravarti—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for ejectment brought by the same plaintiffs as landlords against the tenant, defendant, Nando Lal Duli.

The land in question is homestead or bastu land and the area is in each case about two cottahs. The annual rent is in one case 13 annas and 9 pies and in the other case one rupee six annas and three pies.

The sole question for decision in each case is whether or not the tenancy of the defendant is a permanent tenancy. Both tenancies are very old and have been traced back to the time of the defendant's grandfather and grandfather's brother. Kabuliats put forward by the plaintiff dated in 1876 and 1846, have been rejected as spurious by both the Courts below. The origin of the tenancies is unknown and the finding is that they have been in existence for about a hundred years. It is proved that they have been held throughout for residential purposes; it is proved that they have been held at the same rate of rent for forty years and according to the plaintiff's case, the rent has not varied during the last 60 years. There is nothing to show that the rentals have ever been changed. The holdings are in a village and near to a road. The defendant is a labourer. The land is entirely occupied by mud-walled huts, some of which are very old and six or seven of which have been raised by the defendant according to his evidence since his father's death some 32 years ago. The two plots of land, according to the defendant, are in one place and a way runs between them. Four or five of the huts are let out to sub-tenants so as to produce income to the defendant from which he maintains himself.

In these circumstances it is contended for the defendant that the tenancies are very old, that they are of unknown origin, that rent has been paid at a uniform rate for a very long time, that the tenancy is one for residential purposes and that it has passed from one generation to another in the same family by succession twice, if not three times. In view of the fact that a labourer in the position of the defendant would not be likely to have pucca or masonry buildings, it is said that the absence of such permanent structures upon the land is a circumstance which in no way goes to show that the tenancy was not a permanent one.

The landlords contend on the other hand that before an inference can legitimately be drawn to the effect that the defendant has a permanent right, facts must be proved which are unequivocally referable to a right of this character and that the mere fact that a tenant has been allowed to hold homestead land for a long time without any enhancement of his rent is not a sufficient basis for an inference that he has a permanent right even when it is coupled with the circumstance that the holding has remained in the same family for three generations.

The principles applicable to cases of this class may be stated as follows: (1). When a person claims to hold land as a tenant under a landlord it is for him to prove the existence, the nature and the extent of the interest which the owner of the full rights has granted to him: (2) The terms of a holding as between landlord and tenant must in these cases be a matter of contract, either expressed or implied (3). The legislature, as regards this province, has regulated the terms of agricultural holdings. The letting of land for residential purposes is regulated by the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, but from the operation of this statute old tenancies, such as those now in question, are excluded by S. 2. (4). Ordinarily the person who sets up a contract will be required to give reasonable particulars and direct proof of the contract relied upon, but in the case of tenancies proved to be of long standing this principle is inapplicable, and from the history of the tenancy and the circumstances of the case it is open to the tenant to show that the origin of the tenancy being unknown the correct inference is to the effect that the right granted to the tenant and enjoyed by him is a permanent right.

In addition to these principles of law we have to bear in mind certain general considerations of fact applicable to Indian conditions prior to the Transfer of Property Act that is to a period which ended about fifty years ago: (a) It was not unusual and is in no way incredible either that an owner of land should mean to give a permanent right for residential purposes to a tenant in an Indian village or that the tenant should be content to take such a right by mere oral agreement coupled with possession. (b). The fact that a tenancy was for residential purposes in no way involved of itself that the tenant's right to the land was to be permanent as the land could be used for kutchha structures to be erected by the tenant. (c) In ordinary circumstances documents are difficult to preserve in India and in a case like the present are little likely to survive for a hundred years. (d) Lastly there is the consideration remarked upon by Chakravarti, J., in Abdul Hakim v. Elahi Baksh (1) at p. 60 [of 52 Cal.]

"The fact that a tenant is allowed to continue in possession of land for generations.

without alteration of the rent is a common occurrence in this country and is usually attributable to the reluctance of a landlord to eject a tenant from his home so long as he does not make himself objectionable and regularly pays his rent."

Quite recently it was held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Dhannamal v. Motisagar (2) that the question whether a tenancy is permanent is not a question of fact upon which the opinion of the lower appellate Court is conclusive in second appeal.

"It is clear that the proper effect of a proved fact is a question of law and the question whether a tenancy is permanent or precarious seems to them, in a case like the present to be a legal inference from facts and not itself a question of fact. The High Court has described the question here as a mixed question of law and fact a phrase not unhappy if it carries with it the warning that in so far as it depends on fact the finding of the Court of first appeal must be accepted."

This ruling must be accepted and applied: it is in consonance with much Indian authority: but it creates a difficulty in cases which are near the boundary line. In those, at all events, it is not easy to see that the ultimate inference is not itself a question of fact. As a matter of law it is clear that if the origin of the tenancy is known—if, for example, it was created by an agreement which is evidenced by writing—inferences from the history of the tenancy and the circumstances obtaining during the last fifty years cannot be drawn upon the same principle as are applicable to a tenancy of unknown origin. It is clear also that for the purpose of ascertaining the character of the tenancy an inference based merely upon facts which are in themselves ambiguous or equivocal, in the sense that they are not necessarily referable to the existence of a permanent right in the tenant, is an inference which is unwarranted in law. In numerous and various respects such an inference may be erroneously drawn and the error be error in law. But on the other hand, we are in this class of case dealing not with the effect of a fact upon the rights of the parties but with the inference to be drawn from subsequent facts as to the nature and extent of the right previously granted by the landlord to the tenant. For this purpose it would rather seem that the proper effect of a proved fact is a question of evidence. So long as it was thought that cases of this kind fell within a few readily recognizable classes it was possible to regard these cases as though the inference to be drawn could be ascertained as a matter of law. If the tenant could bring his case within one or other of these classes he was held to be entitled to a presumption of law. This is really the standpoint of the earlier Calcutta decisions e.g., Prosunno Coomaree Debea v. Rutton Bepari (3) and of Rampani, J., in Nabu Mondul v. Cholim Mullick (4). But it is clear now, if only from the decided cases, that the present question is constantly arising in widely different circumstances and has to be answered in each case upon the circumstances of that case. Lord Robertson in Nilratan v. Ismail Khan (5) at 61 said:

"The question here as in other similar cases is whether the true inference from the facts is that the tenure is permanent or precarious, the burden of proof being on the tenant."

If this be so the ultimate inference that the right of a tenant was a permanent right must be open to the Court in point of law, but it is difficult to see how in its nature it can be other than an inference of fact.

I make these observations because I recognize that in the present case on the facts found by the lower appellate Court, it may be thought to be difficult to say that the conclusion at which it arrived was either inadmissible in law or compulsory in law: to say that there is no evidence upon which the Court could find that the tenancy was permanent or to say as a matter of law that the facts upon which it did so find were evidence with which it was obliged to be satisfied.

In view of Dhanna Mal's case, however, I think that we must decide the case for ourselves on the facts found by the Subordinate Judge. We cannot confine ourselves to saying as was said by Garth, C. J., in Gangadhur v. Ayimuddin (6) (at p. 962) that "upon these circumstances we think that the Courts below were at liberty to presume, if they thought fit . . . that the grant itself was of a permanent character."

In the judgment of Chakravarti, J., in Abdul Hakim's case (1) (supra) the principle relied on by the tenant is stated to be "the principle of a lost grant." This seems to me to introduce from the English law of easements an element which is both unnecessary and confusing. For the present purpose we are troubled by no rule that a permanent tenancy must have been created by a written instrument nor are we concerned to find a lawful origin for acts which would otherwise have been unlawful. The continuance of an old tenancy is equally lawful whether the tenancy be permanent or precarious. The doctrine of lost grant when examined in the case of Angus v. Dalton (7), was found to bristle with difficulties and in any case it is necessarily based upon an arbitrary period which the law of England puts at twenty years.

The references to the principle of lost grant are however only an incident in the judgment in Abdul Hakim's case (1). The cases which illustrate the facts from which and the principles on which an inference as to a permanent tenancy can properly be made are very carefully analyzed by Chakravarty, J., in a clear and highly useful statement of the law.

On second appeal and in the lower appellate Court the absence of permanent masonry structures upon the land of these suits has been explained by the circumstance that the defendant is a labourer and that people of his position would not generally expect to reside in buildings of such character. This consideration is sufficient to show that the absence of permanent structures is not to be regarded as evidence negating the permanency of the tenancy. If, therefore, in the other circumstances there is sufficient evidence from which an inference of permanency can be drawn no difficulty would arise. But the mere circumstance that the tenant and his family have for a very long time been allowed to continue residing in the same place without any variation in the rate of rent is a circumstance which by itself is an insufficient foundation for holding that the tenant's right was permanent in its origin.

In Abdul Hakim's case (1) Chakravarti, J., as a result of his analysis of previous decisions considered that the absence of permanent pucca buildings on the land would ordinarily be fatal to a claim for permanency. What I think he meant by this statement was that unless permanent pucca buildings existed on the land the tenant would not as a rule be able to point to anything more than matters which can be explained by the reluctance of a landlord to eject a reasonable tenant i. e., to point to any other element showing that the tenant's long occupation at a uniform rate of rent is unequivocally referable to a permanent right.

In my opinion it cannot be laid down that the existence of permanent structures is the only unequivocal or unambiguous fact for the purpose of an inference in favour of the tenant. In this respect I think that the case law has broadened somewhat since Prosonna Coomaree's case (3) was decided. In Secretary of State v. Luchmeswar Singh (8) at p. 23, Lord Hobhouse said :

"All they offer is some conjecture of such an agreement founded simply on their long possession at a uniform rate of payment. If we could not find out the origin of those things, there would be strength in that argument."

The rent in that case had come to be far below the value of the land. In the case of Naba Kumari v. Behari Lal (9), Sir Arthur Wilson delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee referred to the circumstances that "the rent was almost a nominal one and had never been enhanced though the value of the holding as measured by the sale price had greatly increased.

Again in Bireswar v. Troilakya Dasi (10) the land was situated in the Howrah Municipality and the rent remained unchanged for 65 years though the value of the land had increased abnormally. An inference of permanency was drawn mainly upon this consideration.

The effect of successions cannot in my opinion be rated very high. No reasonable landlord in a case like the present would be minded to eject the family from its homestead merely because the father or the grandfather had died. Assuming that prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent would not be heritable, still these successions are in themselves poor evidence that the tenancy is being treated as a tenancy heritable as matter of right. The effect of such evidence is in no way comparable to the effect of a recognition by a landlord of a tenant's claim to transfer the original tenancy to an assignee.

(7) 4 Q. B. D. 162=6 A. C. 750.

The rent in the present cases has remained unchanged, according to the plaintiffs' admission, for 60 and 80 years respectively. It is in evidence that the land of these suits has been occupied not merely by the defendant's family for their own residence, but of late years at least by sub-tenants who have occupied mud-walled huts paying rent to the defendant therefor. But it is difficult to be sure whether for two cottas of land in this village a rent of 13 annas 9 pies or 1 rupee 6 annas 3 pies is a reasonable or economic rent, or should be regarded as a very low rent. None of the Courts below appear to have proceeded upon this consideration. I notice that the defendant in his evidence gave as a reason for which his father had been wont to say that he had a permanent right that the defendant talked to him of the low rent of the land. This seems to be the only evidence that the rent was in fact low and we cannot say whether the economic or rack-rent would be likely to have tempted the landlord to raise the rent on threat of ejectment. It is no doubt possible to call a mud-walled hut a substantial structure but the existence of such huts adds nothing to the fact that the tenancy was for residential purposes. It is not such a structure as the tenant could not without imprudence raise upon the land in the absence of a permanent right nor such as gives notice to the landlord that the tenant claims permanent right. It will not suffice to say that these tenants were labourers and that mud-walled huts were something of a luxury for them.

I am sorry that the defendant's possession should be disturbed but I should be still more sorry to administer the law in such a way as to cause landlords to raise tenants' rents or to eject tenants merely to preserve their rights as landlords. This consequence will certainly ensue unless the Courts hold very firmly to the principle that it is not the business of the plaintiff to explain the possession, it is the business of the defendant to show that it leads to the inference of a permanent tenancy, Secretary of State v. Maharajah Luchmeswar Singh (8).

On the whole it appears to me that these appeals should be allowed and the suits decreed. No costs in any of the Courts.

Mukerji, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. At one time during the arguments I was strongly inclined to the view that the defendant's possession of the homestead extending over a hundred years or more with payment of the same rent for sixty years, if not more, should not be disturbed, and that the concurrent opinion of three Courts such as there has been in this case, that the tenancy was a permanent one should not be dissented from. On considering the matter further and in the light of the authorities, bearing upon it, I can see no escape from the conclusion that the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiff's suit should be decreed.

Direct proof of the contract which was the origin of the tenancy not being available, the question is what is the correct inference to be drawn from the circumstances proved in the case. The onus of proving permanency being unquestionably on the defendants, the question, properly formulated, is whether the defendants have succeeded in proving circumstances which go to raise in their favour a "presumption" or perhaps more correctly an inference of permanency. Whether the defendant has succeeded in discharging this burden is to be judged by the well-recognized rule of circumstantial evidence that such evidence should not merely point to the inference that is to be drawn, but that the evidence must be of such a nature that it can possibly lead to no other inference. Were this inference an inference of fact only an error in drawing the inference in view of the definition of "proof" as given in S. 3, Evidence Act, would in a case where it cannot be said that there is no material in support of it be at best a question of sufficiency of proof, and consequently a question which may not be gone into in second appeal. In any event, were this the position, I should be extremely reluctant to interfere with the affirmance which my learned brother Mitter, J., has lent to an inference of this nature which the first two Courts have concurrently drawn in defendant's favour.

The decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Dhannmal v. Moti Sagar (2), however, makes it plain that the question is a legal inference from proved facts and not itself a question of fact, and as my Lord the Chief Justice has said in his judgment that decision must be accepted and applied. We have, therefore, in this appeal to draw our own inference from the proved circumstances.

Applying to the case the rule of circumstantial evidence to which I have already referred I find that the only facts proved are that the tenancy was for residential purposes, that possession has extended for over a hundred years with constant instances of inheritance and succession and that there has been payment of uniform rent for sixty years or more, or in other words that there is no proof that the rent varied at any time. Presence of permanent masonry structures would have been a circumstance in the chain in defendant's favour, but their absence, though not necessarily against him, is obviously of no use to him. Instances of transfer would have assisted the defendant, but they are entirely absent. All that has been proved, therefore, is long possession on the part of the tenant together with abstention on the part of the landlord to enhance the rent. Abstention to enhance the rent, to lead to an inference, should be accompanied by circumstances making it unlikely to be due to mere inaction on the part of the landlord: but no such circumstances have been proved. What has been proved, in my judgment is not unequivocally referable to the permanency of the holding and permanency, therefore, is not the correct inference to be drawn.

Goonendra Nath Bhose—Plaintiff—
Respondent.

Appeal No. 73 of 1926, Decided on 11th
February 1927.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 49—Article 49 applies in a case where the ordinary possession of the defendant is lawful but it becomes unlawful by reason of certain facts.

Article 49 is the ordinary article to apply in a case where the original possession of the defendant is lawful but it becomes unlawful by reason of certain facts. The common case is the case where the demand is made by the plaintiff, the plaintiff having a right to determine the possession of the defendants: 21 Cal. 157 (P.C.), Dist.

Plaintiff and his stepbrothers formed a joint Hindu family. Plaintiff's mother and father died in 1905 and 1909 respectively. The mother left certain valuable ornaments which continued to be in the joint family even after the death of the plaintiff's father. During all the time plaintiff was living with the stepbrothers. Plaintiff attained majority in 1910. Stepbrothers never claimed the ornaments as their own though they were in their possession. In 1920 there was a partition and in September 1920 the plaintiff brought the suit to recover those ornaments. It was contended that the suit was time-barred.

Held: that Art. 49 applied and the suit was not time-barred, as the time began to run against him in 1920 when he claimed that stepbrothers should make over the ornaments to him. [P 46 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 49—Policy explained.

It is no part of the policy of the Limitation Act to make people determine the lawful possession of others who are looking after their property or who have their property on deposit. The policy of the Limitation Act is that when once that arrangement is stopped the suit should be brought within a limited time. [P 46 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff, Goonendra brought a suit against two defendants originally his stepbrothers Bhupendra and Jnanendra. Janendra has since died pending the suit; but I will omit for the sake of simplicity the complications caused by that event. The plaintiff's case is that his father Woopendra Nath Bhose was married twice, that by his first wife he had two sons, namely, the defendants, and that, after the death of his first wife, he married one Sushila Sundari Dassi and by her he had two children the elder of the two being a daughter and the younger being the plaintiff. It seems that in the year 1905 Woopendra practically retired from business and his business affairs were managed by Bhupendra and Jnanendra. In the same year, Sushila Sundari died. Woopendra survived her by some four years till 1909 and, in 1910, the plaintiff attained majority. These are the broadest facts of the family history with which we are concerned.

The plaintiff's case is that when his mother Sushila Sundari died in 1905 she died possessed of a good many valuable personal ornaments of which certain descriptions have been given in the course of the evidence. These ornaments, according to the plaintiff, were acquired by his mother in such a way as to be her ajautuka stridhan and the plaintiff undertakes to show that they were ajautuka stridhan because otherwise, if they were jautuka stridhan, they would belong not to the plaintiff but to his sister Srimati Saroj Basini Dassi. That is the first point in the case. The defendants, in addition to putting the plaintiff to proof of the existence of the ornaments and the jewellery and of the fact that they were acquired so as to become Susila Sundari's ajautuka stridhan, deny altogether that any such property came at any time to their hands. The learned Judge had said that they put forward four different inconsistent cases and he has disbelieved the defendants and has believed the plaintiff.

It becomes necessary in this case to state as matters of simple fact what the plaintiff's evidence establishes because a great difficulty has arisen in this case from the fact that legal interpretations have been somewhat rashly put upon facts without sufficiently considering the distinction between the facts themselves and the legal results of certain facts. I am quite satisfied that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff entitled the learned Judge to hold, and that he meant to hold the following facts: First of all, the learned Judge had believed the evidence (which is the only evidence upon the point) given by Kusum Kumari Dassi as regards the way in which the plaintiff's mother came to be possessed of the articles in question and as to the fact that these articles came to the hands of the defendants. The lady explains that Sushila Sundari obtained the articles in question in two ways: first, she says they were presents given by the witness herself Kusum Kumari before Susila's marriage to Woopendra and, secondly, she says they were presents which Susila got from Woopendra after the marriage. Now, as to that when the Hindu Law is examined, it turns out that the difference between ajautuka and jautuka stridhan is a matter which requires some little consideration. Jautuka stridhan is not entirely confined, it would appear, to presents given actually before the nuptial fire. But the limits within which such presents become jautuka stridhan are somewhat narrow. Kusum Kumari, the grandmother, having given her evidence in the manner I have described for the plaintiff is in no way cross-examined with a view to show that the particular facts to which she is speaking bring the case on a careful examination to a case of jautuka stridhan. Her evidence is left exactly as she gives it a broad statement—gift from herself before the marriage, gift from her husband after the marriage. In my opinion, it either was not in the contemplation of the defendants at the time of the hearing to contest seriously the nature of this stridhan or else they felt themselves wholly unable to cope with this lady and cross-examine her so as to throw doubt upon the evidence which she gave. It has to be remembered that the defendant's case is, that no such ornaments ever came to their hands. So far as I know, they do not admit anywhere that to their own knowledge any such property was in existence at any time. Indeed, their case suffers seriously from the attempt which the defendants made to show that to the best of their knowledge this lady who married a man of some considerable wealth and position had no ornaments at all. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Judge's finding that this was ajautuka stridhan should not be disturbed. The only reason why his finding requires to be considered at all is that, in giving his reasons for supposing that the ornaments possessed by this lady were of substantial value, he does say in his judgment that Woopendra would be unlikely to give his bride cheap or insignificant presents. It does not seem to me that the learned Judge's attention there was being directed to the exact legal distinction in Hindu Law which divides jautuka stridhan and ajautuka stridhan and the fact that he uses the word "bride" does not lead me to suppose that he has come to the conclusion after considering the matter that these presents were given at the exact time of the marriage. In any event, looking to the uncontradicted and simple evidence given in the course of the case, it appears to me that the plaintiff has made out his title by making out that this is property which would come to him and would not go to his sister. I need not say that, in no event, would it come to the defendants.

Now, it is necessary to go again over certain facts in this case in order to deal with the only other contention which has been raised before the Court by Mr. Langford James on behalf of the defendants-appellants namely, the contention that the plaintiff's case is governed by Art. 120, Sch. 1, Lim. Act of 1908 and that, under Art. 120, the plaintiff's case is time-barred because, as I understand the argument, his suit might and could have been brought in 1910 when the plaintiff came of age, and six years from that date would be 1916, whereas the plaint was not filed till September 1920. Here, again, I would try to keep to the facts as distinct from a more or less unsuccessful attempt to interpret the facts.

The facts are that before 1905 when Susila Sundari died the ornaments in question, according to the plaintiff's evidence, were kept in her own room and that after she died they were kept in an iron-safe in her husband's room. What else was kept in the iron-safe we do not know. What other purpose the iron-safe was used for we do not know. We are told that Bhupendra one of the defendants kept the key; but it is quite true, as Mr. James points out that however much the management of the family affairs might be left by the father to the plaintiff's stepbrothers, the mere existence of the ornaments in the safe would not have involved any management at all. The facts are that they went on in the safe in the father's room and defendant 1 has the key. When Woopendra died in 1909, the facts are that the plaintiff had not yet come of age, that his stepbrothers were considerably older than he was, and that naturally enough they not only took probate of the father's will but carried on the family concerns as they would have done in ninety-nine cases out of hundred in Hindu families of this particular type. The ornaments were in the safe and they went on in the safe. It appears that when the family had occasion to use them they were used. They were used later on at the time of the plaintiff's marriage. Some other relatives seem to have used them on occasions. There is no reason why they should not be used when suitable occasions arose. There is no suggestion in the plaintiff's evidence or in the defendant's evidence that any claim was made by the elder brothers that these ornaments belonged to them. The nature of the ornaments makes it very improbable that there was much doubt as to their not belonging to the stepbrothers. What happened is what one would expect so long as the family was living jointly and without trouble. Of course, in the end, trouble did come. It seems that, in 1919 the finances of the defendants being in an unsatisfactory state, there was a question of selling two of the ornaments. It seems that the plaintiff's consent was asked, the two ornaments were valued for the purpose of sale and the plaintiff in the end refused his assent and they were not sold. There was a partition in 1920 and it is in September 1920 that the plaintiff brings his suit. Those being the facts, the matter begins, as most plaints in this Court do, by getting them thoroughly muddled with the pleadings. There were two attempts to fasten these facts with various legal categories in order to put the plaintiff's case straight for the purposes of the Limitation Act and the real difficulty in applying the law to the facts consists entirely in the circumstances that instead of saying that when Woopendra died the defendants took possession of whatever was in the house and that the family went amicably on as before, the plaint says this :

"The management of the estate and affairs of the said Woopendra Nath Bhose was under the control of the defendants and with the knowledge and concurrence of their father they took possession of the said ornaments and jewellery for and on behalf of and as trustees for the plaintiff and continued to hold the same as such till his death."

That is the travesty of what happened before Woopendra's death. The travesty of what happened after his death is this. The plaint goes on to say:

"Upon the death of the said Woopendra Nath Bhose, the defendants as executors and trustees appointed under his will took possession of the estate left by him as such executors and trustees including the plaintiff's share therein and the said jewellery and ornaments continued to be in their possession, care and control as such executors and trustees and are still in their possession and control."

The learned Judge has, it is true, found not merely the fact that these defendants being the elder brothers took possession of the house with the iron-safe and whatever were the contents of the iron-safe; but he also says that they took possession as executors and trustees and Mr. Langford James very properly points out that if this has to be regarded accurately then the plaintiff would have a right to bring his suit the moment he attained majority. If these brothers of his were holding the property as executors of Woopendra, then, of course, they were setting up a hostile title to the plaintiff because according to the plaintiff's case Woopendra was never the owner of these goods at all after Susila. As a matter of verbal criticism, I entirely agree that, if the correct finding is that these people were claiming to hold the property as property which was Woopendra's and not the plaintiff's and which, therefore, had come down to them, they were holding it under a title which was hostile to the plaintiff and the plaintiff would have six years from 1910 in which he would be obliged to bring his suit. It is necessary, therefore, for us to examine the evidence for ourselves and see whether the real facts found do warrant any such conclusion. It is not the effect of the plaintiff's evidence or of any evidence in this case that these defendants ever claimed that these ornaments were ornaments belonging to their father's estate or in which they had a joint interest with the plaintiff as part of their father's estate. As I have already observed, the nature of the ornaments makes it extremely unlikely that these stepbrothers would set up any right to the ornaments of a lady who was not their mother at all. There is nothing in the conduct of Woopendra to suggest that he suffered under any impression that the ornaments devolved on him. What has happened is entirely natural and consistent with the plaintiff's case. The ornaments remained after the father's death in the safe when the elder brothers had to carry on the family concerns and the infant lived with them no question of dispute arising between them.

Plaintiff's case is that they were always recognized as belonging to him because everybody knew that they were the ornaments of his mother. In these circumstances, the last thing that is true is to say that they were held by the defendants as executors of Woopendra's estate. So far as I am concerned, I entirely dissent from any such finding because the evidence satisfies me to the contrary. In my opinion, the position is, as the plaintiff's evidence shows, that these goods being there in the safe, the family went on, the elder brothers having no doubt a general direction and control of the family affairs being responsible as natural guardian of the plaintiff and looking after the plaintiff's property. There is no reason to think that any claim or controversy arose until long after the plaintiff attained majority. In the meantime, he was living in amity as a member of a joint Hindu household at the old house. The question is whether, in these circumstances, Art. 49 or Art. 120, Lim. Act, applies and whether, if Art. 120 applies, the suit is time-barred. In my opinion, whichever article applies the suit is no time-barred but on the facts which I have endeavoured to state, I think the article applicable is Art. 49. I will deal, first, with the question of the article applicable. Art. 49 has to be read with Art. 48 and having disposed in Art. 48 of all cases of claim for specific moveable property lost, or acquired by theft, or dishonest misappropriation or conversion or for compensation for wrongfully taking or detaining the same, Art. 49 deals with cases of claim for other specific moveable property, or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same; and it says that the time is to be three years from the date when the property is wrongfully taken or injured, or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful. Art. 49 is the ordinary article to apply in a case where the original possession of the defendant is lawful but it becomes unlawful by reason of certain facts. The common case is the case where the demand is made by the plaintiff, the plaintiff having a right to determine the possession of the defendants. Now, it is said that that article is inapplicable because of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (1) and it is a little important to see what the Privy Council actually held in that case. That was a case where a Mahomedan died leaving a widow and a brother. In the wajib-ul-arz of the place where he had his immovable property there was a statement of the local custom governing such people and the local custom evidenced by that record and by certain other records was that the widow would succeed to the whole of her husband's estate for a life-interest. The man died and his brother went into possession of his effects on the basis that there was no such custom and that the property devolved on him and the suit was brought to establish the widow's right under that custom, first of all, to the immovable property and then to the cash and other things that the man died possessed of. A controversy arose as regards the moveables whether the claim against the brothers was a claim under Art. 49 or under Art. 120; and it is with reference to a case like that that their Lordships said:

lish a right to inherit the property of a deceased person."

The case there was that the widow was claiming to use Art. 49 by saying "if I establish my right under the custom then you, the defendant, are a person who has wrongfully taken my property."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council say that that is not the way to look at a suit to establish a right to succeed to the property of a deceased. In my judgment, that is not this case at all. The plaintiff's case is not that the defendants wrongfully took his property. His case is that the defendants were in rightful possession of the property, in rightful possession so long as he was a minor, in rightful possession so long as he was living with them and let them look after it, but in wrongful possession of it since 1919 or 1920 when he claimed that they should make over the property to him; and I am in no way satisfied that there is any valid reason for holding that the plaintiff's claim in this case should be excluded from Art. 49.

The next question is, however, whether the same principle would not apply under the terms of Art. 120. I think they would. If one asks oneself why the plaintiff should bring a suit in 1911 soon after he attained majority against his stepbrothers and what his cause of action in such a suit would be, I think that question, too must be answered against the present appellants. It is quite true that the plaintiff had a right to determine the lawful possession of his elder brothers who were living jointly with him. He had the right to do that. But it is no part of the policy of the Limitation Act to make people determine the lawful possession of others who are looking after their property or who have their property on deposit. The policy of the Limitation Act is that when once that arrangement is stopped the suit should be brought within a limited time. So far as I know, without making a demand upon the brothers for this property, on the facts which the plaintiff's case discloses, the plaintiff would not have had a cause of action against his stepbrothers but had first of all to determine their possession, to do something which would render their possession unlawful and then to bring his suit. In my judgment, under Art. 120 just as under Art. 49, the plaintiff in this case has brought his suit within time. It cannot be too strenuously emphasized that everything depends upon the exact facts in a case like this. If it had been the defendant's case at any stage that they had the property, that they knew it came from a different origin, that they claimed that it had belonged to their father or that two-thirds of it belonged to them, then no doubt none of the reasons which I have endeavoured to apply to the facts of this case would have been at all applicable.

Upon the facts of this case, it seems to me that the judgment of the learned Judge should be upheld and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A cross-objection is argued in this case on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect, first that the learned Judge on the evidence of Hrishikesh ought to have found that the value of the jewellery proved to have been received by the plaintiff's mother from her husband was more than Rs. 10,000 and also that the learned Judge has forgotten to take any account of the ornaments said to be 107 tolas in weight which the lady is said to have got from Kusum Kumari. It appears to my mind as regards the first point that the learned Judge was not satisfied having regard to the nature of the articles in question, that he could safely go by the valuation of the witness Hrishikesh Roy, and, being apparently dissatisfied with that evidence in some respect, he has really reminded himself of the duty of the Court which is not to give damages for a single penny more than what is quite certainly proved. The learned Judge has, in so doing certainly discounted the figure given by the jeweller very heavily. He was dealing with articles with reference to which it is very difficult to form a precise opinion and I do not think it would be right on the part of this Court to interfere with his figure seeing that he was entitled to put a conservative figure upon the matter.

As regards the 107 tolas in weight of jewellery which is described by Kusum Kumari, there again the plaintiff is in the unfortunate position that no evidence whatever has been given of the value of these articles. It may be that, if some evidence had been given of the value, it would have been our duty to interfere. But it is very difficult to say that, on this evidence, the learned Judge was obliged to allow the plaintiff any particular figure. The ornaments may have been of standard gold or something containing a great deal of alloy in them or they may have been merely worth the actual weight of the gold they contain or may have been worth more. It is difficult indeed for the Court left as it is without the opinion of a single witness as to the minimum value of such articles to say that the learned Judge was obliged to put any additional figure upon them and that he was wrong to ignore these articles. I think it may be due to the fact that there was no material upon which he could assess the amount. I do not think that in this case it is right and proper that there should be an enquiry as to the value of these ornaments. In these circumstances, the only thing we can do although I quite agree that the plaintiff has probably got less than the value of the articles is to dismiss this cross-objection with costs.

Appeals Nos. 2561 to 2575 of 1925, Decided on 20th April 1928, from appellate decrees of Dist. Judge, Zillah Nadia, D/- 20th August 1925.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 109-A (3)—
Special Judge finding out original rent payable by tenant and then proceeding to settle fair rent under S. 105 with S. 30—Decision is not decision settling rent pure and simple and appeal lies.

Where what the Special Judge had done was to find out what the original rent payable by the tenant was and then he proceeded to settle fair and equitable rent under S. 105 read with S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act:

Held: that the decision of the Special Judge in these cases is not what may be said to be a decision settling a rent pure and simple. He had done something more than that; that is, he had found what the real rent payable by the tenants was and a second appeal would lie.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 105—Settling rent means deciding something previously unsettled—No rent fixed in Record-of-Rights or rent mentioned therein accepted as correct—Increase or abatement demanded—Decision in such cases would be decision settling rent.

"Settling rent" has a technical meaning.

Ordinarily "settle" would mean decide something which was previously unsettled. Where there was no rent fixed in the Record-of-Rights or where the rent mentioned in the Record-of-Rights is accepted as correct and increase or abatement is demanded thereupon on one of the grounds mentioned in the Act, the decision of the Settlement Officer in such and similar cases would be a decision settling rent. "Settling a rent" must be distinguished from settling a dispute relating to rent: 31 Cal. 380, Foll. [P 48 C 2]

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 105—"Existing rent," meaning explained.

The existing rent is the rent which the tenant is liable to pay under contract with the landlord. [P 49 C 1]

(d) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 105—Revenue Officer can enquire as to existing rent.

Under S. 105 the Revenue Officer is entitled in order to settle fair and equitable rent to enquire as to existing rent and to determine all questions that may arise under S. 105-A or S. 105: 44 Cal. 783, Foll. [P 49 C 1]

(e) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 105 (4)—All circumstances must be taken into consideration in settling fair and equitable rent.

In proceedings for settling fair and equitable rent it is not enough to find that there has been an increase in the price of staple food crops but it is also necessary to find that the rent settled by the Court is fair and equitable taking all circumstances into consideration. [P 49 C 2]

Bijan Kumar Mukherji for Baranishibashi Mukherji and Hari Prasanna Mukherji—for Appellants.

Sarat Chandra Basak and Probodh Kumar Das—for Respondents.

Suhrawardy, J.—These appeals on behalf of the tenants arise out of proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, for settlement of fair and equitable rents under S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act, on the ground of rise in the price of staple food crops. The defence of the defendants was based upon many grounds with which we are not now concerned. The main ground on which these appeals have been pressed is with reference to the rate of rent on which enhancement has been allowed by the Court below under S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act. The plaintiffs' case is that the real rent payable by the tenants of the mouzah was at the rate of Re. 1 per bigha; but in consideration of the defendants cultivating indigo it was reduced to 10 annas per bigha. They accordingly claimed enhancement of rent under S. 30 on Re. 1 per bigha. The tenants said that they were liable to pay rent only at the rate of 10 annas per bigha and the enhancement, if any, should be allowed on that rent.

The Assistant Settlement Officer was of opinion that the rent on which enhancement should be allowed ought to be the rent entered in the settlement records and paid by the tenants at the time when that record was prepared, namely, 10 annas per bigha. The learned Special Judge on appeal by the plaintiffs has held that the actual rent for which the tenants are liable is at the rate of Re. 1 a bigha and he has allowed enhancement upon that rent.

It appears that this mouzah at one time belonged to one Mr. Hills. The rate of rent at that time was 5 annas odd per bigha. Mr. Hills attempted to enhance the rent of the tenants and for that purpose brought suits against some of the leading tenants. Those suits were in the nature of test suits. They were carried up to the High Court and Mr. Hills got a decree in this Court at Re. 1 per bigha. Since then there have been several jama-bandis, one in 1293 B. S., and another in 1309—which were accepted by the tenants and they show that the rent was Re. 1 a bigha but that remission or allowance was made of 7 annas in the rupee and latterly 6 annas in the rupee in view of the willingness of the tenants to cultivate indigo for the landlords. This remission is described in the landlords' papers as mahakup or temporary remission of rent. The tenants ceased to cultivate indigo from 1305 and hence the plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to realize the full rent from the defendants and enhancement should be calculated upon that rate. The lower appellate Court has accepted the plaintiffs' contention and held that the tenants are liable to pay rent at the rate of Re. 1 per bigha and allowed enhancement at the rate of 2 annas 6 pies in the rupee on that rate. The tenants have appealed and the ground pressed on their behalf will appear from the discussion of the points raised in the cases.

On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection is taken that no appeals lie in these cases under S. 109-A, Ben. Ten. Act. S. 109-A makes all decisions of the Special Judge subject to appeal to this Court except those "settling a rent." Now the question to be considered is whether the decision in these cases is one which can be called settling a rent. What the Special Judge has done is to find out what the original rent payable by the tenant was and then he has proceeded to settle fair and equitable rent under S. 105 read with S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act. In my opinion the decision of the Special Judge in these cases is not what may be said to be a decision settling a rent pure and simple. He has done something more than that; that is, he has found what the real rent payable by the tenants is. "Settling a rent" has been given, as will appear from an examination of the several sections of the Act, a technical meaning. Ordinarily "settle" would mean decide something which was previously unsettled. Where there was no rent fixed in the Record-of-Rights or where the rent mentioned in the Record-of-Rights is accepted as correct and increase or abatement is demanded thereupon on one of the grounds mentioned in the Act, the decision of the Settlement Officer in such and similar cases would be a decision settling a rent. In the present cases the Special Judge has found what the actual rent payable by the tenants is. That is not exactly settling a rent. That cannot be settling a rent in the sense in which the words are used in S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act. "Settling a rent" must be distinguished from settling a dispute relating to rent. In Ramani Pershad Narain Singh v. Adaiya Gossain (1), the learned Judges were called upon to assign a meaning to the expression "a decision settling a rent" and they observed:

"The words 'a decision settling a rent' do not, in our opinion mean and include any decision upon the question what is or what ought to be the rent. They mean only a decision settling a rent in the sense of settling a fair and equitable rent in place of the existing rent and the words do not include a decision determining what the existing rent is."

The decision of the Special Judge in these cases therefore is not a decision settling a rent as it purports to be. In this view it must be held that second appeals lie to this Court and the preliminary objection ought to be overruled.

The real question that calls for determination is on what rent the enhancement under S. 30 should be allowed. The Assistant Settlement Officer was of opinion that it should be allowed upon the existing rent by which he means the rent which the tenants are at present paying. The learned Special Judge is of opinion that the rent which the tenants are liable to pay should be the existing rent i. e. rent which the tenant is liable to pay. I have considered this matter carefully and in my opinion the contention of the landlord should be accepted. Under S. 105 (4), Ben. Ten. Act, the Revenue Officer shall presume, until the contrary is proved, that the "existing" rent is fair and equitable. Under S. 32 (b) the rent enhanced under S. 30 shall bear to the "previous" rent the same proportion etc.

Now the expression "existing rent" in 105 and the expression "previous rent" in S. 32 seem to have been used in the same sense or they may be taken to have been used in the same sense. The existing rent is the rent which the tenant is liable to pay under contract with the landlord. It is possible that the landlord for some reason or other may not have realized the full amount of rent. It is also possible that the landlord may not have realized any rent at all. In the latter case it is hardly reasonable to say that by existing rent is meant no rent. But it is argued that by existing rent should be understood the rent entered in the Record-of-Rights and the Revenue Officer has no jurisdiction under S. 105 to adopt any other rent as the existing rent. This argument is in my opinion unsound. Under S. 105 the Revenue Officer is entitled to enquire as to the existing rent as it is one of the questions which he is entitled to investigate under S. 105-A (f). The word "conditions" may include that on some considerations the landlord allowed remission to the tenant from the amount of rent which the tenants had rendered themselves bound to pay under the contract of tenancy. Even if that is not so, it is certainly a question which can be determined under S. 106. And it is clear that under S. 105, the Revenue Officer is entitled in order to settle fair and equitable rent to determine all questions that may arise under S. 105-A or S. 106. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmed Hossain (2). In Aktowli v. Tarak Nath Ghose (3), the learned Judges overruled the contention that a proceeding under S. 105 can be instituted only when there is no rent payable by the tenants to the landlord: that is when no rent has been fixed by agreement of parties. They were of opinion that S. 105 was applicable not only when no rent had been fixed but also when rent had been fixed by agreement of parties. I do not find any difficulty in holding that the Revenue Officer in the present cases had jurisdiction to enquire into the rent payable by the tenants under agreement with the landlords. In my judgment the existing rent or the previous rent means the actual rent which the tenants are liable to pay under an agreement with the landlord.

The learned Special Judge, however, has not considered all the points that require consideration in the present case. He has nowhere said, as he is required to do under S. 105 (4) or under S. 35, Ben. Ten. Act, that the rent he has fixed is in the circumstances fair and equitable. In proceedings for settling fair and equitable rent it is not enough to find that there has been an increase in the price of staple food crops but it is also necessary to find that the rent settled by the Court is fair and equitable taking all circumstances into consideration. In these cases the Assistant Settlement Officer has observed that the existing rents paid by the tenants are already higher than the rates in the neighbouring mouzas. In some cases the learned Assistant Settlement Officer holds that the rents paid by these tenants are double the rates prevailing in the neighbouring mouzas. In some cases the tenants say that the rents paid by them are too high considering the nature of the lands held by them in the beels. The Special Judge when raising the rent now paid by the tenants from 10-annas per bigha to Re. 1 per bigha is required more than in ordinary cases to enquire whether the rent fixed by him which comes to about double the rent now paid by the tenants is fair and equitable and whether the Court shall in these cases decree any enhancement which may be unfair or inequitable. These cases therefore must go back to the learned Judge for consideration of all the circumstances in these cases and for finding if these cases are proper cases in which enhancement should be allowed under S. 30 even though there has been a rise in the price of staple food crops. I may mention that the present proceedings were not for the purpose of correction of an entry in the Record-of-Rights relating to rent. The plaintiff's claim is to enhance the rent under S. 30 on the existing rent. If the Court therefore holds that in the circumstances of these cases the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any enhancement on the ground that it would not be fair and equitable, the plaintiffs' application should be dismissed. If on the other hand the Court holds that the plaintiffs are entitled to some enhancement the Court of appeal below would determine what enhancement should be allowed as fair and equitable and on what rent.

As the cases are going back for a consideration of these points it seems to me to be fair that another question on which the two lower Courts have differed be reconsidered. The documents upon which the learned Special Judge has relied for his finding that the landlord granted mahakup of 6-annas or 7-annas in the rupee on condition of the tenants growing indigo and that the tenants agreed to such arrangement are the jamabandis of 1293 and 1309. With regard to the jamabandi of 1293, the first Court accepted it presumably on the ground that it is more than 30 years old. But with regard to the jamabandi of 1309 that Court says that there is no evidence to prove that the signatures upon those papers were those of the defendants or their predecessors. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the jamabandis of 1293 and 1305 were signed by the tenant defendants; but he has given no reason nor has he discussed the evidence to show that the observation on those documents made by the trial Court was not justified. The learned Judge therefore will consider the question as to whether the defendants in these cases are bound by any agreement with the landlord to pay the full rent when demanded from them. As regards the other issues raised they must be taken to have been finally settled by the decision of the Court below.

The result is that the decrees of the Special Judge are set aside and the cases sent back to that officer for a rehearing of the appeal on the points indicated above on the evidence on the record. Costs will be at the discretion of the lower appellate Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Appeal No. 173 of 1925, Decided on 1st December 1927, from original decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, Alipur, D/- 6th August 1925.

* (a) Landlord and Tenant—Covenant for renewal on expiry of lease—Lease expiring when lessor would already have ceased to have interest in certain share of property—Covenant for renewal with regard to that share cannot be said to be contract which in its inception was binding on land—Covenant is personal and enforceable only if lessor acquired fresh interest in that share—T. P. Act, S. 40.

Where a covenant for renewal of the entire lease was intended to come into operation after the expiry of the term of that lease, before which, however, the lessor would have ceased to have any interest in a certain share,

Held: that it cannot be said that the covenant of renewal with regard to that share was a contract which in its inception was binding on the land. The covenant with regard to that share must, therefore, be considered to be a mere personal covenant which could be enforced against the lessor if he had got a fresh interest in that share, and not one which can be said to run with the land. [P 54 C 1]

* (b) Hindu Law—Guardian—Mother cannot by contracting as guardian bind infant son's interest subsisting in property or which he might acquire subsequently in the property.

A Hindu mother acting as guardian for her infant son, cannot possibly bind any interest which the son might acquire in certain property. Even if the infant has any subsisting interest in the property, the mother as guardian cannot enter into any contract on behalf of the infant which would be binding on him: 39 Cal. 1232 (P.C.), Rel. on. [P 54 C 1]

A void contract cannot be made good by ratification. [P 54 C 1]

* * (d) Landlord and Tenant—Covenant for renewal of lease does not operate as present demise but is only a contract enforceable by specific performance—It does not form part of demise but is separate contract—Ratification of lease does not amount to ratification of such covenant.

The covenant for renewal does not operate as a present demise but is a mere contract, which can only be given effect to in case of refusal to perform it by the lessor, or by enforcing specific performance of the contract by the lessee. These covenants do not form part of the demise, and as the contract of the lease and the covenant for renewal are two separate contracts, the ratification of the lease does not necessarily amount to a ratification of the co-tenant for renewal: Raffety v. Schofield, (1897) 1 Ch. 937; Sherwood v. Tucker, (1924) 2 Ch. 440; Hand v. Hall, 2 Ex. D. 353; 17 Cal. 548; and A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 514; Rel.on. [P 54 C 2, P 55 C 1]

* (e) Landlord and Tenant—Right for renewal is only privilege granted to lessee—Renewal can only be of contract as made—If position of parties changes, renewal cannot be enforced.

The right of renewal is a privilege granted to the lessee, [Bastin v. Bidwell, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 238 and Finch v. Underwood, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 310, Ref.], and therefore, the renewal can only be of the contract as made. For example, if the contract is made with tenants, one of them cannot enforce the contract, or where the position of the parties changes, the renewal cannot be enforced: Finch v. Underwood, (1876) 2 Ch. D. 310 and Hollies Stores Ltd. v. Timmis, (1921) 2 Ch. 202, Ref. [P 55 C 1]

(f) Landlord and Tenant—Contract to renew lease—Taking of rent by lessor's transferee during term of lease, only precludes him from disputing lessee's right of possession but does not bind him to renew lease.

Where there is a contract to renew the lease, taking of the rent by the lessor's transferee during the term of the lease means that the lessor's transferee was precluded from disputing the lessee's right to remain in possession by virtue of the lease. But that cannot import the other condition that he was bound to renew the lease after the term had expired. [P 55 C 2]

Alienations by a widow in certain circumstances may be binding upon the reversioners, but it is difficult to say that a covenant for renewing a lease to take effect after the death of the widow would be so binding under any circumstances. [P 56 C 1]

(h) Contract—Liability—Contract to make grant in future does not necessarily stand on same footing as alienation.

A covenant for renewal does not operate as a present demise but is only a contract, and a contract to make a grant in future does not necessarily stand on the same footing as an alienation. [P 56 C 1] of a lease at rent to be fixed by lessor could not be performed and the lessees were not prepared to pay rent, for the entire leasehold, as demised by the lease, to the lessor; for a small portion of the land as to which contract was enforceable.

Held: that the Court cannot make a new contract for the parties by splitting up the demised premises and apportion the rent payable for that portion only. [P 56 C 2]

B. B. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, 24 Parganas, dated 6th August 1925. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment and for mesne profits or, in the alternative, if the Court holds that the plaintiff is bound to grant a lease to the defendants, then for fixing the rent at the rate of Rs. 25 per cottah per mensem. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the claim for ejectment and for mesne profits but has directed that the plaintiff is bound to grant a lease to the defendants in terms of the contract, I shall relate presently, at the rent of Rs. 5 per cotta per mensem.

The facts of the case giving rise to this litigation are as follows: The property in suit along with other properties belonged to one Jadab Krishna Singha. He died in the year 1867 leaving his mother Padmamani, two widows Lakshmipriya and Fulkumari and a daughter Prohabati, him surviving. After his death, Fulkumari brought a suit for partition which ended in a compromise. Under the compromise, Padmamani Lakshmipriya and Fulkumari each got one-third of the estate left by Jadab Krishna. Lakshmipriya died in 1878 and, therefore, Fulkumari got two-thirds of the estate left by Jadab Krishna as the successor of Lakshmipriya's interest. There was subsequently a suit by certain creditors against Fulkumari who obtained a decree in the Munsif's Court and put her interest to sale. It was purchased by one Krishna Prosad on 28th February 1883. On 16th July 1888, Prohabati purchased the two-thirds share from Krishna Prosad and she thus became entitled to the two-thirds share in the estate having purchased the widow's interest of Fulkumari in it. On 26th May 1895, Padmamani granted a lease of her one-third share to Prabhabati for 21 years. The lease was to terminate in May 1916.

On 11th July 1902 Prabhavati granted a lease to the predecessors of the defendants of the disputed property and its contiguous portion for a period of 20 years. The lease was to commence from 17th March 1902 and it was to terminate on 17th March 1922. Prabhavati had three sons at the time: Ajay, Achal and Ashoke. Ajay and Achal had attained majority but Ashoke was a minor. In the lease Ajay and Achal joined their mother although they could possibly have no interest in the property under the law and Prabhavati purported to execute it as guardian for Ashoke. It should be stated here that Prabhavati's husband was alive and at that time he was the natural guardian of the minor Ashoke. In the lease there was a stipulation that the major lessors would procure confirmation of the lease from Ashoke on his attaining majority and there was an indemnity clause if they failed to do so. Although nothing turns upon that, it should be stated that no deed of confirmation, as stipulated, was executed or registered by Ashoke on his attaining majority. In this lease there was a clause for renewal for 10 years after the expiry of the term at the option of the lessees. It is stated at the place where the demise has been made for 20 years down to 17th March 1922, that at the option of the lessee the lease would continue for a further term of ten years to be determinable nevertheless under certain circumstances which it is unnecessary to mention. At the end of the document there is the stipulation which should be given in extenso:

"Provided also and it is hereby agreed that if the lessees shall be desirous of taking a new lease of the premises hereby demised after the expiration of the said term of 20 years hereby granted the lessor and all other necessary parties if any will make and execute to the lessees at their costs a new and effectual lease of all and singular the said premises hereby granted or demised for a term of ten years to commence from and after the expiration of the term hereby granted at and under the like rents and dues but in case of the said business of the lessees being at the time in a flourishing condition and the said demised premises having increased in value at and under the rents and dues to be fixed by the lessor on reference to aforesaid circumstances and subject to the like covenants and provisions as are herein contained etc."

In the year 1909 there was further trouble among the ladies which was settled by the three ladies i. e., Padmamani, Fulkumari and Prabhavati, surrendering their estates in favour of the three reversionary heirs of Jadab Krishna viz., Ajay, Achal and Ashoke on certain conditions as to receipt of maintenance by Padmamani and Fulkumari. These three grandsons of Jadab Krishna in their turn executed a document in favour of their father and mother giving them the right to enjoy the usufruct of all the properties they had thus obtained during their lifetime. The husband of Prabhavati died in the year 1912. Prabhavati herself died on 11th April 1916. In the meantime, Padmamani died in the year 1913. Fulkumari is still alive. On 15th September 1917 the three brothers effected a partition of their properties including the property which had been leased by Prabhavati to the defendant's predecessors. The division of these properties was made by metes and bounds. They were divided into three plots and after partition, plot A fell to the share of Ashoke, plot B to the share of Ajay and plot C to the share of Achal. The areas of these three plots are different, apparently having regard to their value. After the partition, the rent payable by the defendants' predecessors which was Rs. 220, was divided. Ashoke was to get Rs. 82, Ajay another sum of Rs. 82, and Achal Rs. 56 per month; and all these three brothers separately realized their rent in that share. The present plaintiff then purchased plot A from Ashoke by a deed dated 20th October 1917. Then there was a dispute between the plaintiff and the predecessors of the defendants and the plaintiff brought a suit for ejectment. That was settled by the defendants' predecessors purchasing a half-share of the property which the plaintiff had purchased from Ashoke by a deed dated 1st August 1921, the purchase price being at the rate of Rs. 3000 per cotta.

Since then, the defendants had been paying rent at the rate of Rs. 41 to the plaintiff. The present suit, as I have already stated, was brought mainly for ejectment on 5th June 1923. The plaintiff alleges that after the expiry of the term of the lease granted by Prabhavati, which term expired on 17th March 1922, the defendants have no right to remain on the land and if they desire to remain on the land, they are bound to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 25 per cotta. The allegation of the defendants shortly stated is that the plaintiff has no title to the property in question; secondly, that they are entitled to remain on the land in the exercise of their option to get a renewal of the lease according to the terms contained in the lease dated 11th July 1902 and the rent payable by them for the portion of the property now in the plaintiff's possession must be at the rate per cotta at which the rate of rent should be worked out according to the original lease with reference to the whole area, which appears to be Rs. 1-1-0 per cotta. Several issues were framed in the Court below. The principal question for decision was covered by issues, 5, 6 and 8 and the controversy before us was mainly with regard to these. They are as follows:

" 5th : Is the claim for renewal of the lease valid and binding on the plaintiff and is the defendant entitled to have the lease renewed ? If so, on what terms ?

6th: Was the lease in question confirmed and ratified by the plaintiff's vendor ?

8th : Has the position of the defendants been changed by their purchase ? "

All these issues were decided against the plaintiff by the Subordinate Judge. With regard to issue 10 which runs thus: What will be the fair rent of the property ? the Subordinate Judge decided that the fair rent would be Rs. 5 per cotta per mensem. It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in deciding issues 5, 6 and 8 against the plaintiff and that he is entitled to claim ejectment after the expiry of the lease. With regard to issue 10 the plaintiff's contention is that if he is considered to be bound to renew the lease, it should be at the rate demanded by him, that is to say, Rs. 25 per cotta per month or, at any rate, Rs. 12 per cotta, as that would be the fair rent according to the value of the property which was purchased by the defendants themselves at the rate of Rs. 3000 per cotta. He, however, contends that it is not left to the Court to decide what should be the fair rent of the property, as under the agreement contained in the lease it was the lessor who was entitled to fix the rent as he thought proper and the Court has no authority to interfere with the rent fixed by the lessor. The defendants have also filed a cross-objection with regard to the rate of rent fixed by the Court and their objection is that the rent should be at the rate Re. 1-1 per cotta which should be calculated from the original rent fixed at Rs. 220 for the entire area.

There cannot be any question that the plaintiff would be entitled to ejectment unless the defendants could show that they are entitled to enforce the covenant for renewal as against the plaintiff. The principal question, therefore, is whether the covenant for renewal contained in the lease of July 1902 is enforceable as against the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has apparently proceeded upon the view that Prabhavati had a Hindu widow's estate as daughter of Jadab when she granted the lease in favour of the defendants' predecessors. He has found that Ashoke after attaining majority had ratified the lease by receiving rent from the defendants for a number of years. Ashoke is, therefore, bound by all the terms of the lease and also by the covenant for renewal, as the learned Judge was of opinion that it would be inequitable to hold otherwise. He held that

"the renewal clause is as much an important part of the lease as the other clauses, and it must be taken that Ashoke ratified the entire contract with the covenant for renewal and not without it."

In that view, he held that the plaintiff as assignee of Ashoke is bound by the covenant for renewal. He has also held that the letters of the plaintiff in reply to the demand for renewal made on behalf of the defendants show that the plaintiff was willing to be bound by the renewal clause and these letters prove a clear admission of the plaintiff as to the contract for renewal being enforceable as against him. I need not recite the other reasons given by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment for holding against the plaintiff as I am going to deal with the arguments addressed to us by the parties and as the learned advocate for the respondents repeated the very arguments which had been adopted by the Subordinate Judge. The first question for consideration is, is the covenant for renewal a part of the lease or, in other words, is it a part of the demise ? If that is so, then it follows that the plaintiff must fail according to the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge. In order to decide this question, it is necessary to find what was the right of Prabhavati in the property in question when she gave the lease. She had not got a Hindu widow's estate in the property. She was in possession as purchaser of the interest of Fulkumari who had a Hindu widow's estate. This interest was to last during the lifetime of Fulkumari, that is, with regard to two-thirds of the property. With regard to the remaining one-third, she held under a lease from Padmamani which was to come to an end in May 1916. The covenant for renewal of the entire lease after 17th March 1922 was intended to come into operation after the expiry of the term of that lease when Prabhabati would have no interest in that one-third share. Can it be said that the covenant of renewal with regard to this one-third share was a contract which in its inception was binding on the land? I think not. The covenant with regard to that share must, therefore, be considered to be a mere personal covenant which could be enforced against her if she had got a fresh lease herself and not one which can be said to run with the land. Again, if Prabhabati had executed the lease in the capacity of a qualified owner having a Hindu widow's estate (which she had not at that time) then her sons had no interest in the property at the time and Prabhabati, acting as guardian for the infant son, could not possibly bind any interest which the son might acquire after the death of the ladies. Even if the infant had any subsisting interest in the property, Prabhabati as guardian could not enter into any contract on behalf of the infant which would be binding on him: see the case of Sarwarjan v. Fakruddin Mahomed (1). This proposition is not contested by the learned advocate for the respondents. The contract, therefore, is altogether void so far as Ashoke is concerned and being a void contract, it cannot be said to be effective by ratification as a void contract cannot be made good by ratification. It is further to be borne in mind that Prabhabati was not the natural guardian of Ashoke but his father would be so. The Subordinate Judge seems, therefore, to be under an error when he held that Ashoke was bound by the contract for renewal of the lease, as he had ratified the lease by acceptance of rent.

Then, again, assuming that the covenant by Prabhabati could be binding on Ashoke by ratification, the question arises as to whether by ratification of the lease itself, it can be said that the covenant for renewal has been ratified. In order to hold that, it must be found that the covenant for renewal is a part of the demise. It is not disputed on behalf of the respondents that the covenant for renewal is a mere contract, which can only be given effect to in case of refusal to perform it by the lessor, by enforcing specific performance of the contract by the lessee. That these covenants do not form part of the demise has been laid down in some English cases. An option of purchase is analogous to the right of renewal. It has been held that it is a covenant quite apart from the demise, although arising by reason of the demise and flowing from it: See the case of Raffety v. Schofield (2). In Sherwood v. Tucker (3) p. 445, Pollock, M. R. observed that:

"a distinction is to be drawn between the demise and the contract under which the option to purchase was given. They are essentially different."

It has been argued on behalf of the respondents that an option of purchase and an option for renewal are quite different and Woodall v. Clifton (4) is relied on. The difference, however, is an anomaly in the English law as pointed out by Romer, L. J. at p. 279 of the report and we are not here concerned with the anomalous distinction between the two. It is again urged, relying on an old English case, that a covenant for renewal creates a lien. That does not mean that any present interest is created in the land by such a covenant. I may here refer to the case of Hand v. Hall (5) where Lord Cairns, L. C. speaking of a lease and a covenant for renewal contained in it observes:

"Whereas there is not anything to be done by the tenant in the first part of the agreement to create a demise, in the second part something has to be done by him before that part takes effect, and until that is done it is impossible to tell whether a tenancy shall come into force or not. I think, therefore, that it is absolutely necessary to divide the contract into two parts. I think the agreement is an actual demise, with a stipulation superadded that if at his option the tenant gives the landlord a notice of his intention to remain, he shall have a renewal of his tenancy for three years and a half."

It has also been held in this Court that a covenant for renewal does not operate as a present demise but remains only a contract. Boyd v. Kreig (6), Basanta Charan v. Rajani Mohan (7). As the contract of the lease and the covenant for renewal are two separate contracts, in my opinion, the ratification of the lease does not necessarily amount to a ratification of the covenant for renewal. The ground, therefore, upon which the Subordinate Judge held that Ashoke was bound by the covenant for renewal as he had ratified the lease by acceptance of rent does not appear to be at all sound.

There is another difficulty in the way of the defendants in enforcing the term of the renewal and it is that the contract, as it was made in the lease of 1902, cannot be sought to be enforced as it was made nor is it sought to be enforced in its entirety. It has been held that the right of renewal is a privilege granted to the lessee: See the cases of Bastin v. Bidwell (8) per Kay, J., Finch v. Underwood (9) per James, L. J. and, therefore the renewal can only be of the contract as made. For example, if the contract is made with two tenants, one of them cannot enforce the contract: see Finch v. Underwood (9). In Hollies Stores Ltd. v. Timmis (10) the covenant for renewal was made on condition that there should be three guarantors named for the payment of the rent. One of the named guarantors died during the currency of the lease and the tenant sought to exercise the option of renewal either by substituting another guarantor for the deceased guarantor or by putting in the entire rent for the whole period of the renewal. The Court refused the claim for renewal on the ground that the contract should be performed as it was made and as that cannot be done even if there was no reasonable ground for the landlord to refuse specific performance, the Court would not enforce it. In the present case, the contract for renewal as made is incapable of performance. As I have already observed, there was a division of the property among the three brothers. Subsequently, the defendants purchased one-half of the interest which originally belonged to one of the brothers.

The defendants had acquiesced in the partition by agreeing to pay rent separately to each of them according to the different shares which, the brothers thought, were their just shares. The position, therefore, of the parties not being the same as it was when the contract was entered into, even assuming that Prabhavati's contract would be binding on Ashoke, Ashoke's assignee may very well say that:

"the contract which the defendants now seek to enforce is quite a different contract from what was entered into and I am, therefore, not bound to carry it out."

The learned advocate for the respondents, however, argues that when Asoke took rent from the defendants, he must be considered to have been aware of the covenant in the lease and knowing the terms of the lease as well as the covenant he never repudiated the covenant for renewal and it must, therefore, be held that Ashoke tacitly entered into a fresh contract for renewal of the lease. This argument seems to me to be too far-fetched. In order to bind a person on the allegation that he entered into a contract for doing a certain thing, there must be definite evidence that he did actually enter into a contract and I am, therefore, unable to accept this contention. It is, again, urged that the plaintiff himself did the very same thing, that is, took rent from the defendants for his share. The answer is, that the taking of the rent during the term of the lease means that the plaintiff was precluded from disputing the defendants' right to remain in possession by virtue of the lease. But that cannot import the other condition that he was bound to renew the lease after the term had expired. Here I may state another contention on behalf of the respondents and it is that the defendants in their correspondence accept the terms of the lease including the right of renewal. Special reference is made to Ex. D (1) a letter the plaintiff's solicitor wrote in reply to the letter of the solicitor for the defendants asking for renewal of the lease. The plaintiff said that he was willing to renew the lease if rent was paid at the rate of Rs. 25 per cotta per month. That does not mean that he was willing to renew the lease on any other terms. The letter must be read as a whole in order to understand the attitude of the plaintiff. It, therefore, does not seem to me that the plaintiff can be said in any way to have entered into a fresh contract for the purpose of renewing the lease which was granted by Prabhabati.

There is another difficulty in the way of the plaintiff as to the right which Ashoke had obtained. Prabhabati, as I have already stated, was in possession as a purchaser of Fulkumari's estate. In 1909, all the three ladies surrendered their qualified interest in favour of the grandsons of Jadab Krishna. The effect of such surrender is that the grandsons took the estate as it was at the time of their grandfather, Jadab Krishna Singha, and they might very well urge that they are not bound by covenant made by Prabhabati, although by reason of the fact that they had accepted rent from the defendants, they could not dispute the defendants' right to remain on the land till March 1922. In the view I take, it is not necessary for me to discuss the question as to the right of a qualified owner like a Hindu widow to grant a lease for a term of years with a clause for renewal at the option of the lessee, particularly as to what would be the effect of such a covenant after the death of the widow. It seems to me that it is at least doubtful that a Hindu widow can enter into such a covenant so as to bind the reversioner. Alienations by a widow in certain circumstances may be binding upon the reversioners; but it is difficult to say that a covenant for renewing a lease to take effect after the death of the widow would be so binding under any circumstances. It need only be added that a covenant for renewal does not operate as a present demise but is only a contract, and a contract to make a grant in future does not necessarily stand on the same footing as an alienation. On these grounds, in my judgment, the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the defendants are entitled to enforce the right of renewal of the lease according to the agreement entered into by Prabhabati in 1902.

Another question was argued on behalf of the respondents and it was that although the whole of the contract cannot be performed under S. 15, Specific Relief Act, the defendants may be allowed to enforce the contract with regard to the part of the property now in the possession of the plaintiff. This section, in my judgment, does not entitle the defendants to ask for specific performance of the agreement with regard to the small portion of the property which now remains in the possession of the plaintiff on payment of a proportionate part of the rent. The defendants are not prepared to pay rent for the entire lease hold as demised by the lease of 1902 to the plaintiff for this small portion of the land and I do not think that we can make a new contract for the parties by splitting up the demised premises and apportion the rent payable for that portion only. As the defendants, in my judgment, are not entitled to enforce specific performance of the covenant for renewal, they have no right to remain on the land and the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for ejectment.

I should, however, express my opinion with regard to another point which was urged by the learned advocate for the appellant and it is that the Court was left no discretion by the terms of the covenant to fix a fair rent even if the defendants are held to be entitled to enforce the contract. That portion of the covenant has already been recited. It is not that the tenants would be bound to pay a fair and reasonable rent in which case the Court might have assessed the rent. Here the discretion is entirely in the lessor and the lessor may fix any rent that he pleases. It is, however, contended by the learned advocate for the respondents that the lessor was bound to fix the rent by taking into consideration the fact whether the business of the lessee was in a flourishing condition or not and whether the value of the premises had increased. With regard to the increase of the value of the premises, there is no dispute; but it is stated that the condition of the business of the lessee was not flourishing. That is a matter of opinion only and if the plaintiff thought that the business of the lessee was in a flourishing condition he might then fix such rent as he pleased. The Subordinate Judge himself does not accept the story that the business of the defendants was not in a flourishing condition. In my opinion, if the defendants want to stay on the land and if I had thought that they were entitled to a decree for renewal of the lease, I should have held that they were bound to pay the rent demanded by the lessor, however unreasonable that might be. At any rate, as the plaintiff has asked for as a last resort, the rent would be calculated at the rate of Rs. 12 per month on the price of the property which was paid by the defendants for the half-share originally belonging to Ashoke. This disposes of the cross-objection of the defendants which was with regard to the rate of rent. This appeal must, therefore, be decreed. The plaintiff's prayer for khas possession should be allowed and he is also entitled to claim mesne profits for the property from after the date of the expiry of the lease of 1902, that is, 17th March 1922, till the date of recovery of possession. Under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., the Court will hold an enquiry as to such mesne profits which have accrued from 18th March 1922 till the date of delivery of possession or such other time as provided in the rule and the Court below will pass a final decree for mesne profits in accordance with the result of such enquiry. The plaintiff appellant is entitled to the costs of both Courts. The cross-objection is dismissed without costs.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 715 of 1927 Decided on 24th April 1928, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Mymensingh.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 282—Judge can discharge juror for misconduct and either add new juror or discharge jury and empanel fresh jury.

The Code makes no provision for dealing with a jury or jurors guilty of misconduct. The Judge has an inherent power to discharge a jury for misconduct: [A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 724, Foll.] So where a juror-misconducts himself he should be discharged and either a new juror added or the whole jury discharged and a fresh jury empanelled. Such juror may be taken from the persons present in the Court-room. [P 58 C 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 172—Judge can refer to police diaries even after verdict of jury.

If the Judge could refer to the diaries before the verdict of the jury he could obviously refer to them after the verdict as the trial does not end with the verdict. [P 58 C 2]

* (c) Criminal P. C., S. 298—Judge has to determine whether evidence does corroborate approver as to complicity of accused.

Per Cuming J.—It is doubtful whether the Judge has to determine whether there is any evidence that does corroborate the story of the approver so far as the complicity of the accused is concerned, that being a question of facts: 19 C. W. N. 653 and Ryder v. Wombwell, 4 Ex. 32, Discussed and Doubtful. [P 59 C 1]

(d) Practice—Codified law cannot be modified by rules of practice made to meet-changing conditions—Every small modification must be by legislation—Interpretation of statutes.

When law has been codified, it cannot be modified gradually from day to day as the changing circumstances of a community, require, by rules of practice made to meet these imperceptibly changing conditions. Any modification, however small, must be made by the legislature, when a suitable opportunity arrives. [P 60 C 1]

(e) Criminal P. C., Ss. 298 and 299—Jury should find facts upon evidence before them and be guided by law applicable which Judge should explain to them.

In a trial by jury it is the function of the jury to find the facts upon the evidence laid before them and for that purpose to be guided by the law which is applicable, and it is in all cases the duty of the Judge to point out to them that law: 21 W. R. 69 Cr., Foll.

(f) Criminal P. C., Ss. 298 and 299—Question as to what amounts to or does not amount to evidence is question of law to be decided by Judge.

The law of evidence is part of the general law. The question as to what is, or is not evidence, that is to say, what amounts or does not amount in law to evidence is a question of law to be decided by the Judge as is the question whether there is any evidence in law to go to the jury. [P 60 C 2]

(g) Evidence Act, S. 114, Ill (b)—Corroboration in material particulars connecting each accused with offence is required and not in every material particular.

It is not all evidence corroborating the accomplice's story, which comes within the rule requiring corroboration. The corroboration indicated in S. 114, Ill-(b), is corroboration in material particulars and these particulars must be such as to connect or identify each of the accused with the offence: [R. v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K. B. 658.] It is not necessary that the accomplice should be corroborated in every material particular. [P 60 C 2]

(h) Evidence Act, S. 133 — Confirmation only on truth of history told by accomplice without identifying persons is no corroboration.

A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history, without identifying the persons, that is no corroboration at all: R. v. Farler, 8 C. and P. 106 and R. v. Elahi Bux, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 459 (F.B.), Foll.

(i) Criminal P. C., Ss. 298 and 299—Judge must not tell jury that certain witness does corroborate accomplice, that being for jury to decide.

Per Lord-Williams, J.—The Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accomplice. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not. [P 61 C 1]

*(j) Criminal P. C., S. 298—Omission to direct jury's attention to portions corroborating evidence in law is non-direction but it is misdirection if Judge points out portions as fulfilling requirement though in fact they do not.

Though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the corroborative evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements already stated, when in fact they do not do so: 29 Cal. 782, Foll. [P 61 C 1]

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal by two persons Rebati Mohan Chakravarti alias Rebati Thakur and Jabbar Sheik alias Abdul Jabbar. These two persons were tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Mymensingh sitting with a jury on a charge of dacoity under S. 395, I. P. C., and also under S. 397. The jury unanimously found the two appellants not guilty under S. 397 and they unanimously found both the appellants guilty under S. 395. The learned Sessions Judge agreeing with this verdict has sentenced them both to four years' rigorous imprisonment and further to a fine of Rs. 50 each in default to suffer further imprisonment for six months.

The dacoity in question took place in the house of one Mathur Modak on the night of 10th December 1926. The dacoits used guns and some three persons were wounded in the course of the dacoity and cash and ornaments were looted.

The two appellants both pleaded not guilty. The first point raised by the appellants relates to the constitution of the jury. What happened was this. The jury was empanelled and sworn and a foreman appointed. Meanwhile another case was being tried. It was then found when the present case was called on that the foreman of the jury has been seen talking with the Court Inspector. This allegation being substantiated the Judge quite properly discharged him, took another gentleman who was present, empanelled him and proceeded with the case. 'I may say at once that the objection is a technical one for it is not suggested that the accused was in any way prejudiced by what happened. He contended that the only course open to the Judge was to discharge the whole jury and empanel a new one. The Code strange to say makes no provision for dealing with a jury or jurors guilty of misconduct. The only section dealing with the discharge of a jury is S. 282, Criminal P. C., which provides what was to be done in the case of illness of a juror. It has, however, been held that the Judge has an inherent power to discharge a jury for misconduct. Rahim Sheik v. Emperor (1) a decision to which I was myself a party.

It seems to me that the present case should be dealt with on an analogy with S. 282, Criminal P. C. and that where a juror misconducts himself he should be discharged and either a new juror added or the whole jury discharged and a fresh jury empanelled. If the learned Judge decided that he should empanel a new jury how is the new juror to be chosen. S. 282 must I think contemplate the application of S. 276 (secondly) and that such juror may be taken from the persons present in the Court-room there being none of the summoned jurors present. That is what was done in the present case and so far as I can see there is no objection to it. There is no substance therefore in this contention.

The next point taken is equally technical. After the verdict was given the Judge stated that he would look at the police diaries before deciding whether he would refer the case under S. 307. Having done so he accepted the verdict of the jury and convicted the accused.

Under S. 172, Criminal P. C. the Court may send for the police diaries and use them not as evidence in the case but to aid it in such enquiry or trial. It is contended that the trial was finished with the verdict of the jury and that after that the Judge could not refer to the diaries. If, however, he could refer to the diaries before the verdict, he could obviously refer to them after the verdict.

Neither is the trial ended with the verdict of the jury for the Judge still has to decide whether he will accept it or refer the case and if referred the trial is co tinued in the High Court. By using the diaries for the purpose of determining if he would refer the case the Judge is using them for the purpose of the trial. This point has no substance whatever.

The next point raised is one of misdirection. In this case there was an approver and the appellants contend that there is no evidence to corroborate the approver as to the part taken by the present appellants in the dacoity and that the Judge should have told the jury so. The prosecution no doubt have produced evidence which they allege corroborates the story of the approver as to the complicity of the present appellant in the dacoity.

The appellants contend, however, that the evidence does not raise any inference whatever as to the complicity of the present appellants in the dacoity. The appellants now contend that the Judge must determine whether a particular piece of evidence does or does not corroborate the story of the approver as to the complicity of the accused persons and then tell the jury that such and such evidence does corroborate the approver with regard to the complicity of the accused.

It has been held that it is the duty of the Judge to determine whether any evidence has been given on which the jury can properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. [See Emperor v. Upendra Nath Das, (2), See also Ryder v. Wombwell (3).]

From this no doubt the principle may be deduced that it is for the Judge to determine whether there is any evidence that does corroborate the story of the approver so far as the complicity of the present appellants is concerned.

In Ryder v. Wombwell (3) this has been described as a preliminary question which is one of law for the Judge to decide.

Speaking for myself I have the greatest difficulty in understanding how the question whether one fact is corroborated by another fact can be anything but a question of fact itself.

The approver states as a fact that a certain person went with him to commit a dacoity. Whether this approver and this person went to commit a dacoity is a question of fact. That the approver makes the statement in Court is a fact. That another person saw the approver and the said person at a certain place is a fact. It is this fact that is sought to be used to corroborate either the statement of the approver which is itself a fact that the person went with him to commit a dacoity or it may said to corroborate the fact that the approver and the said person went to commit a dacoity. In either case it is a fact which is used to corroborate another fact. In any view of the case both are statements of fact and a statement of fact is itself a fact. Whether one fact corroborates another would seem to be a question of fact. However the principle that such a question is one of law has apparently been adopted by our Courts and I am obliged to follow it. In the present case there was evidence that might I think be held to corroborate the approver's statement as to the complicity of these two appellants. There is the statement of Ainuddin Jamadar that on the day of the occurrence he saw Rehabali and Jabbar with the approver Oli at Pauli Ghat. The Ghat is about 3 miles from the place of occurrence and some 6 or 7 miles from the appellant's house. The jury might be justified in holding that this fact did corroborate the story of the approver as to the complicity of the two appellants in the dacoity.

It cannot therefore be said that there was no evidence to go to the jury which would corroborate the evidence of the approver as to the complicity of these appellants in the dacoity.

In my opinion the appellants have failed to prove anything which could be construed as a misdirection or a point of law which the Judge has wrongly decided. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree generally with the conclusions at which my learned brother has arrived and I have nothing to add on the two first points. With regard to the third point, the law in this country affecting the evidence of accomplices is contained in Ss. 133 and 114 Ill. (b), Evidence Act. These two sections read together coincide with the rule formerly observed in England and laid down in India prior to the passing of the Act. In England the permission given by law to the jury to presume that an accomplince's evidence is unworthy of credit, has in practice, owing to growing experience of the unreliability of such evidence, gradually become a duty to treat it as such, except in very exceptional cases. And this rule of practice has been followed so universally that it has become almost a rule of law—and according to Taylor on Evidence, other authors deserve all the reverence of law—in accordance with this rule English Judges have directed juries and any omission so to do, would be a ground for setting aside the conviction. In India, I find that a similar procedure has been adopted. It has been laid down in Re : Proceedings dated 20th March 1868 (4), and in a number of other cases, that the proper course for a Judge is to inform the jury that there is no rule in law prohibiting the conviction of an offender upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice but that as a rule of practice it is considered unsafe to convict upon such evidence and then to point out circumstances, if any, in the particular case, for relying upon the evidence, and the omission so to caution the jury was in Queen-Empress v. Arumuga (5) held to be a misdirection requiring the reversal of the verdict, and in many other cases has been held to be an error in law justifying such reversal.

This seems to me in effect to amount to a direction in accordance with the present English practice, viz., that the jury ought to draw the presumption that an accomplice's evidence is unworthy of credit, unless there are some exceptional circumstances in the case which rebut that presumption. But this does not seem to me to be in accordance with S. 114 Ill. (b), Evidence Act, and when law has been codified, it cannot be modified gradually from day to day as the changing circumstances of a community require by rules of practice made to meet those imperceptibly changing conditions. Any modification, however small, must be made by the legislature, when a suitable opportunity arrives.

In a trial by jury it is the function of the jury to find the facts upon the evidence laid before them and for that purpose to be guided by the law which is applicable, and it is in all cases the duty of the Judge to point out to them that law. Phear, J., Queen v. Sadhu Mundul (6). The law of evidence is part of the general law. The question as to what is or is not evidence, that is to say what amounts or does not amount in law to evidence is a question of law, to be decided by the Judge, as is the question whether there is any evidence in law to go to the jury.

Similarly the question as to what is or is not, what amounts or does not amount to corroborative evidence in law is a question of law to be decided by the Judge. It is not all evidence corroborating the accomplice's story, which comes within the rule requiring corroboration. The corroboration indicated in S. 114, Ill. (b), is corroboration in material particulars and these particulars must be such as to connect or identify each of the accused with the offence. This part of the law of evidence has been the subject of a very large number of Indian decisions, and the English cases have been reviewed in R. V. Baskerville, (7) The heading of that case is as follows:

"Where on the trial of an accused person evidence is given against him by an accomplice, the corroboration, which the common law requires is corroboration in some material particular tending to show that the accused committed the crime charged. It is not enough that the corroboration shows the witness to have told the truth in matters unconnected with the guilt of the accused."

In other words, the corroboration must be in some material particular implicating the accused. As was said in R. v. Farler (8) and R. v. Elahi Bux (9), and other cases, a man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history, without identifying the persons, that is no corroboration at all. Consequently, just "as it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury" as to what portions of the evidence amount to evidence in accordance with law, and to lay before them such evidence only and to direct them to reject any evidence which may have been given, but which does not amount to evidence in accordance with law, similarly it is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story which do or do not fulfil the requirements to which I have already referred. There are several Indian decisions on this point including one in Ratanlal's Reports at p. 840. But the Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accused. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not. And though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the corroborative evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction—it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements already stated, when in fact they do not do so. On this question there is a case which is directly in point viz., Jamiruddi Masalli v. Emperor (10) decided by Prinsep, J., and Stephen, J., the head-note of which reads as follows :

"A sessions Judge in laying the evidence of an approver before the jury stated in his charge : 'If you think that the approver's story is worthy of credit in itself, you have to consider whether it has been corroborated on material points,' and then, after describing what in his opinion were 'the points of corroboration,' told the jury that 'the above are the points on which the evidence has been corroborated, and that corroboration is full and complete, if you believe it.' 'You have to consider these points and decide, whether the approver has been corroborated in material points, and, if you find that to be so, then you have in his story sufficient evidence to connect all three accused with the crime,' Held, that this was not a proper way to place the case before the jury."

The Sessions Judge should have told the jury that, although the law permitted them to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, it was not the practice of our Courts, which have consistently held that it was not safe or proper to convict on such evidence without some corroboration sufficient to connect each of the accused with the offence committed. With this caution the Sessions Judge should have laid before the jury the evidence corroborating the statement of the accomplice. The nature of the corroborative evidence must be confirmatory of some of the leading story of the approver as against the particular prisoner.

(10) [1902] 29 Cal. 782=6 C. W. N. 553.

This is exactly what the learned Judge has done in the present case and what he must not do. He says on p. 12 of my copy of his charge:

"I shall now state the facts in which the approver has been corroborated." "The statements of Oli which have been corroborated are stated below," and he proceeds to lay before the jury much that does not amount to corroborative evidence of the kind required by law viz., evidence implicating the accused. I need only give one instance out of many. The learned Judge in item 5 on p. 13 sets out Oli's statement as follows :

"Near Narinda they sat on the river bank, took pan and cigarette and got ready for the dacoity."

(Oli is referring here to himself and the other accused persons including the two appellants). Then the learned Judge sets out the "evidence in corroboration" as follows :

"The investigating Sub-Inspector says that he found a Kowta on the river bank some powder was lying on the ground. Danu Talukdar (P. W. 18) says that on the night of the dacoity he went to see his paddy field when he saw 15 or 16 men seated on the bank of the river."

It is clear that neither of these pieces of evidence implicate any of the accused and certainly not either of the appellants. They do not amount therefore to corroborative evidence in the sense to which I have already referred. Moreover this method of directing the jury is apt to mislead them as to the corroborative evidence existing against each individual prisoner, and to suggest that evidence which exists against some is evidence against all.

For these reasons in my opinion the Judge has to this extent misdirected the jury.

In other respects, however, his charge is satisfactory though to my mind overloaded with detail and repetition which is apt to confuse a jury. Moreover he has to a large extent discounted the misdirection to which I have alluded, by correctly directing the jury on the same points in other parts of his lengthy charge, and as in fact there was sufficient corroborative evidence in law against the two appellants—that is to say, evidence corroborating the accomplice in some material particulars implicating the accused and as it must be remembered that it is not necessary that the accomplice should be corroborated in every material particular, I do not consider the misdirection so serious as to necessitate setting aside the conviction. I agree therefore that this appeal should be dismissed.

Five persons were accused under S. 302 and 148 and 149, Penal Code; the prosecution alleged that the offence had taken place before dark. The Judge asked the jury to give an intermediate verdict on the question whether the offence was committed before or after dark and on the jury holding that the offence was committed after dark the accused were acquitted.

Held: that there was no proper summing up to the jury and that, therefore, the verdict ought not to be allowed to stand. The law does not recognize intermediate verdicts of jurors and the procedure adopted by the Judge was in contravention of the specific provisions of the law relating to charges to the jury and to the ascertainment of their verdict. Judgment.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca dated 3rd September 1927, acquitting the accused who are five in number of charges under Ss. 148 and 302 read with 149, I. P. C. From what is stated below it will be seen that this is a most extraordinary case and it requires the interference of this Court.

The accused were tried before Mr. Waight, the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca and a jury of charges under the sections referred to above.

The case for the prosecution briefly stated was as follows:

hour before sunset one Naibali was returning home from a hat accompanied by P. W. 3 Nazamali, P. W. 4. Reazali, P. W. 5. Mahi and P. W. 7. Jinnat; that when they arrived at a spot south of the house of the accused Nasar and Ansar, Naibali was attacked by these persons who were armed with lathis and a spear and also by the accused Gyasuddin and Khawajuddin and by one Shamsuddin who were armed with daos; that Naibali fled south-wards across a field but was intercepted and seized by the accused Kitabdi, that the five assailants aforesaid came up and surrounded him and that Shamsuddin aforesaid struck him on the neck with a dao killing him instantaneously; that thereafter Gyasuddin, Khawasuddin, Kitabdi and Shamsuddin fled towards the south while Nasar and Ansar ran towards their house, that Reazali and Mohiuddin (P. W's. 4 and 5) attempted to seize those two accused but were struck with lathis and sustained severe injuries, that in support of its case, the prosecution examined 16 witnesses of whom P. W's. 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 12, and 14 testified to having seen the occurrence and to having recognized all the assailants.”

The prosecution contended and contends that the evidence on the record, both direct and circumstantial, supported the conclusion that the offence was committed before the darkness fell. It is further contended that there was evidence to the effect that the accused were well-known to the eye-witnesses and that at the time of the occurrence two of the accused named Nasar and Khawajuddin were heard calling out. It is also contended that the evidence disclosed the fact that the accused persons had reasons arising out of litigation for feeling inimically disposed towards the accused. The accused called no evidence on their behalf but contended that the murder had been committed after dark by persons who had not been recognized and that the accused had been implicated on mere suspicion. The learned Additional Sessions Judge without summing up the entire case and without charging the jury on all the issues involved drew their attention to the evidence relating to the time of the occurrence and directed them as follows:

“If you believe that the evidence upon the record indicates that the occurrence took place after darkness had fallen, that belief would necessarily involve the complete failure of the prosecution story and your complete disbelief in that story. I shall, therefore, ask you to retire to consider that one point, namely, whether you find the occurrence took place as alleged by the defence after darkness had fallen. If you find that fact to be established you will be obliged to return an immediate verdict of "Not guilty" against all the accused. On the other hand, if you are satisfied that the occurrence took place as alleged by the prosecution, during day-light, I shall proceed to charge you upon the circumstances of the occurrence. Gentlemen, you will please retire to consider your verdict upon the point which I have placed before you."

Then the jury returned after deliberation; the following communications passed between the Judge and the jury:

"Are you unanimous?" "Yes." "Do you find it proved whether the murder occurred after darkness or before? We believe it to have been committed after darkness. In that case I must direct you to return a verdict of not guilty against all the accused persons. We find all the accused persons not guilty."

It appears that after the verdict of the jury had been returned the learned Judge, although he disagreed with the view that the occurrence took place after darkness, accepted the verdict and by his order dated 3rd September acquitted the accused. The learned Judge in the sessions statement which was sent into this Court observes with reference to this case as follows:

"The jury were directed to return an intermediate verdict on the point whether the occurrence took place after darkness or before. They unanimously found that the occurrence took place after darkness and hence they were directed to return a verdict of "Not guilty" against all the accused which they did."

The contentions put forward by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer before us are two in number: firstly, that there was in this case no proper summing up to the jury and that, therefore, the verdict ought not to be allowed to stand; and, secondly, that the law does not recognize intermediate verdicts of jurors and that the procedure adopted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge is in contravention of the specific provisions of the law relating to charges to the jury and to the ascertainment of their verdict.

We are satisfied on an examination of the record that these contentions are well-founded and must be given effect to. It seems that the learned Judge adopted a short cut which he was not entitled under the law to so adopt. The result has been that the whole trial has been imperfect or, to use the words of Mr. Taluqdar who appears for the accused, highly irregular. That being so, it is our bounden duty to interfere and to direct that the verdict of the jury in this case must be set aside and that the matter should go back to Mr. Bartley, the Sessions Judge of Dacca in order that he may re-try the case against the accused in accordance with law. The accused will be re-arrested and placed before.

Mr. Bartley for orders—No separate orders are needed with reference to the connected revision case.

The Presidency Small Cause Court is not a tribunal intended or designed for the determination of substantial commercial cases. It is the duty of the Court to deal with the question of costs in a matter of this kind after a careful examination of the issues which were raised between the parties particularly for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any undue exaggeration or inflation of the claim on the part of the plaintiff in the suit and whether it was a suitable matter to be tried in the High Court rather than in the Small Cause Court. Claim and counter-claim would justify costs on amounts decreed to either party. [P 66 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application to set aside an ex-parte decree made by me on 28th November 1927 on the ground that such decree was obtained improperly and to some extent fraudulently by the plaintiffs in the suit so far as the latter allegation is concerned, it was not seriously or at any rate very strenuously pressed by Mr. Ghosh on behalf of the defendants, who are the applicants in this matter. The only allegation with regard to that seems to have been that in the course of a somewhat provocative correspondence between the attorneys to the parties, the attorney for the plaintiff concealed the fact that he was intending to apply for the decree in question. The main ground upon which the application is founded is that no notice was given under R. 30, Chap. 10 of the Rules of this Court. That rule provides that certain suits and matters should be placed in the special peremptory lists for the Courts to which they are assigned, and amongst such suits and matters are those defined in sub-Cl. (c) as being

"suits which stand for confirmation or further consideration upon the report of an officer or other Referee, and testamentary and intestate matters for argument on caveat where grounds in support of the caveat have been filed, on the requisition in writing of the attorney for any party or any party active in person, of which notice in writing shall be given by the party applying to the other party or parties."

It is conceded that in the present instance, notice in writing was not given by the party applying, that is to say, the plaintiffs in the suit, and the defendants in fact had no notice that an application was being made for the suit to be put into the special peremptory list for confirmation of the report of the Assistant Referee, who had been appointed by a decree dated 23rd June 1926 to take an account of the dealings and transactions between the parties.

The suit was originally brought for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 3451-6-3, and the Assistant Referee in his report, with the consent of the parties, stated that there was due by the defendants to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 664-8-0. Now, having regard to the fact that no notice was given by the plaintiffs to the defendants as required by R. 30, Chap. 10, it was quite clear that the decree had been irregularly obtained. Therefore, on the face of it, the defendants were entitled to have it set aside. But on the last occasion it was agreed by the parties that this application should be treated rather as an application for the re-hearing of the consideration of the report of the Assistant Referee, so that if it appeared that despite the irregularity arising from the want of notice, the decree was a proper one in the circumstances of the case, the decree should not actually be set aside but should stand as originally made. If, on the other hand, the circumstances warranted a variation of the decree, then such variation should be made accordingly.

The real point of substance in the application is the question of whether or not the decree should hold good in so far as it ordered the defendants to pay to the plaintiffs the costs of the suit and of the reference upon the footing of Scale No. 2. It was argued by Mr. Ghosh on behalf of the defendants that the matter is one to which S. 22, Presidency Small Cause Court Act applies, and that therefore seeing that the plaintiffs in fact were found entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 664-8-0 only, which is a sum less than Rs. 1000, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any costs at all by reason of the fact that the suit might have been brought in the Presidency Small Cause Court. It was not disputed by Mr. Roy on behalf of the plaintiffs that the criterion to be applied for the purpose of ascertaining whether S. 22 applies or not is not the amount which a plaintiff claims but the amount which he in fact recovers and upon this point I desire to affirm the decision which I gave in the case of Misrilal v. Mackintosh Burn Ltd. (1). In the course of that suit it became necessary for me to express an opinion as to whether or not the "cognizability" of a suit to which S. 22 applied depended on the amount claimed or on the amount actually recovered. In the course of the judgment which I gave in that case I said this:

"It is pointed out to me by counsel for the plaintiff that there is a decision of Page, J., which is reported in Chandmull Kangoria v. Debichand (2), in which case Page, J., said in the course of his judgment that the law and practice in British India, in his opinion, were in favour of the view that the question whether a cause fell within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court depended not on the amount or value actually recoverable or ascertained at the trial but on the amount or value which was claimed by the plaintiff and set out in the plaint, and the learned Judge took the view that the provisions of the English County Court Acts differ so materially from those contained in the statute relevant to the issues raised in the case then before him, that he did not think it necessary to refer to the decisions thereunder."

(1) Suit No. 537 of 1925, Decided on 31st March 1927.

(2) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 405=51 Cal. 62.

I said at the time that it was clear that Page, J., in his judgment in the case of Chandmull Kangoria v. Debichand (2) was of opinion that the question whether or not a suit was cognizable in the Small Cause Court depends not on the amount ultimately recovered but on the amount originally claimed. I referred to that decision of my learned brother on the previous occasion and with very great respect to him I still cannot agree with his view as to the meaning of S. 22. I prefer to follow the decision of Buckland, J., in Suit No. 1657 of 1922 which unfortunately was not reported but is referred to by Page, J., in Chandmull Kangoria v. Debichand (2).

I pointed out in the case of Misrilal v. Mackintosh Burn Ltd. (1) that there is a case in the Bombay High Court (Sridhan Gopi Nath v. Goberdhone Das) in which Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Russell, J., took a view contrary to that of Page, J. The learned Judges clearly state that the real criterion as to whether or not a case was cognizable by a Small Cause Court was not the amount originally claimed but the true amount or value; the subject-matter of the action is ultimately ascertained after investigation at a trial. The learned Judges in the Bombay case pointed out that such a conclusion was in accordance with the decision of the Court of appeal in England on a cognate point in the case of Solomon v. Mulliner & The Motor Carriage Supply Co. Ltd. (3). I desire to say quite definitely that in my view, the real meaning of S. 22, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, is analogous to that of the corresponding section in the English County Courts Act of 1918, that is to say, S. 11 of that Act, and that is the amount recovered and not the amount claimed which is to be the dominating and deciding factor for the purpose of determining whether or not a suit is cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

Mr. Roy contended that even accepting that view of the law, this present suit nevertheless was not a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court by reason of the fact that, in effect—in substance though not in form—the plaintiffs were claiming an account, and he referred me to a case in Kailash Chandra Mandal v. Kira- nendu Ghose (4) where Mukerji, J., and Caspersz, J., decided that whether a suit is one for accounts within the meaning of Art. 31, Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Court Act (Act 9 of 1887) must depend on the relation in which the parties stand with each other, and the nature of the investigation required to afford relief to the plaintiff, and that if in order to grant relief to the plaintiff it is necessary to take accounts, the suit is one for accounts within the meaning of that article, even though the plaintiff may have chosen to put a definite money value upon his claim. Now that article and that Act of course have no application here. Apparently there is no definite authority, indeed no authority at all for maintaining that a suit for an account cannot be heard and determined in the Presidency Small Cause Court. That is to say, the precise form of the plaint in the present suit is immaterial. Actually the plaintiffs claim a specific sum, namely, Rs. 3451-6-3 but it is obvious from the nature of the suit that the question of whether that sum was or was not due to the plaintiffs could only be determined by the taking of an account between the parties, having regard to the nature of the defence which was set up in the written statement.

The facts, put very briefly are these: The parties had had business relations, and by a contract dated 21st January 1922 the plaintiffs had sold a quantity of Australian wheat to the defendants, that is to say, 300 tons of Australian wheat at the rate of Rs. 6-12 per maund on the condition that payment of the price should be made in advance. The defendants actually advanced to the plaintiffs by two sums a total sum of Rs. 56,200 and the plaintiffs delivered a certain quantity of wheat to the defendants, and they further paid to the defendants a sum of Rs. 16,000 upon the footing that the defendants had owed the plaintiffs that amount. The defendants by their written statement set up two other contracts also for the supply of wheat by the plaintiffs to the defendants and in a statement of accounts annexed to their written statement they showed that various other payments had been made with a view to adjusting the accounts between the parties. In that state of affairs it was said by the plaintiffs, as I have already stated, that there was due to them upon an adjustment of accounts the sum of Rs. 3451-6-3. The defendants on the other hand set up that upon any taking of an account it would be found that nothing was due by them to the plaintiffs, but that on the contrary the plaintiffs were still owing money to the defendants upon the basis that the defendants had paid more to the plaintiffs than was warranted by the amount of wheat which had been actually delivered.

Mr. Roy invited me to treat the matter as being one of a claim on the one hand and a sort of counter-claim on the other. He did that admittedly in an endeavour to bring the case within the decision which I had given in the case of Misrilal v. Mackintosh Burn Ltd. (1) (vide supra) and in order to put himself in the position of being able to contend that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of their claim, and that the defendants in their turn would be entitled to the costs of their counter-claim if in fact any sum had been awarded to them. He further said that upon a right view of the report of the Assistant Referee, what the Official Referee had decided in effect was that Rs. 664 was due to the plaintiffs and nothing was due to the defendants. Having reached that stage it was I think difficult for Mr. Roy to thereupon contend that upon that footing the case was taken out of the operation of S. 22, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, because in fact the total sum awarded to the plaintiff was this sum of Rs. 664 which is clearly less than Rs. 1,000, the sum referred to in that section. Be that as it may, in any event, I should not have been disposed to treat this case upon the same footing as the case of Misrilal v. Mackintosh Burn Ltd. (1). In that case there was set up by the defendants what under the extension to the Code of Civil Procedure is called an equitable set-off and there was a claim for damages which, in my view, to all intents and purposes (at any rate when it came to a question of costs) was in effect a counter-claim properly so-called.

There was, however, nothing of the kind in the present instance. The plaintiffs were alleging that a definite sum of Rs. 3,451-6-3 was due to them from the defendants. The defendants, on the other hand, said that no such sum was due, and that if anything, the balance of account was the other way round, clearly, in order to ascertain what, if any, was the sum due to the plaintiffs, it was necessary that an account should be taken. That was the only method of arriving at the amount to which the plaintiffs were entitled, and the Assistant Referee, apparently with the acquiescence of the parties, arrived at the figure of Rs. 664. I think therefore that it is entirely upon the basis of that figure that a decision as to costs ought to be made, especially having regard to the fact that I have not before me, neither in the report nor anywhere else, nor have I any means of ascertaining, without retrying the whole suit over again, what was the figure which represented the sum due from the defendants to the plaintiffs and what, if any, was the figure representing the sum due from the plaintiffs to the defendants, so that upon a balance the sum of Rs. 664 was due by the defendants to the plaintiffs. For ought I know to the contrary, the Assistant Referee or the counsel to the parties may have come to the conclusion that the defendants owed the plaintiffs Rs. 664 and that the plaintiffs owed the defendants nothing at all. On the other hand, the Assistant Referee or the counsel to the parties may have decided that the plaintiffs owed the defendants such a sum as having another sum subtracted from it would leave a balance of Rs. 664 in favour of the plaintiffs. I have no means whatever of ascertaining how this figure was arrived at. I can therefore only accept the report of the Official Referee as it stands and treat the matter as being one of a suit in which after trial of the issues between the parties it was determined that the defendants owed the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 664.

That being so, the other question is whether there is anything in the suit to take the matter out of the operation of the substantive part of S. 22, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, once it is conceded and it is not contended from the bar for the purposes of this case [if it had not been conceded, I should have decided the matter consistently with my previous decision in Misrilal v. Mackintosh Burn Ltd. (1)] that it is the amount recovered and not the amount claimed which is the determining factor. Once that is conceded, it is manifest that on the face of it (prima facie this suit falls within S. 22) that as the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants the sum of Rs. 664 and no more; by reason of the provisions of S. 22, they will not be entitled to any costs at all. The main part of the section says that if a suit which is cognizable by the Small Cause Court is instituted in the High Court, and if in such suit the plaintiff obtains, in the case of a suit founded on contract, a decree for any matter of an amount or value less than one thousand rupees, no costs will be allowed to the plaintiff; and if in any such suit the plaintiff does not obtain a decree, the defendant shall be entitled to his costs as between attorney and client.

I am unable to follow the reasoning of my learned brother Page, J., in the case in Chandmull Kangoria v. Debi Chand (2), to which I have already referred, where he says at page 9 that "ample safeguards are provided to meet such a contingency," that is to say, the contingency of the plaintiff placing a fictitious value on his claim so as to be at liberty to determine the tribunal by which the suit is to be tried. I cannot see that there are any safeguards of any kind whatsoever in the event of the plaintiff in a suit of this kind over estimating the value of the amount to which he is entitled, because the real amount can only be ascertained after the taking of some elaborate accounts. It is for that reason, amongst others, that I think it is right, generally speaking, under the provisions of this section that if a plaintiff does not in the ultimate result recover Rs. 1,000 he should not be entitled to his costs. But in the present suit I think the matter is different and S. 22, Presidency Small Causes Courts Act contains an addendum which is in the nature of a proviso. It seems obvious that the Presidency Small Causes Court is not a tribunal intended or designed for the determination of substantial commercial cases, and I think it is the duty of the Court to deal with the question of costs in a matter of this kind, after a careful examination of the issues which were raised between the parties, particularly for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any under exaggeration or inflation of the claim on the part of the plaintiff in the suit, and whether it was a suitable matter to be tried in the High Court rather than in the Small Cause Court.

Now, as far as I can see, in the present case, there was a bona fide dispute between two business firms as to the amount which was owed by the one to the other, and in default of an agreement between the parties the amount could only be ascertained by the taking of accounts, the doing of which might have developed into a lengthy and possibly a difficult matter. It happens that in the present case the parties were sufficiently well-advised to avoid the expense of a protracted trial before the learned Assistant Referee, and they or their counsel or both came to an agreement as to what the amount due by the defendants to the plaintiffs should be. Some sort of suggestion was thrown out in the course of the hearing that it was intended by this agreement or apparent agreement that the question of costs had also been taken into consideration in arriving at the sum of Rs. 664. I see no reason at all for saying that there was any such idea or intention in the minds of either of the parties to the suit. All that was done when the matter was before the Assistant Referee was for the amount claimed to be ascertained or rather to be agreed.

Looking at the matter as a whole, I think that this is a case where I might properly exercise the discretion conferred upon the Court by the last clause of S. 22 and, therefore, while coming to the conclusion that this was a case cognizable by the Small Cause Court and although the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for an amount of more than Rs. 1,000, I think I might reasonably say that it was a suit which should be brought in the High Court. That being so, I see no reason why the decree which has already been made should be disturbed. But on the other hand it is clear that the defendants were justified in bringing this matter before the Court, having regard to the manner in which the decree was obtained, and I accordingly give them the costs of this application, and I further direct that the plaintiffs are not to have any costs in connexion with any matters arising subsequent to the report of the Assistant Referee. The defendants are to have costs as between party and party up to the time that the agreement was arrived at and the Referee made his report, including those in connexion with the filing of the report.

It is quite unworkable and really impossible to suppose that the effect of a payment or the effect of an acknowledgment should depend upon the day on which somebody who never brought a suit at all could have brought it. Durga Chandra Mitra—for Petitioners.Bijan Kumar Mukerji—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—In my opinion this rule must be discharged. It appears that the suit was on a bond. The due date of the bond was in October 1918, and no payment of interest was made within three years. Rs. 101 was paid some 12 days after the expiration of three years from the date limited for payment. The date on which Rs. 101 was paid was 31st October and that at that time it is said that the Court was closed, the plaintiff being in a position that he would be in time to sue if he brought his suit on the reopening day. He did not bring any suit on the reopening day, but in the meantime he took this payment of Rs. 101 and the question now arises whether that payment of interest has saved limitation under S. 20, Lim. Act.

It is suggested and it may quite well be true—that but for the payment of the Rs. 101 the plaintiff would have brought a suit on the reopening day; but when one comes to consider this matter one must do it according to the strict principles which govern limitation. It is quite obvious that the plaintiff could, if he liked, have refused to take Rs. 101, have brought his suit and then settled it by a separate agreement or he might have made a separate agreement without bringing his suit at all. All sorts of different things the plaintiff could have done to keep himself right. I am only concerned with the question whether by taking Rs. 101 for interest at that time, after three years had expired, he did save limitation. Upon that it seems to me that on the face of the Limitation Act there can be no doubt at all.

If one looks at S. 3, one finds that it provides that:

“subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 inclusive, every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule shall be dismissed.”

It does not say that every suit instituted after that period shall be dismissed, but that subject to certain provisions every suit instituted after that period shall be dismissed. When one comes to S. 20, one finds that it provides:

“where interest on a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made”.

The reference there is “before the expiration of the prescribed period”. That clearly means the period prescribed in the first schedule. It is said that if one reads S. 4 together with S. 3, one finds that the prescribed period is extended; but that is not so. S. 4 is a provision to say that where the period of limitation prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed the suit may be instituted on the day that the Court reopens, that is to say, it may be instituted notwithstanding that the period of limitation prescribed has expired.

Having dealt with the matter on the language of the Act, I would, also, like to point out that it is quite unworkable and really impossible to suppose that the effect of a payment or the effect of an acknowledgment should depend upon the day on which somebody who never brought a suit at all could have brought it. In this case there never was a suit. In many cases if there is a payment of interest or an acknowledgment, ex hypothesi there will be no suit. There are more Courts than one sometimes in which suits can be brought. If one was to introduce into the wording of Ss. 19 and 20, the consideration that is brought into force by S. 4, the Lim. Law would become extremely unworkable.

Now, dealing with this matter from the point of view of authority, it is conceded very properly by the learned vakil who appears for the petitioner that the Bombay High Court in the case of Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli (1), has decided against him. That was a decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Aston, J., and I would only say that I agree with what the learned Judges there laid down. In the same way we have the case of Sheo Partab Singh v. Tajammul Husain (2), where the learned Judges were dealing with a special question arising under S. 31, Lim. Act, and they had cited to them the Bombay case to which I have referred. What is said by the learned Chief Justice is this :

"In our view that case can be distinguished. S. 4 does not prescribe any special period of limitation for any kind of suit. It only lays down that when the prescribed period of limitation expires on a day when the Court is closed then the suit may be instituted on the day when the Court reopens. We are in full agreement with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in the ruling mentioned".

He goes on to distinguish the special case of S. 31. S. 31 is not one of the sections which is referred to in S. 3 and it is a very special section. It is a section which gives to certain people in the United Provinces a longer period of limitation for certain suits by reason of the fact that the High Court having jurisdiction had been previously of the opinion (which the Privy Council has overruled) that the plaintiff in certain kinds of mortgage suits had 60 years within which to bring his suit. That section was really intended for a limited class of people to amend the schedule to the Limitation Act and substitute for them a longer period than the period which the schedule really mentions. The only authority in favour of the contention now put forward is the opinion of Mr. Beaman, J., in the case of Visram Vasudeo v. Tabaji Balaji (3) and I have no hesitation in saying that I disagree entirely with the view taken by that learned Judge. He seems to me to have misinterpreted the Limitation Act, because he says :

"So that it appears to me very hard to say that the acknowledgment was not made before the expiration of the period prescribed by limitation, for that really means the period within which a plaintiff may file his suit".

If the learned Judge had only observed that the question there was not "the period prescribed by limitation" but the period prescribed by the schedule, he would have avoided falling into this error. I have no doubt that the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins to which Mr. Beaman, J., referred is right. In these circumstances this Rule must be discharged with costs.

R. Knight & Sons and another—Defendants—Respondents.

Appeal No. 16 of 1927, Decided on 30th January 1928.

* (a) Tort—Defamation — Plaintiff arrested under Regulation 3 of 1818—Governor in his speech explaining who were arrested under the Regulation and why—One leading article of "Statesman" purporting to comment on Governor's speech—Writer stating that plaintiff was "directing brain of terrorist organization"—No evidence on record proving this allegation—Statement in the article was defamatory—It was statement of fact and not mere comment and, therefore, plea of fair comment was not maintainable—Plea of privilege also would not protect the writer.

A libellous statement of fact is not a comment or criticism on anything. If the words complained of are justified as comment and the words also contain the allegations of fact, the defendant is required to prove that such allegations of fact are true and it is not sufficient for him to plead that he bona fide believed them to be true. In other words, the distinction between comment and allegations of fact must always be borne in mind in determining whether the plea of fair comment can be sustained. In order to give room to the plea of fair comment, the facts must be briefly stated and if the facts upon which the comment purports to be made do not exist, the fundamentum of the plea fails. [P 76 C 1, 2]

Plaintiff Subhas Chandra Bose was arrested and lodged in jail in 1924 under the provisions of an ordinance promulgated by the Governor-General to supplement the ordinary Criminal Law in Bengal and under Regulation 3 of 1818. Lord Lytton, the then Governor of Bengal, made a speech explaining the necessity of the ordinance and the arrest of persons under its provisions. The "Statesman" in its leading article, while, referring to this speech of the Governor and to the arrest of Subhas Chandra Bose, wrote : "It is no doubt disconcerting for Mr. Das that his right-hand man (meaning thereby the plaintiff) has been arrested. But if the directing brain of the terrorist organization was also the right-hand man of Mr. Das and of the Swarajist party, so much the worse for the Swarajist Party." There was no evidence on record proving that the plaintiff was guilty of acts such as were imputed to him by the article.

Held: that the passage in the leading article meant and was understood to mean that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization. The words are not merely comment or criticism of the speech of the Governor, but they distinctly allege and make a statement of fact that the plaintiff was guilty of heinous crimes, and are therefore highly defamatory. The writer was not entitled to state as he did that the plaintiff was the directing brain of the terrorist organization. As the defendant did not prove the truth of his allegations, he would not be protected by the plea of fair comment. It was no defence for him merely to plead that he honestly believed in his accusations or that he had certain amount of reason for making it, or that he was concerned to support a policy of Government. The plea of privilege also would not be available to the defendant because he was not merely reporting or commenting upon the Governor's speech but has made his own allegations of fact against the plaintiff: *Hunt v. Rankin, C. J.—The plaintiff Subhas Chandra Bose sues the defendants who are the proprietors and editor of the Statesman newspaper for damages for libel contained in their issue of 26th November 1924. The words complained of are part of a leading article of which the main subject matter is a speech made by the Earl of Lytton when Governor of Bengal at Maldah on the 24th of that month. This speech had been published in extenso in the issue of the 25th and no complaint is made on that publication.

In the previous month, namely on 25th October 1924, the Governor-General under S. 72, Government of India Act, made and promulgated an ordinance to supplement the ordinary Criminal Law in Bengal. This among other provisions gave power to the Local Government in certain circumstances to arrest persons whom it believed to be guilty of certain crimes and to commit them to jail or to intern them without trial. Under this ordinance and under the provisions of Regulation 3 of 1818 a considerable number of persons including the plaintiff were on 25th October 1924, arrested and lodged in jail. The ordinance was accompanied by a statement by the Governor-General of the reasons which had moved him to make the ordinance and on the same day there was published a resolution of the Government of Bengal explaining the reasons which had led the Governor-in-Council to ask the Governor-General to promulgate the ordinance.

The speech made by Lord Lytton at Maldah on 24th November 1924 contained this statement:

"But men who defy the law, who live and act outside the law, who menace the liberty of those live within it, who take upon themselves to decide without process of law who shall live and who shall die, these men have no right to the protection of law—they are out-laws, they are a danger to the State and their liberty is forfeited. It is against such men and such men alone, that the special powers, which my Government have asked for and have obtained are being directed. Every single man, who has been arrested under Regulation 3 of 1818 or under the new Ordinance, is a member of a terrorist organization that seeks to attain its objects by violence and intimidation, that proposes, if not checked, to carry out more murders. Every man, too, who has been arrested is being detained, not on the isolated statements of a single informer but on evidence from many different sources unknown to each other, spread over many months, which has to satisfy the Government of Bengal, as well as two independent Judges, and in the case of the Regulation 3 prisoners, the Government of India and the Viceroy himself—probably the best trained lawyer in India—that he is not merely a member of, but an active participator in this terrorist conspiracy."

The leading article of 26th November which is complained of discloses that the circumstances that the plaintiff and certain others of the arrested men were prominent members of a political party called the Swaraj Party had given rise to the contention that the ordinance and Regulation were being directed against that party and its members. In other words that the person arrested or some of them were imprisoned not because Government was desirous to stamp out a terrorist conspiracy but because it wished to strike at the Swaraj Party and to get rid in that way of legitimate opposition of a peaceful and political character. A main purpose of Lord Lytton's speech at Maldah as appears therefrom had been to repudiate this suggestion by establishing first the fact that a far-reaching conspiracy to commit crimes was at work in Bengal and secondly that the special powers of Government had been exercised carefully and solely with a view to cope with it.

The article complained of commenced with a reference to the Maldah speech and after certain personal references to a Mr. Gandhi proceeds to deal with two statements which it imputes to him. The first is the statement that "if it is not a fact that the ordinance is directed against the Swarajists then the Government ought by this time to have contradicted the complaint."

The second is the statement that "if it can be proved that the ordinance is not aimed at the Swarajists I have no objection to making amends."

Upon the first statement the writer contends that Government has contradicted the complaint and that part of the argument appears to be finished. Upon the second statement the writer contends that Mr. Gandhi produces no proof that the Government's object is to break up the Swaraj party though he claims to have been shown such evidence and the writer infers that the so-called evidence must be ridiculously weak. On the other hand argues the writer, Lord Lytton in his Maldah speech produces proofs — proofs, as I understand the writer that the ordinance is not aimed at the Swarajists. Then comes the passage complained of :

"We who live in Bengal have before our eyes the evidence of a foul and far-reaching conspiracy. We have seen men murdered, shops wrecked, rails removed, bombs and imported weapons found. The Government have evidence collected not from a single informer but carefully traced and checked over a long period from totally different approaches, which has satisfied them and satisfied a former Lord Chief Justice of England that every single man arrested is a member of a terrorist organization. Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose, Chief Executive officer of Calcutta, was arrested under Regn. 3 and, therefore, the evidence regarding his complicity has had to pass the trained legal scrutiny of the Viceroy. It is no doubt disconcerting for Mr. Das that his right-hand man has been arrested. But if the directing brain of the terrorist organization was also the right hand man of Mr. Das and of the Swarajist party, so much the worse for the Swarajist party. This duplication of roles is unfortunate, but the Swarajists would be well-advised to insist less strongly on the point."

Save for the last three sentences which contribute a certain amount of argument the passage complained of is a summary or paraphrase of passages in Lord Lytton's speech. But it is introduced in the middle of the writer's own polemic against Mr. Gandhi and it is clearly introduced as his own statement of fact from which in turn grows an argument of his own against Mr. Das.

It is reasonably clear to me that the general intention of the passage is to show from Lord Lytton's speech that the ordinance is not aimed at the swarajists and that Government is using its special powers not dishonestly and in order to put down political opposition but honestly and in order to put down crime.

Now the defendants do not justify and though they have pleaded privilege there is nothing in the plea: Channing Arnold v. Emperor (1). There are therefore two questions for decision—first whether the article is defamatory of the plaintiff and secondly whether it is fair comment on a matter of public interest.

There can be no doubt, and indeed it is not disputed in this Court, that the subject-matter of the article is a matter of public interest and concern. By this, it seems desirable to say, I do not mean that a great many newspapers and their readers or other members of the public were taking interest in the matter, but that it was a matter which by its nature affected the public weal and touched upon public business so that any individual citizen had a right to express himself in fair and proper comment or criticism.

Certain elaborate particulars were delivered under the plea of fair comment at a late stage of the case. These seem if harmless to have been unnecessary. A number of irrelevant documents were also put in under this plea but not much reference was made to them at the trial as we learn from the judgment.

I have stated what I regard as the general intention of the words complained of but it is not enough to have regard merely to the general intention. It may happen, and some times does, that a writer in the course of argument which is quite legitimate makes statements of fact of a libellous character either out of zeal or of inadvertance or for other reasons. In the present case the plaintiff's complaint is that in the article the writer asserts that the plaintiff is a member of a terrorist organization. It is for the Court in the first place to rule whether or not as a matter of law the article is capable of this construction, and as I understand the judgment of the learned Judge he has rightly directed himself in the affirmative. The next question is a question of fact for a jury and the learned Judge in deciding it was sitting as a jury.

The article does not say in so many words that the plaintiff is a member of a terrorist organization but it is for the jury to say whether it means this, that is, whether the ordinary man of the kind likely to read the article would understand it in this sense. As we are dealing with a newspaper which has a wide circulation in India it is I think wrong to postulate as the learned Judge seems to have done that the ordinary reader is for this purpose to be taken to have had a knowledge of the contents of the Gazette and the numerous other papers produced at the hearing. He would no doubt have some knowledge of the broad facts as to these sensational arrests. But if the prima facie meaning of this article to an ordinary man would be that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization it is almost idle to say that this meaning can be cut down by a reference to what had been said in official publications or in their newspaper.

On this point it appears to me that a jury would have to choose between two lines of argument. On the one hand it might be emphasized that the writer makes no pretence to have seen the evidence which Government has collected, that he is only concerned to make good the point that in the matter of these arrests Government is not acting carelessly or recklessly, without inquiry or without being faced with a real emergency; that he must not readily be taken to go beyond this point and to contribute an assertion of his own about the guilt or innocence of the plaintiff. On this view the article would not mean that the plaintiff was a terrorist but merely that the competent officers of Government dealing with the matter had caused him to be arrested because they had been led to that conclusion, and not because he belonged to the Swaraj party. Upon the other hand, a jury having in mind the ordinary reader a person of no exceptional subtlety would be bound to notice that the evidence referred to in the article is described in impressive language as collected not from a single informer but carefully traced and checked over a long period from totally different approaches; and that it is specially emphasized in the plaintiffs' case that the decision to arrest him was taken as a result of trained legal scrutiny by a former Lord Chief Justice of England. They would I think be entitled to remember in arriving at the meaning of this leading article or the Maldah speech that in that speech itself there was no ambiguity upon this matter;

"Every single man, who has been arrested under Reg. 3 of 1818 or under the new ordinance, is a member of a terrorist organization that seeks to attain its objects by violence and intimidation, that proposes, if not checked, to carry out more murders."

They would doubtless notice that even when the writer is paraphrasing Lord Lytton he is making the statements on his own account. "We who live in Bengal have before our eyes." "We have seen" "Government have evidence." It passes from argument to statement and from statement to argument. It adds the touch about the "directing brain." It does not say. "If as Lord Lytton thinks." It does not even say "if the right-hand man of Mr. Das is the directing brain." It says "if the directing brain of the terrorist organization was also the right-hand man of Mr. Das."

What then is the opinion on this question arrived at by the learned Judge? His view is this:

"This language as to persons arrested under Reg. 3 of 1818 is almost identical with that of Lord Lytton's speech. He does not in so many words say that the plaintiff was a member of terrorist organization but he points the way to the reader to make the deduction for himself from the materials cited, which brings him to his point."

and again. Had the author of this article written:

"Lord Lytton at Maldah said that every single man who had been arrested under Reg. 3 of 1818 or under the new ordinance is a member of a terrorist organization. Subhas Chandra Bose was arrested under Reg. 3 of 1818. Therefore from the speech of Lord Lytton one may conclude that Subhas Chandra Bose is a member of a terrorist organization" his legal position would, I conceive, have been as unassailable as his reasoning.

In my judgment that is a finding that the words in question meant, and were understood to mean, that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization. Whether this is fair comment or not is a further question. If this was the view of the learned Judge after careful consideration it would be difficult indeed to say that the ordinary reader would have seen a distinction which has escaped the learned Judge and would have taken the argument of the writer to fall short of meaning that the plaintiff was a terrorist. If the intention was to point the way to the reader to make a deduction for himself this is only what the law calls innuendo and it is no service to a defendant to say that he only pointed the way but did not carry the reader to the destination. Apart, however, from anything which has been said by the learned Judge my opinion as a juror on this is against the defendants. If the writer desired to state short of saying in so many words that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization, and if he had no intention to convey to his readers any opinion upon the plaintiff's guilt or innocence, he was in duty bound to take much greater care than he has done. The ordinary reader would regard his argument as this:

"Subhas Chandra Bose was not arrested because he was a Swarajist; he was arrested because he was a terrorist; that he is a terrorist we know from Lord Lytton's speech and from the fact that there is a good evidence against him which has convinced a lawyer scarcely likely to make a mistake."

I do not think that the writer has taken any care at all to show to his reader that there is a third or middle view or to direct him to it—the view namely that whether the decision in any particular case be right or wrong it was a decision taken in order to put down crime as distinct from political opposition.

If then the meaning of the article is that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization the question arises whether it is fair comment. It is clearly a statement that the plaintiff is guilty of a crime of the most heinous character and if the plaintiff coming into Court with a view to clear his character is to be told that because the matter is one of public interest and concern any member of the public is entitled to assert the plaintiff's guilt provided he couples it with statements of fact which though short of proof afford him a basis for a not unreasonable opinion, the consequences would seem to be serious. To say that nothing can be comment which is an inference of fact or which injuriously affects a person's character would indeed be to put the matter too broadly. [Hunt v. Star newspaper Co. (2).] But this is not a case in which, after describing the plaintiffs' conduct with substantial accuracy, the writer has gone on to express an opinion about that conduct, whether it was biassed or malicious or incompetent or negligent. It is not even a case in which it is proved by the evidence called before the Court that the plaintiff has been guilty of particular acts and where the writer has merely contributed an opinion that the acts set out with substantial correctness amount or do not amount to an offence against the law. In this case the writer has argued the question whether there is or is not sufficient reason to believe that the plaintiff, of whose acts he has, and professes to have, no particulars, is guilty of conspiracy to murder. If the conclusion recommended to his readers be that the plaintiff is guilty of this charge, he is in the position of a person who has publicly charged another with a crime, and, apart from a defence of privilege, he must either justify or pay. It is no defence whatever to say that he honestly believed in his accusation, or that he had a certain amount of reason for making it; or that Lord Lytton had said it before; or that he was concerned to support a policy of Government. To draw in general language a distinction between fact and comment is a difficult task. But in this case the distinction would be obliterated altogether were we to hold that such a charge was comment and not a statement of fact. It is sufficient for me on this point to refer to two cases decided in this Court and binding upon us — Barrow v. Hem Chandra Lahiri (3) and the Englishman Ltd., v. Lajpat Rai (4).

It was contended before us by Mr. Langford James on behalf of the defendants that while it is true as a general proposition that under a plea of fair comment a defendant has to show that his comment has been made upon a basis of facts proved to be true, there is an important reservation which is, in a case of the present kind, to be made with regard to this doctrine. It is said that if the defendant is commenting upon the statement of another person which statement he is entitled to comment on, he need not prove that statement to be true and that this reservation applies with particular force when that other person's statement is privileged or is contained in a privileged document. The authority for this proposition is the case of Mangena v. Wright (5) where Phillimore, J.

puts the case of a vote in a Parliament or the judgment of a Judge where by inadvertance or otherwise an individual is wrongly stated to have been guilty of some act of which he is entirely innocent. Accordingly the defendants in the present case contend that they were entitled to comment on Lord Lytton's statement assuming that what he said was true and that without proving any one of the facts alleged by Lord Lytton they can defeat the plaintiff's suit. If the case of Mangena v. Wright (5) is the only authority for this doctrine it is not unimportant to notice that the learned Judge whose great authority is now appealed to was dealing with a case in which an extract from a parliamentary paper was published as an extract, and the letter enclosing this extract for publication, referred to the plaintiff's "interesting career" and to the plaintiff as an "unfortunate native" words which were said by the defendants to import no more than that the plaintiff was a mischievous agitator. The learned Judge was proceeding on the footing that a jury might hold that the letter was not a repetition and re-statement of the defamatory statements in the extract. On this view the comment was kept separate from the statements. I observe that this case was cited to the Court in The Englishman Ltd., v. Lajpat Rai (4). It was ruled by Harrington J., as follows :

"No doubt the fair and accurate report of a speech made in Parliament is privileged, even though it contains facts defamatory to the plaintiff. But no authority has been cited for the proposition that a person is entitled to republish these defamatory statements not as a report of what has been said in Parliament, but as a statement of his own."

In the present case I agree that the defendants were entitled to refer to the fact that the Viceroy and the Governor had caused the arrest of the plaintiff because they were satisfied that he was a terrorist, but in a matter of so great importance to the plaintiff it was very necessary that they should refrain from conveying to the ordinary reader an opinion of their own which was in effect the reiteration of a charge of criminal conduct. In such a matter a journalist who does not exercise a reasonable degree of care and skill to make plain the limits of his intention may quickly drift into a repetition of the accusation—into a suggestion that it must be true into an opinion to that effect. If he has done so and if the fair meaning to the ordinary reader, as put by a jury upon his words, is to present the reader with or commend to him a conclusion that the plaintiff has been guilty of a crime, it is in my opinion erroneous to say that he is merely commenting upon the statement of another.

The difficulty in the present case is the question as to the more or less of the meaning of the article. If the intention of the writer was limited in the manner now alleged for the defendants, the expenditure of a few words could have made this clear; and in the absence of a very plain notice to the reader that the guilt of the plaintiff was not being affirmed I think that the words used by the writer in this case carry him over the borderline. If this be so then in my opinion there is little substance in the rest of the defence. I should be sorry indeed to lay down anything new on this subject and I quite appreciate that great officers of State may have, in the course of their duty, to decide and sometimes even to declare that an individual has been guilty of crime. But it is always open to that individual to wait until the accusation is repeated against him by a private person or a newspaper as the opinion or assertion or suggestion of such person or newspaper, and to come into Court to clear his character and to obtain such relief in damages from his accuser as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

The plaintiff here has sued defendants who are well able to defend themselves and little likely to be wanting in a desire to do so. I cannot forbear to say that he has done all that the law permits to vindicate himself.

Upon the question of damages it is I think sufficient to refer once more to the case already cited, The Englishman Ltd., v. Lajpat Rai (4); and to say that while the charge against the plaintiff is of the most heinous crime, if not indeed of a series of heinous crimes, the question as between the plaintiff and the defendant in this case has reference solely to the damage done to the plaintiff's reputation by the words published on the 26th November 1924. As the plaintiff had been arrested in circumstances which made it plain to the public that he was arrested as a person guilty of being a member of a terrorist organization and as on the 24th November the Governor of the Province had roundly stated this to be a fact as further. It is conceded that the report of the speech in this very newspaper upon the previous day is not a publication of which the plaintiff is entitled to complain, the damage which can be taken to be attributable to the words used by the defendants in their issue of the 26th is of necessity reduced to dimensions which for such a libel are exceedingly small. It would be an obvious injustice if the defendants were made to pay for damage to the plaintiff's reputation which was clearly due to acts and statements by other people. The damages though not high must be substantial and there is no question of nominal, still less of contemptuous, damages. I think the figure should be assessed at Rs. 1,000, that the appeal be allowed with costs on the original side and in this Court, and that the judgment should be entered for the plaintiff accordingly.

C. C. Ghose, J.—The judgment just delivered by my Lord makes it unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts of this case and the circumstances under which the article in the "Statesman" newspaper complained of was published, but as we are reversing the judgment of the trial Court, I desire to add a few words.

The portion of the article in which it is alleged the defendants wantonly and maliciously intended to injure and vilify the plaintiff and to bring him into contempt and disgrace is as follows :

"We who live in Bengal have before our eyes the evidence of a foul and far-reaching conspiracy. We have seen men murdered, shops wrecked, rails removed, bombs and imported weapons found. The Government have evidence collected not from a single informer but carefully traced and checked over a long period from totally different approaches which has satisfied them and satisfied a former Lord Chief Justice of England that every single man arrested is a member of a terrorist organization. Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose, Chief Executive Officer of Calcutta (meaning the plaintiff) was arrested under Regn. 3 and, therefore, the evidence regarding his complicity has had to pass the trained legal scrutiny of the Viceoroy. It is no doubt disconcerting for Mr. C. R. Das that his right hand man"

(referring thereby to the plaintiff)

"has been arrested. But if the directing brain of the terrorist organization"

(referring thereby to the plaintiff)

"was also the right hand man of Mr. Das and of the swarajist party, so much the worse for the swarajist party. The duplication of roles"

(meaning the roles alleged of the plaintiff in the foregoing sentences)

"is unfortunate, but the swarajist would be well-advised to insist less strongly on the point."

The contention of the defendants was that the words complained of did not constitute a libel on the plaintiff. They further added :

"In so far as the words complained of consist of allegations of fact, they are true in substance and in fact, and in so far as they consist of expressions of opinion, they are fair comments made in good faith and without malice upon facts which are matters of public interest."

At the trial a large mass of intrinsic matters in support of the plea of fair comment was allowed to be admitted, the learned Judge apparently holding that the defendant in an action for libel is permitted to show what it was he was commenting upon, provided it be a matter of public interest, even though he has to travel outside the scope of the libel for the purpose.

The learned Judge held that the language of the writer as to persons arrested under Regn. 3 of 1818 is almost identical with that of Lord Lytton's speech. He also held that the writer did not in so many words say that the plaintiff was a member of a terrorist organization but he pointed the way to the reader to make the deduction for himself from the materials cited, which brought him to his point, i. e., that with such materials before the world it was useless to proclaim that because a prominent member of the swaraj party had been arrested, therefore, the measures of Government were directed against the swaraj party and not towards the repression of crime and the establishment of law and order.

On appeal before us Sir Binod Mitter for the appellant did not deny that the matters referred to in the offending article were matters of public interest or that the speech of Lord Lytton at Maldah was privileged. He also stated that for the purposes of this case he was preferred to admit that the publication of Lord Lytton's speech in the "Statesman" newspaper on the 25th November 1924 was also privileged. This point was that in circumstances like what happened in this case it was the duty of the person who took the plea of fair comment to make his comments in such a manner so that they might appear to reasonably minded men as comments and not as statements of fact, and that where the writer accuses another of having committed criminal offences he is required under the law to prove the facts upon which his comment is based. Sir Binod argued that in the present instance the writer has warranted the accuracy of the allegations of fact made by Lord Lytton and that the article went far beyond what can be construed as fair comment upon a matter of public interest, and contained statements of fact highly defamatory of the plaintiff. Sir Binod argued that the writer called the plaintiff the directing brain of the terrorist organization and has vouched for the facts referred to by Lord Lytton in his speech at Maldah and that in these circumstances the plea of fair comment was of no avail to the writer.

Mr. Langford James on behalf of the defendants argued that taking the article as a whole it was clear that the writer thereof had made no assertion of his own about the guilt of the plaintiff and that all that he had done was to paraphrase the speech of Lord Lytton. He further argued that the rule that the defence of fair comment would fail, unless the facts alleged in the document complained of were true, did not apply where one person alleged the facts and another person commented on the same and in support of this he cited the case of Mangena v. Wright (5).

A newspaper has no privilege beyond any other member of the community in commenting on any matter of public interest and no privilege whatsoever attaches to his position (Per Lord Shaw in Channing Arnold v. Emperor (1)). When the defendant in a case for damages for defamation takes the plea of fair comment, he is not required to justify the comment and it is sufficient for him if he can satisfy the Court that it is "fair" comment. A libellous statement of fact is not a comment or criticism on anything. If the words complained of are justified as comment and the words also contain allegations of fact, the defendant is required to prove that such allegations of fact are true and it is not sufficient for him to plead that he bona fide believed them to be true. In other words, the distinction between comment and allegations of fact must always be borne in mind in determining whether the plea of fair comment can be sustained.

It is necessary for me to refer to the cases which were cited at the Bar but it is well settled that in order to give room for the plea of fair comment the facts must be truly stated and if the facts upon which the comment purports to be made do not exist, the foundation of the plea fails. Where the words which are alleged to be defamatory allege or assume as true facts concerning the plaintiff, which the plaintiff denies, and which either involve a slanderous imputation in themselves, or upon which the comment bases imputations or inferences injurious to the plaintiff, it is settled law that the defence of fair comment fails, unless the comment is truthful in regard to its allegation or assumption of such facts.

These being the guiding principles one must turn to the article complained of and find out whether the words complained of are allegations of fact or expressions of opinion, and if the latter, whether such expressions of opinion are fair comment or not. In this case I do not propose to add the analysis of the article made by my Lord. It will suffice if I say that I have read and re-read the article complained of several times and I have come to the conclusion that the writer has not been as careful as he might have been and has distinctly alleged that the plaintiff has been guilty of previous crimes. The writer was obviously entitled to comment on Lord Lytton's speech and to summarize the same; he was entitled to state that the plaintiff had been arrested under Regn. 3 of 1818 and that the evidence against him had satisfied the executive that he was a person who ought to be detained under the said regulation; but he was not entitled to suggest or to state, as in my opinion he has done, that Subhas Chandra Bose was the directing brain of the terrorist organization in Bengal. A great deal of verbal criticism of the words complained of was presented before us, but in my opinion it is impossible to escape from the conclusion upon a fair reading of the article that the writer has made defamatory statements of fact about the plaintiff about which there is no evidence. It may be that in the eye of the executive the plaintiff did commit acts justifying detention under. Regn. 3 of 1818; but so far as this case is concerned, there is no evidence on record proving that the plaintiff has been guilty of acts such as are imputed to him by the writer in the words complained of. In my view, therefore, on the words complained of there is no room for the conclusion that the writer is protected by the plea of fair comment.

The case of Mangena v. Wright (5), referred to above was a peculiar one the facts there were altogether different and the judgment of Phillimore, J. must be read in the light of the facts in that case. The present case is altogether different, bearing in mind the way in which the offending assertions of fact regarding the plaintiff have been introduced.

I agree, therefore, with my Lord in the view taken by him and I am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs in both Courts. I agree with my Lord in his assessment of the damages sustained by the plaintiff.

The plaintiffs claim as heirs of one Hossanaddin. He left four daughters, two of whom are plaintiffs and two are defendants. Hossanaddin is said to have executed a registered kabala in favour of of his wife of all the lands in dispute. That document was marked Ex. A. After the death of Hossanaddin his widow executed a document Ex. B dated the 29th Assin 1316, by which she transferred all the lands she received from her husband under the document Ex. A in favour of one of her daughters defendant 1. Defendant 1 resided with her husband with Amina Bibi, the widow of Hossanaddin. After the death of Amina Bibi the plaintiffs have brought this suit for partition on the allegation that they are in possession of some of the properties left by their father. They disputed the document Ex. A also. The Subordinate Judge found both the documents to be genuine and bona fide and he held that title passed to defendant 1 under the document Ex. B, and upon that finding he dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Judge has reversed that decision.

One matter should be first stated and it is this, that one of the plaintiffs, Moyna Bibi, gave up her claim to the property by a petition in the Court of appeal. There does not seem to be any reason why the learned Judge did not act upon that petition. The pleader of that plaintiff was certainly responsible for the fact as to whether that petition was filed with the knowledge and consent of Moyna Bibi. Moyna Bibi has been made a respondent here and defendant 1 has claimed the share which would belong to Moyna Bibi even if she is found to have a share, on the basis of the petition. But Moyna Bibi has not appeared in this Court to dispute defendant 1's title. The first thing, therefore, that is necessary to be mentioned is that Moyna Bibi would not be entitled to any share in the property and that share if she has any would go to augment the share of defendant 1. It should also be noticed that another daughter of Hossanaddin who was made a defendant did not claim any share in the property left by her father. She supports the case of defendant 1. There is then left only one of the plaintiffs Sahajan Bibi, plaintiff 1 who is really the contesting plaintiff.

The learned Judge has reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge mainly upon the ground that Amina Bibi, the mother of the plaintiffs, was an illiterate pardanashin woman and any one taking a conveyance from such a person was bound to prove affirmatively not only that the transferrer executed the instrument but understood and grasped the full import of what she was doing. The learned Judge held that there was no evidence that there was any explanation of the contents of the instrument having been made to Amina Bibi and, therefore, the defendant 1 has not been able to prove the validity of the document so as to affect the title of the plaintiff by inheritance. The objection does not appear to have been taken distinctly in the trial Court by the plaintiffs that the document was not explained to their mother.

The learned Judge, however, held that when the bona fide of the document was challenged by the plaintiffs the defendant was bound to prove the validity of the document from every possible angle of attack. That may be true in certain cases, but when one considers the case of an absolute gift or an absolute sale by a pardanashin woman it is not always necessary that there should be proof of explanation of the terms of the document. It would be sufficient in many cases to show that the pardanashin woman knew that it was an absolute conveyance of title by which she was divesting herself of all interest in the property. Such documents are quite simple and the mere knowledge of the fact that it was a kobala or gift would be sufficient explanation of the nature of the document. If you add to that the circumstances of possession, then the question of explanation becomes almost a quæstio. The learned Judge seems also to have thought that although the transaction does not actually smack of fraud it was an extremely questionable one. Fraud does not seem to have been alleged by the plaintiffs. They only say that no such document was executed. Fraud and forgery are quite different things, and when forgery was alleged, although not in so many terms, it excludes the idea of having a document executed by fraud. There are certain other elements which the learned Judge failed to take into consideration. The question is whether after the death of their mother the plaintiffs ever came into possession of any portion of the property left by her. Amina Bibi does not seem to have claimed any interest in the property after the execution of Ex. B. If after the death of Amina Bibi defendant 1 alone was in possession of the property for a considerable number of years then the presumption as to the validity of the document would be strengthened a good deal. The learned Judge also failed to take into consideration the fact that there was nothing unnatural in executing the document in favour of defendant 1 who was the only daughter of Amina Bibi who was living with her. The other daughters probably were well off and had been married elsewhere.

It is common knowledge that when people of this class desire to keep a daughter in the house they marry her to a comparatively poor man who would live in the father-in-law's family as a ghar jamai. Under these circumstances it is not unnatural that the small property which belonged to Hosanaddin would be given to that daughter alone. These are the elements for consideration in dealing with this case. As these matters have not been considered by the learned Judge we think that the appeal should be allowed, the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge set aside and the appeal sent back to the lower appellate Court for re-hearing after consideration of all the circumstances stated above. The costs will abide the final result.

Sitaram Banerjee—for Petitioners.

Rupendra Kumar Mitter—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—I have taken time to consider this case because it involves the construction of O. 18, Rr. 5, 8 and 14, Civil P. C., and raises an issue of general interest. The suit was brought by the petitioners to recover Rs. 20, the value of a palm tree which the plaintiffs alleged that the opposite party defendant 1 had wrongfully cut down and sold. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the palm tree had been planted by defendant 1, and that he was entitled to sell it and retain the proceeds. The plaintiffs appealed. They contended that the decree of the trial Court could not stand because there was no legal evidence that the palm tree had been planted by defendant 1, as the evidence of the witnesses had not been recorded in the manner prescribed by O. 18.

The material rules are: (The judgment quoted Rr. 5, 8 and 14 of O. 18, and proceeded). The learned, Subordinate Judge affirmed the decree of the trial Court, and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiffs thereupon obtained the present rule under S. 115, Civil P. C., for the purpose of setting aside the decrees passed by the lower Courts. The petitioners contend that, inasmuch as the evidence of the witnesses was not taken down in writing by the Judge himself (R. 5), and the Judge did not make a memorandum (R. 8), or cause a memorandum to be made (R. 14), there was no legal evidence upon which the Court could have founded or passed a decree in favour of the defendants.

On the other hand the opposite parties urge that the evidence of a witness is "taken down in writing by the Judge," as well when it is dictated by him for a typist—which was the course followed in this case—as when he himself records it by means of a pen or a typewriter; in each instance it is the Judge who determines the form, nay more, the very words of the narrative, and it makes no difference whether he uses a pen or a typewriter or a typist, for each is but the instrument that he employs to effect his purpose.

Now, in these days when the use of the stenograph and the typewriter is more popular and widespread than it was in the past, it may well be that the construction which the opposite parties urged the Court to put upon O. 18, is to be commended as being reasonable and in accordance with modern ideas. That however, is a matter for the legislature with which the Court has no concern, for, in my opinion, the provisions of O. 18, cannot bear such a construction, and it does not represent the true meaning and effect of the rules under discussion.

As I read O. 18 the intention of the legislature was to provide that the Judge should be made responsible for the taking and recording of evidence. Accordingly, it was enacted, as I construe Rr. 5, 8 and 14, that in cases where an appeal is allowed there might be either one or two records of the evidence duly made according to law: that if there was only one record it should be made in writing by the Judge's own hand; while, if the evidence was taken down in writing by some person other than the Judge, though:

"in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge," that the Judge also should make or cause to be made a memorandum as provided by Rr. 8 and 14.

The fallacy, I think, that underlies the construction which the opposite parties urge upon the Court is that the shorthand writer or the typist who takes down the evidence at the dictation of the Judge is not a mere instrument like the pen or the typing machine, that needs must re-act to the touch of the Judge, but a human being with a will and intelligence of his own, and fallible as all men are.

The legislature by enacting O. 18 intended and provided that evidence should, either be taken down in writing by the Judge's own hand, or should be supported by the sanction of a memorandum under Rr. 8 or 14.

In the present case the evidence of the witnesses was dictated to a typist by the Judge, and a copy of the typed record was revised and signed by the Judge, who added at the end of each deposition the words :

"dictated by me to avoid eye strain."

"Shashi Jiban Sen,"

"Munsif."

But there was only one record of the evidence, and that was not taken down in writing by the Judge himself, and no memorandum was made or caused to be made by the Judge. The provisions of O. 18, Rr. 5, 8 and 14, therefore, were not complied with. In my opinion, however, the recording of the evidence in the manner followed in the present case was not an illegality that rendered the decree based upon it null and void, but amounted merely to an irregularity : Fort Gloster Jute Manufacturing Co. v. Chandra Kumar Das (1), Queen Empress v. Gopal Goundan (2).

Now, whether, the Court will exercise its powers of revision under S. 115, is a matter to be determined in its discretion according to the circumstances of the case under review. Rules and regulations are made to assist and not to hinder the administration of justice, and if the Court were to set aside the decrees under review, in my opinion, in so doing it would not be promoting the ends of justice, but would work hardship and injustice to the opposite parties. It is not pretended that the evidence upon which the decrees in the present case were based was not accurately and fairly recorded, or that any objection was raised in the trial Court to the relevance or the admissibility of the evidence, or to the mode in which it was recorded. Further, it is to be observed that if the Court were to accept the petitioner's contention, and to hold that the evidence as recorded was not legal evidence and must be treated as though it never had been given, the plaintiffs, so to say, would be "hoist with their own petard," for the evidence of all the witnesses, whether called for the plaintiffs or for the defendants, was recorded in precisely the same manner, and if there was no legal evidence before the Court, the plaintiffs' case ex necessitate rei must fail, for no evidence would be forthcoming to prove the plaintiffs' claim. For these reasons I am not disposed to accede to the petition, and the Rule will be discharged with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 140 of 1928, Decided on 27th July 1928, from judgment of Ch. Presy Mag., Calcutta.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, Ss. 27 and 36—Insolvent's depositions under S. 36 are not admissible but record of his examination under S. 27 is admissible in criminal proceedings under S. 104.

Depositions under S. 36 cannot be admitted in evidence, but the record of insolvent's examination under S. 27 is evidence which can be taken into consideration against him in proceedings under S. 104 of the Act, as criminal proceedings in the Presidency Magistrate's Court are, under S. 103, proceedings under the Act : 12 Cox. C. C. Ghose, J.—The appellant before us Motilal Biswas has been convicted by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate under S. 103, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and has been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 in respect of each of the three counts, the substantive sentences being directed to run concurrently. So far as the question of the imposition of the fines is concerned, that portion of the order is clearly wrong and must be set aside, because it will appear from a reference to S. 103 of the Act that there is no provision made for the imposition of any fine. That being so, as indicated above, the portion of the Magistrate's order imposing a fine of Rs. 1,000 in respect of each count must be set aside.

It appears that the appellant before us formerly, that is, prior to 1329 B. S. carried on business in the name of Bepin Chandra Motilal. He was a partner in the firm, the other partner being his brother Bepin Chandra. The two brothers quarrelled and separated and the accused started a new business in the name of Motilal Monindranath Biswas, Monindranath Biswas being the name of his minor son. That business was in scented oils, patent medicines, biscuits and stationery, and it is said that the firm had no business of any description whatsoever in galvanized screws. Apparently the appellant did not do well in his business and it appears that he experienced considerable difficulties in meeting the claims of his creditors. It is said that his creditors assembled one evening in front of the place of his business and continued to press him for payment of their dues. The creditors were not paid and on the following day the appellant closed his doors. He then went to the Court of the District Judge of Faridpur and applied for relief under the Provincial Insolvency Act. Certain creditors in Calcutta coming to know of these proceedings in Faridpur applied to the learned Judge on the original side exercising the insolvency jurisdiction of this Court for transfer of the proceedings to this Court. It appears that the learned Judge on the original side being satisfied that this was a case which ought to be transferred to this Court made the order applied for and accordingly transferred the proceedings to this Court.

Thereafter there was an order made for the public examination of the insolvent under the provisions of S. 27, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The record of that examination has been tendered in evidence in this case and is Ex. 5. Subsequently it appears that the insolvent was also examined under S. 36 of the Act, the record of that subsequent examination being Ex. 6.

After the public examination of the insolvent had been concluded, certain creditors, who are described as B. N. Pal and B. K. Pal made an application to the learned Judge in insolvency for the framing of certain charges under the provision of S. 103, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, it being alleged against the insolvent that he had been guilty of offences under the Insolvency Act. It appears that at first the learned Judge was of opinion that no definite case had been made out against the insolvent. He therefore dismissed the application with liberty to the creditors to put in a fresh application for a similar order, if they were so advised, within one month from the date of the learned Judge's previous order. Such a fresh application being made to the learned Judge, the latter by his order dated 12th July 1927 directed, in terms of S. 104, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act as amended by Act 9 of 1926, that a complaint should be made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, in respect of three matters which had been brought to his notice. Thereupon the enquiry under S. 104, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, as amended by Act 9 of 1926, was held before the Magistrate. A number of witnesses were called to give evidence against the accused and it is said that they made out a prima facie case against the accused that he had been guilty of certain offences under the Insolvency Act, to wit, keeping false documents and books of account and making false entries therein.

The charges against the accused framed in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court were these : (1) keeping a false roker book and showing a false debit entry therein in the name of Kasinath Mandal of Sibganj for a sum of Rs. 429-6-0 ; (2) keeping a false roker book and showing a false entry therein in the name of Kunja Behari Saha for Rs. 1,402-8-0, and (3) keeping a false challan book showing a false debit entry therein in the name of Kanhaiya Lal Routh Mull for Rs. 3,340. (The judgment then stated the evidence and proceeded). The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate went into the matter at some length. He had the oral evidence of these witnesses before him. He had the books of the appellant before him and he came to the conclusion that the persons or the firms who were referred to by the accused in the entries in question were fictitious and had no existence whatsoever. He further came to the conclusion that having regard to the way in which the appellant had kept his books of account there was abundant evidence for coming to the conclusion that those books had been kept in a fraudulent manner and that the entries in question were false. Upon these findings he convicted and sentenced the accused as indicated above.

This appeal being an appeal from a judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate has been argued at considerable length both on law and on facts. The learned advocate appearing for the appellant has argued in the first place that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction whatsoever to try this case because, at the date when the proceedings in insolvency were initiated, Act 9 of 1926 had not come into force at all and that the procedure for the trial of the appellant, assuming that he was guilty of offences under the Insolvency Act, should have been under the old S. 104, that is, under the section as it stood before its amendment by Act 9 of 1926, and, in support of this contention, has drawn our attention to a large number of cases in which the position is canvassed as to whether Acts passed by the Houses of Parliament or by the legislature in this country have or have not a retrospective effect. The cases to which our attention has been drawn have in our opinion really no bearing whatsoever on the precise question that we have got to determine in the present case and it would serve no useful purpose if we were to go at length through the long catena of cases to which our attention has been drawn. Now, this amendment by the Act of 1926 is really an amendment affecting procedure, and it is apparent from a perusal of the dates in this case that, on 12th July 1927 when the learned Judge preferred a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Act 9 of 1926 had come into operation and, therefore, the only section which could be brought into play was S. 104 as it was amended by Act 9 of 1926. The complaint itself is one under S. 104 as amended, and that being so the Magistrate was the proper person who could hold the enquiry on the complaint of the learned Judge exercising the insolvency jurisdiction of this Court. We think that there is no substance whatsoever in the point which has been taken and that it must be negatived.

It is next argued that the record of the depositions under S. 36, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, could not be admitted in evidence in this case. It appears to us that the contention, so far as it goes, is sound and must be given effect to; and in coming to a conclusion as regards the guilt or otherwise of the appellant before us we have eliminated from our consideration entirely the record of the deposition under S. 36 of the Act. But while we have eliminated from our consideration the record of the depositions under S. 36, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, we have taken into consideration the record of his examination under S. 27, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, that being evidence which, according to the terms of the section itself, can be taken into consideration against the accused in proceedings held under the Act. It is, however, argued that although the record of an insolvent's deposition under S. 27, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, can be taken into consideration in proceedings against an accused under the Insolvency Act, that record cannot be admitted in evidence in criminal proceedings against the accused. Now, the present proceeding is a proceeding under S. 103, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and, that being so, it is a proceeding under the Act. The question has been considered in England and it has been held in several cases that an insolvent's answers to questions put in public examination under the Bankruptcy Act can be used against the insolvent in a subsequent criminal proceeding: see in this connexion the cases reported in 12 Cox's Criminal Law cases, pp. 32 and 174. That being so, we see no reason whatsoever why the record of the deposition of the appellant under S. 27, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, could not have been taken into consideration by the Magistrate in this case.

It is next argued that the charges are bad as the second charge could only be understood if two entries and not merely one entry were taken into consideration and, therefore it is said the charges although three in number, were really four in substance, and that that being so the trial is vitiated. Now, what are the charges against the accused? The charges really are: keeping a false roker or making a false roker book and making false entries therein and also keeping a false challan book and making false entries therein.

The references to the figures showing the moneys paid out by the appellant are merely illustrative and we do not think that any real prejudice of any description was or could have been caused to the appellant by reason of the charges being framed in the manner in which they were framed.

It is next argued that there is no evidence to connect in any way the terminal dates mentioned in the charges themselves within which period it was suggested the entries in question were made. In the charges definite indications are given as to the dates of the entries themselves. Therefore, assuming for argument's sake that there was any confusion about the terminal dates, we are of opinion that no prejudice was or could have been caused to the accused, seeing that he was fully aware in respect of what entries the charges were being investigated against him.

It is also argued that the question of galvanized screws which was taken into consideration by the Magistrate in this case in investigating the charges against the accused should not have been taken into consideration at all because the learned Judge who made the complaint had himself in a prior proceeding come to the conclusion that the explanation of the accused so far as purchases of galvanized screws were concerned was satisfactory and, in support of this contention, we have been referred to an order made by the learned Judge in the insolvency jurisdiction of this Court dated 14th June 1927. So far as this point is concerned, it does not really come into this proceeding at all. The complaint was made not under the order of 14th June 1927, but under the order of 12th July 1927, and we must exclude from our consideration, in investigating the present case against the accused any question which might arise on a construction of the order of 14th June 1927.

These are, as far as we can make out, all the points of law which have been canvassed before us. On the facts, it has been argued that the evidence shows that there is room for doubt as to whether the accused was really guilty. It is argued that the fact that three witnesses, viz., Nos. 4, 5 and 7 were called to prove that they were not the persons with whom the appellant had dealings does not exclude or negative any theory of there being other persons of the name of the persons or firms referred to in the charges in the places mentioned against their names who had done business with the appellant. As far as we can understand the evidence, the prosecution brought forward before the Magistrate evidence of a satisfactory character showing that the accused had committed the offences charged against him. It was the accused's business to rebut the case made by the prosecution. There is no question of the Magistrate having gone wrong in having placed the onus on the accused. The Magistrate has not placed the onus upon the accused. We think on the facts that the case made by the prosecution is such as to induce one to hold that the case is true. That being so, we have come to the conclusion that both on law and on facts this appeal must fail. The appellant, who is on bail, will now surrender to his bail-bond and serve out the remainder of the sentence imposed on him.

Reasonable care is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would take in the absence of some specific circumstances which would have been the starting point of an enquiry which might be expected to lead to some result: 40 Cal. 378 (P.C.), Dist. [P 86 C 2]

Cases in which constructive notice has been established resolve themselves into two classes: first, cases in which the party charged has had actual notice that the property in dispute was, in fact, charged, encumbered or in some way affected, and the Court has therefore bound him with constructive notice of facts and instruments to a knowledge of which he would have been led by an enquiry after the charge, incumbrance or other circumstance affecting the property of which he had actual notice, and secondly, cases in which the Court has been satisfied from the evidence before it that the party charged had designedly abstained from enquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice: *Jones v. Bose, J.—The Appeal No. 10 of 1926 arises out of Title Suit No. 15 of 1923 and the Appeal No. 102 of 1926 arises out of Suit No. 1 of 1924. Both the Suits Nos. 15 of 1923 and 1 of 1924 were tried together by the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly. The properties in dispute originally belonged to Ram Chand Chatterji. The following short genealogical table will be of use in understanding the facts of the case:

Each of the brothers Debendra, Surendra and Rajendra inherited  $\frac{1}{3}$  share and on the death of Rajendra their mother Saroda Sundari, plaintiff 2 inherited his  $\frac{1}{3}$  share.

Defendant 2 Messrs. Macneil & Co., with a view to construct mills began to acquire lands in the village of Bansberiah and the neighbouring villages. Defendant 1 Babu Pran Krishna Chatterji appears to have been employed by the company for the purpose of helping the company in the acquisition of large quantities of lands. Pran Krishna accordingly proceeded either to purchase or to take permanent leases of lands and then to grant sub-leases to defendant 2 company. Defendant 3, Surendra, helped defendant 1 in all these transactions. Surendra on behalf of himself and his brother Deben-dra granted mourashi mokurari patta in respect of 16 annas share of the disputed lands (7 plots) in favour of defendant 1 Pran Krishna on 23rd June 1921. Plaintiff 1 Debendra resided at the time at Lucknow where he was in the service of the railway company. Surendra held a general power-of-attorney from the plaintiff 1 Debendra. The management of the properties was left with Surendra who used to pay and realize rents and looked after the properties in a general manner.

Plaintiffs' case is that Surendra had no right to grant permanent lease and that the lease in favour of defendant 1 was a fraudulent and collusive transaction and the rights of the plaintiffs could not be affected by the lease. The subject-matter of the Suit No. 15 of 1923 is plots 2 to 7 of the lease. The area is 19 bighas 4 cattas and 11 chittaks of land. In this suit plaintiffs' prayer is for declaration that they have  $\frac{2}{3}$  rds share and for partition. In Suit No. 1 of 1924 the subject-matter is the plot 1 of the disputed lease. Its area is 2 bighas. Plaintiffs in this suit pray for declaration of right and for confirmation of possession of land.

The defence of defendants 1 and 2 inter alia is that the suits are not bona fide, that defendant 3 Surendra had full authority to grant the permanent lease under the general power-of-attorney executed by plaintiff 1 Debendra, that the plaintiffs and Surendra formed an undivided Hindu joint family of which Surendra was the karta, that the plaintiffs were all along aware of the transactions and have ratified them, that the joint family was benefited by the transaction, that the disputed lease was for a selami of Rs. 650 per bigha and on a rental of Rs. 20 per bigha, that Rs. 13,180 was paid as selami, that the suits have been instituted at the instigation of Surendra, that the suits are not maintainable in the present form and that the suits are barred by estoppel, acquiescence and waiver. I should mention here that defendant 1 has granted a permanent lease in respect of the lands in favour of defendant 2.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim of plaintiff 1 Debendra but he decreed the claim of plaintiff 2 Saroda Sundari. He has held that plaintiff 2 has  $\frac{1}{3}$  rd share in the land in Suit No. 15 of 1923 and so he has passed a preliminary decree in this case directing the partition by metes and bounds. In Suit No. 1 of 1924 he has held that the plaintiff 2 has 1/6th share in the jamai right in the 2 bighas plot. So he has declared plaintiff 2's 1/6th share and confirmed her possession in it. Defendant 2 company prefers this appeal.

The appeal came on for hearing on 25th May 1927 before this Court when the following two issues were framed and sent down to the lower Court for specific findings upon the evidence on the record and upon such further evidence as the parties might adduce.

1. Whether plaintiff 2 is estopped from asserting her right to the property in suit by reason of her conduct or of any statement made by her or of her silence when it was her duty to speak? 2. What is the area of the lands in the possession of the tenants under plaintiff 2 and her cosharers which were purchased by Debendra or Surendra either at a Court sale or by private treaty and whether plaintiff 2 was entitled to khas possession of these lands in any event?

The learned Subordinate Judge after taking further evidence has found that the plaintiff 2 is not estopped by reason of her conduct or of any statement made by her or of her silence; with regard to the second issue his finding is that the total quantity of land in the possession of tenants under plaintiff 2 and her co-sharers which was purchased by Surendra and Debendra is 6 bighas 3 cattas. He is of opinion that these tenants had under-raiyati interest and that after they vacated the lands these reverted to the khas possession of their landlords plaintiff 2, Surendra and Debendra and so plaintiff 2 is entitled to get khas possession of her 1/3rd share in the said 6 bighas and 3 cattas. He also finds that the "Pataria" tank which was surrendered by the tenant and the land held by Punna Das came into the khas possession of plaintiff 2 and her cosharers.

The appellant company has taken objection to the findings of the learned Sub-Judge on the two issues stated above. The first point urged by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of defendant 2 is that defendant 2 was protected in the circumstances of the case by S. 41, T. P. Act. It is in evidence that defendant 1 Pran Krishna Chatterji had great confidence in defendant 3 Surendra—defendant 3 Surendra Nath says in his deposition that he helped defendant 1 P. K. Chatterji in the matter of acquisition of lands in that locality for defendant 2 and that P. K. Chatterji had confidence in him.

There were dealings by defendant 3 at the time in thousands of rupees of defendant 1. The office of defendant 1 was located in the house of defendant 3. Defendant 1 occasionally went there. When the office was opened there the females of Suren's family used to cook the food for defendant 1 and his officers. Suren's daughter had some trouble in her eyes and both Suren and Deben went with her to defendant 1's Calcutta house for treatment on one occasion and remained there. The properties in dispute belonged to Prasanna Kumar Chatterji who died in 1885 leaving the widow plaintiff 2, Surendra, defendant 3, Debendra, plaintiff 1 and Rajendra who died in 1899. On the death of Rajendra plaintiff 2 Saroda Sundari inherited his 1/3rd share. Defendant 1 did not know at the time of the patta that Surendra and Debendra had a brother Rajendra and that the mother inherited the 1/3rd share of Rajendra. Defendant 3 Surendra in the permanent lease granted to defendant 1 stated that he and his brother Debendra had the 16 annas share. Some dakhilas, kabuliats, copies of plaints, decrees and sale certificates were produced before defendant 1 by Suren, defendant 3. The dakhilas were granted by Surendra and Debendra to tenants in respect of some of these lands. Ex. G, registered kabuliati was executed by one Purna Chandra Das in favour of Debendra and Surendra on 24th May 1916 in respect of some of these lands. Ex. J. will show that Debendra and Surendra instituted a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in April 1917 against Umasashi, widow of Purna Chandra Das in respect of lands. Ex. 1 is the decree passed in favour of Surendra and Debendra. Ex. K to Ex. K-2, sale-certificates show that Surendra and Debendra purchased some of the lands at sales held in execution of their decrees.

It will be seen that the rent receipts were granted by the two brothers, the kabuliats were obtained by the two brothers and rent suits in respect of the lands were instituted by the two brothers. The two brothers have been dealing with the properties for many years. The evidence of defendant 3 Suren is that his mother's name was not explicitly disclosed in any dakhila granted by them, that all the settlements were made in the names of himself (Suren) and his brother Deben and not in his mother's name and that Sarat Rajak surrendered his holding in the names of the two brothers only. All the properties were recorded in the name of Deben in the settlement proceedings in 1907—I have already said that defendant 1 had great confidence in Suren. Reference has been made to the evidence of P. K. Chatterji defendant 1 where he says:

"Suren and my manager usually approved title. They referred to me in cases where they could not understand. I also consulted my pleader and attorney."

This goes to show that in cases of doubts the documents were referred to P. K. Chatterji by Suren and P. K. Chatterji's manager, and that P. K. Chatterji in those cases consulted pleaders and attorneys. In the present case the title-deeds given to defendant 1 did not show any defect in the title of the two brothers Surendra and Debendra.

It has been urged on the side of the respondent that Ex. 9 mortgage-bond executed by defendant 3 in 1911 in favour of his brother-in-law showed that defendant 3 had one-third share, that defendant 3 had a brother Rajendra and that had defendant 1 enquired for incumbrances in the Registry Office he would have discovered the secret title of the mother. Ex. 9 does not relate to any of the properties in dispute. Had defendant 1 inspected the Registry Office he would have found in the index that some other properties had been mortgaged by Suren to his brother-in-law. That would not have led him to an enquiry as to the title of the properties which are the subject-matter of the lease.

"It is a principle of of natural equity, which must be universally applicable that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title, unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing either that he had direct notice or something which amounts to constructive notice, of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an enquiry, that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it": Ramcoomar Kundu v. Macqueen (1).

S. 41, T. P. Act which was founded on the aforesaid dictum of the Judicial Committee requires the following conditions for its application—(1) that it was by consent, express or implied of the persons claiming title that another person is held out as the ostensible owner of such property; (2) that such ostensible owner transfers it for valuable consideration; (3) that the transferee has acted in good faith and has taken reasonable care to ascertain that the transferrer had power to make the transfer.

The expression "reasonable care" in the section has been interpreted as meaning such care as an ordinary man of business or a person of ordinary prudence would take and it is not enough to assert generally that enquiries should be made or that a prudent man should have made further enquiries but some specific circumstances should be pointed out as the starting point of an enquiry which might be expected to lead to some result.

"It is indeed, scarcely possible to declare a priori what shall be deemed constructive notice, because, unquestionably, that which would not affect one man may be abundantly sufficient to affect another. But I believe I may with sufficient accuracy for my present purpose, and without danger, assert that the cases in which constructive notice has been established, resolve themselves into two classes:—First, cases in which the party charged has had actual notice that the property in dispute was, in fact, charged, encumbered, or in some way affected, and the Court has thereupon bound him with constructive notice of facts and instruments to a knowledge of which he would have been led by an enquiry after the charge, incumbrance, or other circumstance affecting the property of which he had actual notice; and, secondly cases in which the Court has been satisfied from the evidence before it, that the party charged had designedly abstained from enquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice. The proposition of law, upon which the former class of cases proceeds, is not that the party charged had notice of a fact or instrument, which in truth related to the subject in dispute without his knowing that such was the case, but that he had actual notice that it did so relate. The proposition of law, upon which the second class of cases proceeds, is not that the party charged had incautiously neglected to make enquiries, but that he had designedly abstained from such enquiries, for the purpose of avoiding knowledge, a purpose which if proved, would clearly show that he had a suspicion of the truth, and a fraudulent determination not to learn it. If, in short, there is not actual notice that the property is in some way affected, and no fraudulent turning away from a knowledge of facts which the res gesta would suggest to a prudent mind, if mere want of caution, as distinguished from fraudulent and wilful blindness, is all that can be imputed to the purchaser, there the doctrine of constructive notice will not apply; there the purchaser will, in equity, be considered, as in fact he is, a bona fide purchaser without notice."

This is clearly Sir Edward Sugden's opinion (Sugden's Vendor and Purchaser, Ed. 10, Vol. 3, pp. 471, 272), and with that sanction, I have no hesitation in saying it is mine also : see Jones v. Smith (2).

In the present case defendant 1 who had great confidence in defendant 3 Surendra was told by him that he and his brother Debendra had 16-annas share. Defendant 1 from the deeds viz., rent receipts, copies of plaints, sale-certificates, kabuliats etc., produced before him by defendant 3 found that the two brothers had 16-annas share in the properties. Surendra no doubt in his deposition states that he told defendant 1 that he had a brother Rajendra. Defendant 1 denies having been informed about it by Debendra. I have already referred to the recital in the permanent lease to the effect that the two brothers had 16-annas share. There is no doubt that Surendra has perjured himself. The learned Subordinate Judge has also disbelieved the story of Surendra. Had the title of plaintiff 2 been disclosed in any manner to defendant 1 then surely he would have taken care to have plaintiff 2 joined in the lease as he was paying very good price for the property. In this connexion, I should state here that the finding of the Subordinate Judge Mr. M. N. Das to the effect that the mother was at Lucknow at the time of the lease is not supported by evidence. In order to come to the finding that the mother was at Lucknow from 1919 up to the date of the lease i. e., June 1921 the learned Subordinate Judge relies upon the evidence of plaintiff's witnesses and upon a post-card Ex. 13 written by Surendra to Debendra on 26th December 1919. The postcard certainly does not show that the mother was at Lucknow in 1921. The learned Subordinate Judge observes :

" it is only defendant's witness, Rajendra Nath Choudhuri who says that Surendra's mother was at the Bansberiah house when Pran Krishna's office was located there. I feel no hesitation in rejecting this statement as unworthy of credit. "

He is not correct there. There is the evidence of defendant 1 Pran Krishna Chatterji that when he opened his office in Suren's Baithakkhana Suren Babu's mother was at the house, that whenever he went to Bansberiah during the continuance of his work, he all along saw Suren Babu's mother in the house from 1919 to 1921, that he called her as mother also and she used to come out before him and that Suren's mother was aware of all the transactions in dispute at their respective times. There is no reason to disbelieve him as no question was specially put to him in cross-examination with regard to this matter on the side of the plaintiff-respondent.

It is now urged that as defendant 1 knew that Surendra had a mother he ought to have enquired of the mother if she had any share in these properties. Reference has been made by the learned advocate appearing for the respondent to the case Azima Bibi v. Shamalanand (3):

" The appellants were female members of a Mahomedan family which had adopted the Hindu religion in matters of worship, and as to which both Courts in India concurrently held that there was no custom proved excluding female members from inheritance which was the case set up by respondent (who was a pleader of some standing). In a suit brought by the latter to enforce a mortgage bond which had been executed only by the male members of the family, in which the appellants were also joined as defendants, the first Court made a decree against the interest of the male defendants only in the property; but the High Court decreed the suit against both the male and female defendants on the ground that, because the female members had not actively interfered in the management of the property, the male defendants must be taken to have represented them in the mortgage transaction. It appeared that in other transactions the male members of the family had dealt with the family property without the active concurrence of the females. Held : by the Judicial Committee (reversing the decision of the High Court), that the evidence did not prove that the male defendants had " represented " the appellants. The latter were pardashin ladies, and naturally left the management of the properties to their male relatives. There was nothing to show either that the appellants had misled the respondent by word of conduct to the belief that they had no proprietary interest in the property; and he made no enquiries in the matter from them or from their husband as he might have done if he had any doubt in the matter. The decree of the High Court was therefore erroneous so far as it made the appellants liable, and should have been limited to making liable the only interests in the property of the male defendants, the executants of the mortgage bond. "

In the present case as the property belonged to Hindus defendant 1 had no reason to suspect that the mother could have any share in the property while in the ruling referred to as the property belonged to Mahomedans, daughters would ordinarily get shares in the properties of their fathers. In these circumstances defendant 1 should be considered to be a bona fide purchaser without notice.

It has been urged on the side of plaintiff 2 that the consideration money for the lease has not been paid to defendant 3. (The judgment discussed evidence in this respect and concluded.) It is clear from the evidence both oral and documentary that the selami money for Ex. B lease has been duly paid to defendant 3. I have already said that defendant 1 had no direct notice of the title of plaintiff 2. There was no circumstance which would be calculated to put defendant 1 upon enquiry. I now find that the lease was for valuable consideration. In the circumstances of the case defendant 1 was protected by S. 41, T. P. Act. I therefore hold that defendant 1 and consequently defendant 2 has acquired valid and good title to the 16-annas share of the properties in dispute in the two suits i. e. Suit No. 15 of 1923 and Suit No. 1 of 1924 by virtue of the lease Ex. B.

The next point urged in Appeal No. 10 of 1926 on the side of the appellant is that in case of a decree for partition there should be a partition of all the lands of plaintiffs 1 and 2 and defendants 3. In my opinion there is substance in this contention and all the lands of the brothers and the mother should be brought into the hotchpot. In the first place defendants 1 and 2 are cosharers of the two brothers and their mother. Defendants 1 and 2 obtained permanent lease of the lands and so they have subordinate interest. In the second place there is evidence on the record to show that defendant 3 and the two plaintiffs have other lands. The evidence of plaintiff 1 is that they have 18 bighas of land in Sultangacha, 4 bighas near Charaktola and some properties at Amta. They have also a commodious dwelling house. The general principle no doubt is that a co-sharer in joint property cannot by dealing with such property affect the interest of the other cosharers therein. There can be a partition between parties the interest of one of whom is subordinate to that of the others. In the present case plaintiff 2 is an old lady over 80 years old. On her death the property will go to plaintiff 1 and defendant 3. In these circumstances we are of opinion that all the properties of plaintiff 1 and 2 and defendants 3 should be partitioned so that if possible the properties in dispute may be allotted to defendant 3 and plaintiff 1. In that case defendant 2 would be recouped out of the share of the lessors. I should mention here that it is not urged on the side of defendant 2 appellant that the suit is not maintainable in its present form inasmuch as all the properties have not been brought into the hotchpot. His contention which is to the effect that all the properties may be included so that as a matter of equitable relief defendant 2 may get these lands from the share of plaintiff 1 and defendant 3 and that plaintiff 2 may get her allotment elsewhere is well-founded. In this connexion I should mention here that the learned counsel appearing for the defendant 2 states that defendant 2 is ready to bear all the costs of such partition. Reference has been made to Sris Chandra v. Mahima Chandra (4) on the side of the respondents. It was a suit by a lessee for partition of the lands leased out to him. Defendant 2 no doubt can bring a suit for partition of these properties alone. So the ruling referred to above has no application to the present case.

In view of my finding on the first point i. e. regarding the protection afforded to defendant 2 under S. 41, T. P. Act, we hold that plaintiff 2 is not entitled to succeed in the two suits. The claim of plaintiff 1 has been dismissed in the lower Court and he has not preferred any appeal. So the Appeals Nos. 10 and 102 of 1926 are allowed with costs. The decrees and judgment of the Subordinate Judge are set aside so far as they were in favour of plaintiff 2. The suits are dismissed with costs. In Appeal No. 102 costs one gold mohur.

Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 1—Suit dismissed on merits—Plaintiff should not be allowed by withdrawing suit in appeal to start proceedings again because of formal defects in plaint.

It is not intended or contemplated by O. 23, R. 1 that after a suit has been tried and dismissed on the merits, the plaintiff should be permitted to withdraw in appeal from the suit and to start proceedings all over again against the successful defendants merely because there was also a formal defect in the frame of the suit: 13 M. I. A. 160 and 11 C. L. J. 45, Rel. on. [P 89 C 2]

Bijan Kumar Mukherji — for Petitioners.

Bhut Nath Chatterji — for Opposite Party.

Judgment. — This rule was issued under S. 115, Civil P. C., on an application to set aside an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan allowing the plaintiff to withdraw a suit. The suit was brought by the plaintiff who is one of sixteen shebais of the deity Damar Jiu, for possession of certain immovable property to which he claimed to be entitled, and of which he alleged that the other shebais in collusion with a tenant of the land had dispossessed him. The land in suit had been purchased by the grandfather of the plaintiff in the name of the deity, but the plaintiff alleged that the land was secular and not debatter property the title to which had passed to him in his personal right. The suit was tried and determined on the merits, and in the event was dismissed upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title or that the property was secular property. The learned trial Judge further held that inasmuch as one of the shebais had not been impleaded and the heirs of another (who had died pendente lite) had not been substituted there was a defect of parties, and upon that ground also the suit failed. The plaintiff lodged an appeal and in the course of the hearing before the lower appellate Court the plaintiff applied for permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit upon the same cause of action. The learned Subordinate Judge acceded to the plaintiff's prayer and passed an order allowing "the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action against the other shebais (i. e., other than the plaintiff) in their character as shebait persons claiming under them as such."

Whether or not, apart from the present suit, the plaintiff is at liberty to take further proceedings in this matter against the defendants need not now be considered. The question is whether this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order under review, and, if so, whether it ought to exercise its powers under S. 115, Civil P. C., in favour of the petitioners. Now, the object of the legislature in enacting O. 23, R. 1, as I apprehend, was that where a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect or some other "sufficient ground" was proved, the Court should be at liberty, in order that substantial justice might be done, to permit the plaintiff (on such terms, if any, as it thought fit) to withdraw the suit, and to recommence the proceedings in a suit duly framed according to law. But, in my opinion, it was never intended or contemplated that after a suit had been tried and dismissed on the merits the plaintiff should be permitted to start the proceedings all over again against the successful defendants merely because there was also a formal defect in the frame of the suit: Watson v. Collector of Rajshahye (1), Khorda Co. v. Durga Chandra (2). Otherwise, much hardship and prejudice might accrue to defendants who already had contested the suit, and had succeeded in defeating the plaintiff's claim on the merits.

Now, in this case, as I read the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, he was of opinion that so soon as it became apparent that there was a formal defect in the frame of the suit he ought to allow the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, without taking into consideration the fact that the suit had been heard and decided against the plaintiff on the merits. In my opinion, in adopting that view the learned Subordinate Judge misdirected himself as to the meaning and effect of O. 23, R. 1, and the order under review cannot stand.

The result is that the rule will be made absolute, and the appeal remitted to the lower appellate Court to be determined according to law. I assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for assessment and recovery of rent.
It appears that the mahal belongs to the plaintiff and many other cosharers one of whom is the Raja of Dighapatia. In 1884 the plaintiff's father brought a suit in respect of his share in this mahal from which he was dispossessed by the Raja and obtained a decree. Since then, the finding is, the plaintiff has never realized any rent in respect of his share in the mahal which was found to be annas five three eighth pies. In the Record-of-Rights the plaintiff was recorded as a cosharer with the remark that there was no realization of rent in respect of his share.
This suit the plaintiff has now brought for ascertainment of the rent, the defendants are liable to pay to him. The defence is that the plaintiff has no right in the mahal, that the defendants were in adverse possession of the plaintiff's share in the mahal, if he had any, that the lands which are char lands did not originally form part of the mahal but were subsequently recovered from the Government by the Raja and other cosharers who settled the lands with the defendants. The trial Court gave a decree to the plaintiff on the finding that the plaintiff had the share claimed by him in the mahal and as the defendants are tenants of the mahal they cannot resist the plaintiff's claim for rent nor can they set up adverse possession against him. The appellate Court has dismissed the plain-tiff's suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge says that there is no evidence that there was a contract for payment of rent between the plaintiff and the defendants.

With regard to the establishment of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties by operation of law, the learned Subordinate Judge remarks that there is no decree of any competent Court.
Then he goes on to observe that these lands are charlands and were not the subject-matter of the suit which the plaintiff's father had brought against the Raja and in which he recovered a decree in respect of his fractional share. In this view he holds that though the plaintiff has got his name registered under the Land Registration Act he is not entitled to recover rent from the defendants under S. 60, Ben. Ten. Act. The learned Subordinate Judge further holds that the other cosharers of the plaintiff were necessary parties to the suit.

With regard to the last point it may be observed that in a suit for assessment of rent, the other cosharers are not ordinarily necessary parties. It does not appear that any question was ever raised with regard to the extent of the plaintiff's share. He has proved a decree of 1884 which gave him the share he now claims and there is no evidence, according to the judgments of both the Courts below, that that share was ever in dispute. As to the first point on which the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit, namely, that he has failed to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the defendants, it is enough to say that such a relationship does not always arise by contract or agreement. Such relationship may arise by mere occupation of agricultural land. The learned vakil for the respondent has fairly put the case of his clients before us and has asked us to hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover rent but damages for use and occupation. It is not necessary to go into the question as to when rent can be claimed in the shape of damages but the result being the same and the Record-of-Rights being in favour of the plaintiff with regard to the proprietary title we do not see why a suit for rent cannot be maintained. The plaintiff's right to recover rent must be determined on the status of the defendants. If the defendants are tenants of the holding and do not profess to claim any higher title than that of a tenant they are liable to pay rent to the plaintiff for his share as to the other cosharers.

With regard to the point made by the learned Subordinate Judge that the char lands were not in existence at the time when plaintiff's father recovered a decree against the Raja of Dighapatia we are not in a position to find out the real state of things as the point was not made in the trial Court. The defendants in para. 15 of the written statement have given a story which does not seem to have been fairly considered by the lower Court. Their case is that when these lands were reformed the Government took possession of them and settled them with the defendants. Thereupon the Raja brought a suit against the Government and recovered these lands on which the defendants took a fresh settlement from the Raja who is in possession of these lands through the defendants. This story has not been carefully examined by any of the Courts below. It must be noted that the defendants have not expressly in their written statement set up the right of a third party nor do they say that they have been paying, under a bona fide belief, rent in respect of the plaintiff's share to some one else. If it is found that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing his title to the land in suit which is in the occupation of the defendants as tenants he is entitled to a decree though he might not have realized rent for the last 40 years. If on the other hand he fails to establish this point, the question has to be considered as to whether the defendants or any of the other cosharers of the plaintiff by adverse possession have acquired any title to the land in suit. It is accordingly necessary that the matter should be reconsidered by the lower appellate Court. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and the case sent back to it for a re-hearing of the appeal according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal No. 322 of 1927, Decided on 20th July 1928, from order of Sub-Judge, Pabna, D/- 26th April 1927.

A decree for mesne profits can only be made against the trespasser in a suit for ejectment if ejectment is decreed. If on an appeal against the decree for ejectment that decree is set aside, there cannot possibly be a decree for mesne profits. If, during the pendency of the appeal against the decree for ejectment, a decree for mesne profits has been made, that decree should be considered as a decree dependent upon the original decree for ejectment, and if that decree is set aside the subsequent decree awarding mesne profits on the basis that the plaintiff has obtained a decree for ejectment must fall; and the same should be the result if the two decrees are passed simultaneously. [P 92 C 1]

B. B. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder under somewhat peculiar circumstances. The decree-holder brought a suit for ejectment and mesne profits against the judgment-debtors in which suit he got a decree for ejectment and mesne profits in the trial Court. The judgment-debtors appealed against the decree which directed ejectment and they were successful in getting the decree set aside. They did not appeal against the final decree for mesne profits which apparently was passed along with the decree for ejectment by the trial Court. What the Subordinate Judge did in decreeing the appeal preferred by the defendant was that he stated that the decree for mesne profits would stand. The plaintiff in the previous suit now seeks for execution of the decree for mesne profits, although his suit for ejectment was dismissed and he was allowed mesne profits only upon the basis that the defendants were trespassers on his land. The learned Munsif held that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to make the order that the decree with regard to mesne profits should stand although he dismissed the suit for ejectment and upon that he allowed the execution to proceed. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision. He has held in effect that when the decree for ejectment was set aside the decree for mesne profits as against the defendants as trespasser was without jurisdiction. He has also ordered consequential steps to be taken to give relief to the judgment-debtor because during the pendency of the proceeding in the lower appellate Court the property of the judgment-debtor was sold in execution of that decree.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the decree of the Subordinate Judge might have been erroneous but the executing Court has no power to refrain from executing the decree and, therefore, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous.

The real question for consideration in this case is whether, when the preliminary decree was set aside the final decree for mesne profits should be considered to stand. A decree for mesne profits can only be made against the trespasser in a suit for ejectment if ejectment is decreed. If on an appeal against the decree for ejectment that decree is set aside there cannot possibly be a decree for mesne profits. If during the pendency of the appeal against the decree for ejectment a decree for mesne profits has been made that decree should be considered as a decree dependent upon the original decree for ejectment, and if that decree is set aside the subsequent decree awarding mesne profits on the basis that the plaintiff has obtained a decree for ejectment must fall; and the same should be the result if the two decrees are passed simultaneously. If the all important decree for ejectment is wiped out there cannot be any ground upon which the decree for mesne profits can stand. In that view it must be held in my opinion that the decree for mesne profits was nullified by the decree made dismissing the plaintiff's suit for ejectment. In that view there was no decree which the plaintiff decree-holder could execute as for mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge in his decree stated that the decree for mesne profits would stand. That portion of the decree was absolutely without jurisdiction. The decree as regards mesne profits was not before him. The defendants had only appealed against the decree allowing ejectment and that appeal he had allowed. In my opinion the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs.

Criminal Appeal No. 893 of 1927, Decided on 22nd May 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 423—Certain facts happening after jury's verdict and not found on record—High Court cannot alter or reduce sentence on that basis.

Facts which happened after the verdict of the jury had been given, and which are not found on the Sessions record, will not induce the High Court to alter or reduce sentence in appeal. [P 93 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 423—Jury not constituted according to provision of law—This fact not made ground of appeal—Still High Court should interfere.

The jury which was empanelled to try a person was not constituted in the manner provided by law, i. e., in accordance with principles laid down in A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 83 (F.B.). This fact was not, however made a ground in the appeal.

Held: that the High Court was bound to interfere and remand the case for retrial since the Court constituted to try the case was, though not illegal, certainly irregular. [P 93 C 1]

Fazlul Huq, Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Janhabi Churn Das Gupta—for Appellant.

C. C. Ghose, J.—In this case the appeal was admitted on the ground of sentence. The appellant has urged that if the facts set out in para. 7 of his petition affirmed with an affidavit bearing date 27th April 1928, had been brought to the notice of the jury the jury might have taken a different view and that bearing that in mind the sentence ought to be reduced. The facts set out in para. 7 of the petition referred to above happened after the verdict of the jury had been given, and it is inconceivable to us how those facts could be utilized for the purpose of inducing this Court to alter or reduce the sentence passed on the appellant in any manner whatsoever. Those facts are not facts to be found on the Sessions record. Therefore, if the matter stood alone the question of sentence would have to be considered from the point of view indicated above and the result would be that this Court would find itself unable to interfere with the sentence imposed in this case. But in this appeal our attention has been drawn by Mr. Fazlul Huq to the fact that the jury who were empanelled to try the appellant were not constituted in the manner provided by law, that is, in accordance with the interpretation of the law in that behalf given in the Full Bench case reported in Kedar Nath v. Emperor (1). The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer whose attention was drawn to this fact after examination of the order-sheet, admits that the jury were constituted in violation of the principle laid down in the Full Bench case. That being so it follows that the constitution of the Court that was to try the appellant was if not illegal certainly irregular. It is perfectly true that this is not the ground upon which the appeal was admitted; but now that the matter has been brought to our notice and as the matter involves the question of jurisdiction going to the root of the trial it is our bounden duty to take notice of it and act accordingly.

The result, therefore, is that the verdict of the jury in this case must be set aside, the conviction and sentence will also accordingly be set aside and the case must go back for re-trial of the appellant in accordance with law.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain properties on establishment of the plaintiff's title thereto and for certain other reliefs. The properties in suit comprised a large number of cadastral survey plots of which one only, namely, cadastral survey plot No. 521, need be specially mentioned in view of the contentions that have been urged in connexion with the appeal. The trial Court decreed the suit in part declaring the plaintiff's title to plot No. 521 and directed that the plaintiff would recover possession of the said plot from the defendants on payment of Rs. 100 to the latter as compensation. An appeal was preferred by the plaintiff, and a cross-appeal by the defendants from the decision of the trial Judge. The learned Additional District Judge has decreed the plaintiff's appeal and dismissed the cross-appeal, thereby decreeing the plaintiffs' suit in full. The defendants have thereupon preferred this second appeal.

It is necessary to state only a few facts in order to appreciate the grounds that have been urged in connexion with this appeal. The lands in suit are said to appertain to a jote of one Gurai Bera. Gurai Bera died leaving a widow named Susila and two daughters, Kamini Dasi and Bhadramoni Dasi, the latter being the plaintiff in the present suit. After the death of Susila, Kamini and Bhadramoni jointly possessed all the properties, and while they were thus in possession, defendants 1 and 2 having got a decree for money against the husband of Kamini and in execution thereof put up some of the properties alleging that they belonged to Kamini's husband and purchased and took possession of the same some time in 1907. In 1909 the plaintiff instituted a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of a half-share in the properties that had been purchased and taken possession of in the aforesaid way by defendants 1 and 2. This suit included all the lands covered by the present suit except C. S. dag No. 521. The cause of action in that suit was said to be a dispossession that had been effected by defendants 1 and 2 in 1314, that is to say, sometime in 1907. This suit eventually terminated in a decree by which the title of Bhadramoni to a half share in the properties was declared and possession thereof was decreed in her favour. The present suit was instituted by Bhadramoni after the death of Kamini which took place in Bhadra 1330, the plaintiff's allegation being that as the surviving daughter of her father she became entitled to Kamini's share and went to take possession of the same but was resisted by the defendants. The grounds urged on behalf of the appellants are mainly three.

The first ground is to the effect that the question of limitation had not been adequately dealt with by the Courts below. It is urged that although a suit of this description would ordinarily be governed by Art. 141, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, in view of special features of this case the article that is to be considered applicable is Art. 144. It is said that the plaintiff, after the purchase which defendants 1 and 2 had made in 1907 was aware of the fact that the said defendants had been in adverse possession of the share of Kamini in the properties in suit and that inasmuch as the said defendants being thus in possession for a period of over 12 years had acquired an indefeasible right to that share the plaintiff has no right to institute the present suit, because whatever right Kamini had in the property had, before her death, been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. In support of this contention, much reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (1).

It is necessary to consider this decision of the Judicial Committee somewhat in detail in view of the misapprehension, that is involved in the arguments that have been advanced as based on it. In that case, the facts to put them quite shortly, were these: A Hindu died in 1849 leaving a widow C who survived until 1902. The widow made an adoption in 1862 and thereafter she put the adopted son in possession of certain properties belonging to the estate and reserving some others for her own maintenance. The adopted son then began to deal with the properties of which possession was given to him as absolute owner thereof. The adopted son died in 1864 leaving a widow M, who adopted a son after her husband's death. This adopted son died in 1881, leaving a widow who died in 1882 but during their lifetime they possessed the properties. On the death of this widow in 1882 her mother-in-law M i. e. the adoptive mother of her husband, took possession of the properties for a Hindu widow's interest and held it till 1884 when C forcibly ejected her. M then instituted a suit against C and others for recovery of possession of the properties alleging that her husband was the adoptive son of C, while C denied this adoption. This suit was commenced in 1887 and terminated in 1892 in a decree in favour of M in which the adoption was declared invalid but M's title by adverse possession was found. C died in 1902, and upon that the reversionary heirs of C's husband who had died in 1849, instituted a suit for recovery of possession against the persons who were then in possession.

The two main defences of the defendants which the Judicial Committee considered were: first, that the suit was barred by the result of the litigation of 1887-92, the plaintiff's claim being barred by the decision which had been obtained against C by M, the predecessor of the defendants, in which M's title by adverse possession had been declared; and second, that the suit was barred by limitation, because the plaintiff's claim depended upon displacing the apparent adoption and the suit was not instituted within 12 years of the adoption being made, as it should have been under Act. 9 of 1871, Sch. 2, Art. 129, and because Art. 141, Act 15 of 1877, would not apply as this last-mentioned Act did not come into force when that period of 12 years expired,—the said period having expired in 1874. The Judicial Committee disposed of the suit on this last-mentioned defence. Their Lordships also dealt in detail with the authorities which had been cited at the Bar in support of the first of these defences prefacing their observations with these words :

"A protracted argument was submitted to the Board on the question whether under the Hindu Law adverse possession against a widow in possession of an estate for a Hindu widow's interest bars a reversioner. While it is not necessary in the view which will later be announced by the Board on the question of limitation in this case to make any formal pronouncement upon this point, it may be convenient to say that the authorities referred to were as follow".

Then followed a detailed examination of the authorities, and after that their Lordships observed thus :

"The result of the cases to which their Lordships have referred shows, in their opinion, that the Board has invariably applied the rule of the Katama Nachiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (2) as sound Hindu Law where that rule was applicable."

Now the Shivagunga case (2) related to the case of a decree fairly and properly obtained in the presence of a Hindu widow. To cases of such decrees their Lordships' observations unquestionably apply. Both the proposition that was deducible from the principles laid down in that case, namely that :

"it is impossible to escape the conclusion that an adverse possession which barred the widow will also bar the heirs" (Per Jackson, J. at p. 510), or that,

"when we look at the widow as a representative, and see that the reversionary heirs are bound by decrees relating to her husband's estate which are obtained against her without fraud or collusion, we are of opinion that they are also bound by limitation, by which she, without fraud or collusion, is barred (per Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. at p. 509)"— propositions enunciated in the case of Nobin Chunder v. Issur Chunder (3) need not be taken to have been approved of by the Judicial Committee. The law of limitation was altered by Act 9 of 1871 and Act 15 of 1877. Their Lordships did not consider the effect of the alteration of the law and the case, in my opinion, is not to be understood as overruling the uniform current of decisions of all the Courts in India which have had the concurrence and approval of their Lordships all along. In Harinath Chatter- ji v. Mothoor Mohan Goswami (4) the Judicial Committee drew a distinction between the effect of a decree adverse to the widow as representing the estate and the effect of adverse possession as against her, and held that Art. 141 in the Schedule to Act 15 of 1877 fixing the date of female heirs' decease as the starting point for limitation, did not alter the existing law as to the effect of a decree adverse to the predecessor as representing the estate, nor did the said article or Art. 142 in the Schedule to Act 9 of 1871 give a new starting point to the successor. This decision did not decide that adverse possession against the widow for the statutory period precludes the reversioners from availing themselves of the benefit of Art. 141, but the crux of the decision was the decree which barred the reversioners on the principle of res judicata. The result, no doubt, as pointed out by Norris and Macpherson, JJ. in the case of Hari Nath v. Mothoor Mohan (4) is anomalous, as no length of possession adverse to the widow would bar the reversioners who have 12 years reckoned from the widow's death to sue, but if the widow sues to recover the property from the person in adverse possession and fails, the reversioners are bound by the decree. But it should be remembered that law always is not logic.

The Full Bench decision of this Court in Sreenath Kuar v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (5) is now the settled law in all the Indian Courts and there is no real reason to suppose that the Judicial Committee intended to touch it by their decision in Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (1). The observations of the Judicial Committee in Runchordas v. Parvatibhai (6) are clear authority for the proposition that Art. 144 which makes the period of limitation commence from the date when the possession of the defendant is adverse to the plaintiff does not apply where a suit is otherwise specially provided for. The Courts below have in our opinion, been right in holding that Art. 141 applies to the case. The first ground urged in support of the appeal must, therefore, fail.

The second ground urged is to the effect that the plaintiff's claim in so far as it relates to C. S. dag No. 521 is barred by O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. This argument overlooks the fact that the cause of action in the previous suit was entirely different from the cause of action in the present one. In the previous suit the plaintiff alleged that he had been dispossessed by defendants 1 and 2 after they had made the purchase in 1909 at the auction sale of the properties other than C. S. dag No. 521. The causes of action in the two suits being different, O. 2, R. 2 has no application whatsoever. It is only where some relief is abandoned or omitted from the prayers that are made on a particular cause of action that that rule has any application. This argument therefore has no force.

The third ground that has been urged in support of the appeal relates to the question of the sufficiency of the finding at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived on the question of the relinquishment that was set up on behalf of the defendants. The defendants' case was that after the decree in the earlier suit there was a relinquishment by the plaintiff in favour of defendants 1 and 2 in respect of the interest of Kamini and that there was an arrangement under which the parties came to be in separate possession of specific plots of land. The Additional District Judge, in disagreement with the finding of the trial Court, has held that the story as regards this relinquishment cannot be accepted. This is a pure question of fact and it is not possible for us in second appeal to interfere with the finding, as regards this matter, that has been arrived at by the learned Additional District Judge. This ground also fails. All the contentions urged on behalf of the appellants fail and this appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order made by a learned Judge on the original side whereby he stayed the plaintiff's suit under S. 19, Arbitration Act. It appears that the suit was brought by the plaintiff for breach of an agreement to supply certain goods, one term of the agreement being that the goods which the plaintiff was to receive were to be goods of which he would have in some sense a monopoly so far as India was concerned, and the plaintiff's suit was for damages for the defendant's wrongful conduct in sending other goods of the same kind to other ports in India in breach of their agreement. The defendants are a limited Company, Baerlein Bros. Ltd., incorporated in the United Kingdom and carrying on business at Manchester in England.

The plaintiff Radha Kanta Dass who carries on business in Calcutta being minded to get goods from England approached a person called M. N. Dutta and signed what is called an indent form. This is a common method of doing business when purchase of goods from abroad is desired and in all these forms, which are very badly drafted as a rule, one gets complicated questions as to whether the person to whom the indent is addressed is an agent for the buyer, an agent for the seller or whether the seller is his agent and so on.

The first step was that the plaintiff signed and sent to Dutta an indent, in one case on 15th February 1927. That indent refers to Messrs. Baerlein Bros. Ltd. It begins:

"I we request your agents suppliers principals Messrs Baerlein Bros. Ltd., to buy for me us and ship on my our account and risk." and so forth. There are great many clauses of the indent which refer to how the goods are to be paid for, the liability of M. N. Dutta, the rights of M. N. Dutta and, indeed, other matters.

The arbitration clause is the seventh clause:

"In case of any dispute with regard to this order, you or your agents are to have the option of cancelling this order or submitting the matter to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or to one or two European merchants resident in Calcutta for arbitration as between us and your agents and his their decision or that of his their referee shall be binding upon both parties."

This clause after further provisions ends up by saying:

"It is hereby expressly agreed that you will in no way be held responsible for the payment of any allowance etc. that may be awarded at the survey or that may otherwise be due to us until fully realized from your agents or suppliers and that the provisions made in this para, shall in no way affect the relation between us as between principal and principals and shall in no way affect any of the terms herein stated."

These are in all 16 clauses containing somewhat elaborate terms and these indents having been signed by the plaintiff, it would appear that Dutta telegraphed to Manchester and that Baerlein Brothers accordingly sent certain sale-notes to the plaintiff. Those sale-notes are as follows:

"We are in receipt of your esteemed order sent by Mr. M. N. Dutta and have booked the same with thanks as specified hereunder."

Accordingly a description of the goods is given and a reference to the monopoly arrangement is included and the terms of payment are set out. Upon that the plaintiff replied to Messrs. Baerlein Brothers at Manchester as follows :

" We duly received your favour of the 16th February confirming our order for 120 bales 60/1 Turkey Red John Orr Ewing & Co. Sun & Lion quality at 46½d. per lb. shipment 10 B/s monthly commencing September 1927 to August 1928 which we find correct."

Now, the first thing to consider is whether the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants is a contract of which clause 7 of the indent is a part or whether, as is contended by Mr. Langford James, the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants does not include that term at all. Mr. Langford James contends that as Dutta merely telegraphed the effect of the plaintiff's order to Manchester and as the sale-note contains no express reference to the indent which the plaintiff signed, it is not shown that clause 7 of the indent was any part of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants. If that can be made out then of course Mr. James' client is entitled to resist this application to stay the suit.

I am not, however, of opinion that it can be said that this particular clause of the indent or, indeed, any other clause of the indent was no part of the bargain between the plaintiff and the defendants. It seems to me that the mere circumstance that this man Dutta who carries on an indenting business does not repeat to Manchester the whole of the indent clauses has no effect upon the question. The plaintiff's offer was an offer upon all the terms of this indent and although the words "agents" "suppliers" and "principals" are used in a confusing and, indeed, rather absurd manner they are used in this case with reference to and are demonstrative of Messrs. Baerlein Brothers Limited. The intention was that Messrs. Baerlein Brothers Limited should have the right of clause 7 and, in my judgment, when that order was booked by telegram it is not right to say that Baerlein Brothers were contracting with the plaintiff independently of the indent form. In my judgment the indent form signed by the plaintiff is a part of the offer which Baerlein Brothers accepted. It is the only order which the plaintiff gave and, in my judgment, it is not correct to say that the order which is referred to in the sale-note is the telegraphic order sent by Mr. M. N. Dutta. The order referred to in the sale-note "your esteemed order sent by Mr. M. N. Dutta" does not mean the telegram or cablegram of Mr. Dutta. It means the order given by Mr. Dutta which Mr. Dutta repeats to Manchester.

In the same way when the plaintiff comes to finally close the matter he says:

" We duly received your favour of the 16th February confirming our order for 120 bales " and so on. It does not seem to me possible to construe this contract by assuming that the whole of this indent is left out as between the plaintiff and the actual suppliers. The purpose of the indent would be entirely nugatory if that was so. That being so, I am of opinion that this clause is a submission clause and a part of the bargain. It is a clause in writing and, therefore, the question arises whether as it has not been signed by Baerlein Brothers it is a submission within the meaning of the Indian Arbitration Act.

Upon that point the case law at one time was in some confusion. The first case was the case of In re E. D. Lewis : Ex parte Munro (1) which was followed apparently in Caerleon Tinplate Co. Ltd. v. Hughes (2). So far authority was in favour of the view that it was necessary that the agreement should be signed by both parties. Apparently in the case of Ram Narain v. Liladhar Lowjee Woodroffe, J., assumed that to be the law though I do not gather that the exact point was relevant to the case before him. In the case of Suhhamal Bunsidhar v. Babu Lal Kedia & Co. (4) that also was assumed to be the law in the judgment of Walsh, J., where he said :

" We agree with the view taken by Woodroffe, J., in Ram Narain v. Liladhar Lowjee (3) and with the majority of the English cases on this point, particularly Caerleon Tinplate Co. v. Hughes (2) that that provision involves a submission signed by both parties or their agents."

Later in India the same has been laid down by my learned brother Page, J., in John Balt & Co. (London) Ltd. v. Kanoolal & Co. (5). Page, J., notices certain other English cases. He has noticed the case of Baker v. Yorkshire Fire and Life Assurance Co. (6), the case of Hickman v. Kent or Romney Marsh Sheep-Breeders Association (7) and the case of Anglo Newfoundland Development Co. v. Rejem (8). He says, however, that these cases are to be distinguished on the ground that the plaintiff was estopped from asserting that he had not assented to the arbitration clause.

In my judgment the law is the other way. The Arbitration Act of 1889 and the Indian Arbitration Act for the best of good reasons have not required that the agreement to submit should be signed by both parties. What has been required is a written agreement to submit and Baker's case, Hickman's case and the case of Anglo Newfoundland Development Co. show that it is illegitimate to import into the Statute the requirement of a signature by both parties.

This it seems to me has nothing to do with estoppel. In the case of Baker v. Yorkshire Fire and Life Assurance Co. (6), the plaintiff brought the suit upon a policy. No doubt he was estopped from asserting that he had not assented to an arbitration clause, but he was not estopped from asserting that he had not signed the arbitration clause. In Hickman's case (7), Astbury, J., lays down the law in the following terms which were afterwards accepted by the Court of appeal in the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company's case (8):

"The result of these decisions is, I think, that if the submission is in writing and is binding on both parties as their agreement or as the equivalent in law to an agreement between them, the statute is satisfied" and as Bankes, L. J., pointed out following the decision in Baker's case (6) it is not necessary that both parties should have signed the written agreement. If a person has accepted the written agreement and acted upon it he is bound for this purpose although he may not have set his hand to the document.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the law as laid down by Page, J., in the case cited is not accurate and in the present case I do not think that the mere fact that Baerlein Brothers have not put their signature to the indent form is a matter of any consequence. However, if I am right in thinking that the reference in the sale-note to the order of the plaintiff is a reference to the indent which the plaintiff signed this point does not really give trouble.

It remains only to consider whether there is in this case a good ground which would entitle us to say that the learned Judge has wrongly exercised his discretion in requiring the plaintiff to abide by the arbitration clause. I cannot help observing that such clauses are frequently signed very light heartedly; but it is absolutely essential that people when they enter into contracts should abide by them although no doubt there is power in Court to refuse to stay. When a person in Calcutta is buying goods from another person in Manchester, if the arbitration clause is a part of the contract it may often be exceedingly unfair to one or other of the parties if the arbitration clause is not insisted upon. I see no reason in this case to think that the learned Judge was wrong in insisting that the parties should abide by the arbitration clause. For these reasons I think that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

C. C. Ghose, J.—I agree.

* Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act (Bengal Act 13 of 1923), S. 4—Act applies to females under S.16, whether married or not—Bengal Children Act (2 of 1922).

Acts apply whether the female in question is unmarried or married and the whole matter turns not on the status of the female from the point of view of marriage or no marriage but on the question of age. If the word "girl" were limited to mean a young unmarried female, it would be easy for a person who desired to live on the immoral earning of young girls to marry them solely for the purpose of enabling him to put himself outside the provisions of the statutes and to set the whole law at defiance. Costello, J.—This was a rule obtained on behalf of one Panchu Gopal Shaw who is said to be the husband of one Sakuntala who is a female child under the age of 16 years. I use the expression "female child" advisedly because the question that calls for decision in this case depends upon the right interpretation of the word "girl" as used in S. 4, Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, 1923 which is Bengal Act 13 of that year.

The matter arises in this way. The learned Magistrate of the Juvenile Court, Calcutta on 11th August of this year made an order that Sakuntala should be detained for six years and her sister Urmila should be detained for ten years in the Greave's Home. These periods were based upon the facts that in the case of Sakuntala her age was 12 years and in the case of Urmila some two years less. The Magistrate is obviously desirous that these two children should remain in the home until they attain the age of 18 years. The Magistrate made the order because, as he says, the evidence adduced before him satisfied him that they should be dealt under the provisions of the Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act. The order which he made was made under the provisions of S. 4 of that Act which provides in effect that the Commissioner of Police or certain other officers may remove a girl apparently under the age of 16 years from a brothel and the girl so removed may be detained in suitable custody until she attains the age of 16 years; that is provided by sub-S. 2 of that section. Having made that order the learned Presidency Magistrate made a further order, namely that the present petitioner Panchu Gopal Shaw should be brought before the Court in order that he might be dealt with under S. 31, Bengal Children Act 1922. By that section it is provided that the Court which makes an order for the committal of a child or young person to suitable custody may order the parent or other person liable to maintain the young person to contribute to her maintenance, if able to do so. The learned Presidency Magistrate was of opinion that he had power to make an order directing that the husband of Sakuntala should be required to contribute to her maintenance while she was detained in the Greave's Home.

This rule was issued by us because we thought that it was desirable that we should hear argument upon the question as to whether or not the provisions of S. 4, Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, could be made to apply to the case where the child in question happened to be married. I invited the learned advocate for the petitioner to direct our attention, if he could, to any provision either in the Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, 1923 or in the Bengal Children Act, 1922 which in any way limited the meaning of the word "girl" as used in S. 4, Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, and he was in fact unable to do anything of the kind. There is no limitation, in my opinion, placed on the meaning of the word "girl" as used in that section. It may perhaps be said that in ordinary speech the use of the word implies that the person referred to is unmarried. But obviously the primary meaning of the word is a young female human being. Indeed the earlier meaning of the word was a human being of either sex. But generally speaking the word "girl" simply means a young female; and when one reads sub-S. (1) in conjunction with sub-S. (2) the matter becomes abundantly clear, because sub-S. (2) uses the expression "if satisfied that the girl is under 16 years of age."

The Calcutta Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, 1923 and the Bengal Children Act, 1922 are really part and parcel of a scheme of legislation designed for the protection of children and particularly for the protection of minor females. I see no reason at all for ascribing to the word "girl" any such limitation as the learned advocate for the petitioner has invited us to put upon it. In my opinion the Act applies whether the female in question is unmarried or married and the whole matter turns not on the status of the female from the point of view of marriage or no marriage but on the question of age. It is quite true that in certain cases it may happen that it would be a hardship that a husband who wants to have his wife in his custody should not be allowed to have her with him. But it seems to me very unlikely that such a case would really occur because he would have had an opportunity of putting his case before the Magistrate who deals with the matter that is provided in the Bengal Children Act, and it would be a question whether it was desirable in the interests of the young female that she should be placed in a suitable custody other than that of her husband or whether she should be handed over to her husband. The material question in this class of cases is the fundamental one of whether or not the female child concerned is living in such circumstances as to bring her within the terms of S. 4. If the Magistrate is satisfied that the circumstances are such that she does come within the ambit of that section then, in my opinion, he is certainly entitled to make the order that he did. I do not think that we are really concerned with the facts of the case, because I think the Magistrate has found quite clearly that the circumstances of this case are such as to justify him upon those facts in making the order which he thought fit to make.

On the other side the matter is this: the whole purpose and the obvious design of this Act would be defeated if the limitation which we are invited to put upon the word "girl" were put upon it by this Court, as it would then be easy for a person who desired to live on the immoral earning of young girls to marry them solely for the purpose of enabling him to put himself outside the provisions of the statutes and to set the whole law at defiance. Personally I have no doubt whatever that both these Acts apply to females under the age of 16 years whether they happened to have gone through the ceremony of marriage and become legally married or not. That being the position this rule must be discharged.

Lort-Williams, J.—I am not prepared to disagree. I must admit that I have felt considerable anxiety over this matter because it astonishes me to find in the case of a female whose husband is prepared to take her to a respectable home that a Magistrate has power to deprive the husband of the custody and companionship of his wife for a considerable period, in this case six years. I am not altogether satisfied that when the Act was passed, it was intended to apply to such a case. Personally I am very reluctant to interfere with the liberty of individuals to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary, and to apply legislation of this character to persons who are married, seems to me to be going very far. I recognize that in this country girls are married at an early age but the consequences of this may be remedied more appropriately by raising the permissible age for marriage. However, I am satisfied that the words of the Act are wide enough to cover the case of a married girl. The word "girl" is defined in Murray's English Dictionary as "a child or young person of either sex, a youth or maiden." Another definition is "a female child, commonly applied to all unmarried women." I cannot say that the word "girl" used in this connexion is inapplicable to a child who happens to be married. A further reason for coming to this conclusion is, that if the legislature had intended to limit the effects of this section to "unmarried" girls, it would have stated so specifically. For these reasons I agree that the rule must be discharged.

MUKERJI AND GRAHAM, JJ.

G. H. C. Ariff—Plaintiff—Appellant
v.

Jadu Nath Majumdar—Respondent.

Appeal No. 1719 of 1925, Decided on 18th January 1928, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, 24-Parganas, D/- 10th July 1925.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Parole agreement of permanent lease in 1913—No formal lease executed—Landlord giving possession of land in accordance with agreement—Tenant on faith of oral agreement erecting permanent structures on land—Landlord knowing erection of structures but not objecting to them—In 1918 landlord giving notice of refusal to perform his contract and suing in 1923 for ejectment—Notwithstanding efflux of time barring defendant from enforcing specific performance of contract, landlord's part performance of this contract by delivery of possession would be good defence—Landlord's allowing to erect permanent structures on land would be such acquiescence as would disentitle him from asking for ejectment—Part performance—Acquiescence.

Where a person does not obtain a lease executed and registered in conformity with the provisions of law, he cannot resist ejectment, unless the case may be brought within the range of one or other of the principles of equity established in Maddison v. Alderson (where there is parole contract and such performance of it as unequivocally refers to the contract, equity will charge the party with acts done its execution of the contract) or in Walsh v. Landsdale (enforceable right of specific performance of contract is a good defence to an action for the ejectment). [P 103 C 1]

In 1913 the landlord contracted to grant a permanent lease in respect of certain land. No formal lease was executed under the terms of S. 107, T. P. Act. Pursuant to the contract the tenant obtained possession of the land and erected permanent and costly structures thereon. The landlord was aware of the erection of those structures and must have realized that the tenant would not have constructed such a building unless he was assured of the possession of a permanent right in the land. In December 1918 the landlord gave notice to the tenant of his refusal to specifically perform the contract. The landlord in 1923 brought a suit for ejectment against the defendant.

Held : there was part performance of the contract on the part of the landlord in the shape of the delivery of possession of the land. The landlord would not succeed in his suit for ejectment as he would be unable to displace the tenant's possessory title by reason of the equities arising out of the executed contract blocking his way. Notwithstanding, therefore, that the right of the tenant to enforce performance was barred at the date of the suit, landlord's performance afforded a good defence to the action for ejectment. Maddison v. Alderson, (1883) 8 A. C. 473, Foll.; A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 27; A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 9; 40 All. 187; A. I. R. 1923 All. 433; A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 473; and A. I. (b) Landlord and Tenant—Oral contract of permanent lease—Tenant put in possession—Landlord giving notice of refusal to perform his contract—Tenant must sue for specific performance within time limit—Part performance.

Where a tenant is in possession of certain land by virtue of an oral contract of permanent lease, which, however, is not reduced to writing and registered, and where the landlord afterwards has given notice of refusal to perform his part of contract, the tenant cannot sue for specific performance of contract by requiring landlord to execute a formal lease after efflux of time since the notice has barred his suit. It is not sufficient to say that the original contract was specifically enforceable. Walsh v. Lansdale, (1882) 21 Ch. D. 9, Expl. 16 C. L. J. 217 and 17 C. L. J. 167, Ref.

Bijan Kumar Mukherji—for Appellant.

Brojo Lal Chakravarty, Hemendra Chandra Sen, Bhudar Haldar, Provash Chandra Chatterji and Nagendra Kumar Dutt—for Respondent.

Mukerji, J.—The facts of the case are sufficiently set out in our order of remand of 10th February 1927. The two questions of fact on which we asked for the findings of the Court of appeal below have now been answered by that Court. Since the return of the records and the submission of the findings we have heard the parties again and we are thankful to the learned lawyers who represent them for the assistance they have given us in arriving at our conclusions on this somewhat difficult case. We now proceed to judgment.

Amongst the findings of fact which the Courts below have concurrently arrived at in this case it is necessary to refer to one, viz., that in 1913 there was a parole agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff would grant a permanent lease to the defendant in respect of the land at a rental of Rs. 4 per catta, that is to say, at a total rental of Rs. 80 per month. The two questions which we sent down for determination were : first, was there, at any time, and if so, when, a clear refusal on the part of the plaintiff to the knowledge of the defendant to specifically perform this contract ? and second, whether the structures which the defendants erected on the land, shortly after 1913, and in expectation of getting a permanent lease, involved such an outlay of money as would reasonably strike the plaintiff as being an assertion of a permanent right in the land on the part of the defendant, or such as would reasonably call for objection from a landlord who never intended to grant a permanent lease. As regards the first question, in the opinion of the learned District Judge, the plaintiff's letter of 14th. December 1918 contained, and gave notice to the defendant of such a refusal, and the present suit, it should be mentioned was instituted on 12th April 1923. On the second question the answer of the learned District Judge is that the structures erected by the defendant cost Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 12,000, that the plaintiff was aware of the erection of these structures and must have realized that the defendant would not have constructed such a building unless he was assured of the possession of a permanent right in the land and that if the intention of the plaintiff was not to grant such a lease it might reasonably be expected that he would have objected to the construction of such a building.

Now, it seems to me that the defendant, not having obtained a lease in conformity with the provisions of S. 107, T. P. Act read with S. 49, Registration Act, can resist ejectment, in view of the circumstances of the case, only if the case may be brought within the range of one or other of those principles of equity which have been held to apply to this country and the operation of which may be attracted by the facts found as above.

One such principle is to be found in the class of cases of which Maddison v. Alderson (1), is the type, in which case the principle is fully explained. In that case it was held that where there is a parol contract not provable by reason of S. 4, of the Statute of Frauds, which however, did not avoid a parol contract but only barred the legal remedies which might otherwise have been enforced, if there had been such performance of it by some acts unequivocally referable to or indicative of the contract, a Court of equity will charge a party upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract. In that case Lord Selborne, L. C., observed thus :

"If such equities are excluded, injustice of a kind which the statute cannot be thought to have had in contemplation would follow. Let the case be supposed of a parol contract to sell land, completely performed on both sides, as to everything except conveyance ; the whole purchase money paid ; the purchaser put into possession ; expenditure by him (say in costly buildings) upon the property ; leases granted by him to tenants. The contract is not a nullity ; there is nothing in the Statute to stop any Court which may have to exercise jurisdiction in the matter from inquiring into and taking notice of the truth of the facts. All the acts done must be referred to the actual contract, which is the measure and test of their legal and equitable character and consequences. If therefore, in such a case a conveyance were refused, and an action of ejectment brought by the vendor or his heirs against the purchaser, nothing could be done towards ascertaining and adjusting the equitable rights and liabilities of the parties, without taking the contract into account. The matter has advanced beyond the stage of contract ; and the equities which arise out of the stage which it has reached cannot be administered unless the contract is regarded. The choice is between undoing what has been done (which is not always possible, or if possible, just) and completing what has been left undone. The line may not always be capable of being so clearly drawn as in the case which I have supposed ; but it is not arbitrary or unreasonable to hold that when the Statute says that no action is to be brought to charge any person upon a contract concerning land, it has in view the simple case in which he is charged upon the contract only, and not that in which there are equities resulting from res gestæ subsequent to and arising out of the contract. So long as the connexion of those res gestæ with the alleged contract does not depend upon mere parol testimony, but is reasonably to be inferred from the res gestæ themselves, justice seems to require some such limitation of the scope of the Statute, which might otherwise interfere an obstacle even to the rectification of material errors, however clearly proved, in an executed conveyance founded upon an unsigned agreement."

The Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguly (2), referring to the principles enunciated as above, observed :

"Many authorities are cited in support of these propositions from English and Scotch Law, and no countenance is given to the proposition that equity will fail to support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon. From these authorities one dictum quoted by Lord Selborne from Sir John Strange in Potter v. Potter (3) may be here repeated : 'if confessed or in part carried into execution, it will be binding on the parties, and carried into further execution as such in equity. Their Lordships do not think that the law of India is inconsistent with these principles. On the contrary it follows them.'"

Their Lordships also said:

"To use language common from very early times in Scotland, and highly approved in the case of Maddison v. Alderson (1) in the House of Lords, it is no doubt true that there is a locus pœnitentiæ that is a power of resiling from an incomplete engagement, from an unaccepted offer, from a mutual contract to which all have not assented, from an obligation to which writing is requisite and has not yet been adhibited in an authentic shape.' This is a situation where the parties stand upon nothing but an engagement which is not final or complete. But where the actings and conduct of parties are founded on, then in all such cases, to use the language of Professor Bell in his Principles [10th Edn.] reinterventus raises a personal exception, which excludes the plea of locus pœnitentiæ. It is inferred from any proceedings, not unimportant, on the part of the obligee, known to and permitted by the obligor to take place on the faith of the contract, as if it were perfect; provided they are unequivocally referable to the contract and productive of alteration of circumstances, loss or inconvenience, though not irretrievable."

As has been pointed out by Lord Cranworth in Jorden v. Money (4) which is one of the cases relied upon by the Judicial Committee in Venkayamma Rao v. Venkata Narasimha (5).

"The question upon this part of the case is simply one of fact. Is it made out by such evidence as can justify a Court of Justice in acting upon it, that such a contract as that which is alleged really was entered into?"

Now in the present case, apart from the performance or part performance, it has been proved aliundi that there was a parol agreement that the plaintiff would grant a permanent lease to the defendant on certain terms and conditions, and it has also been proved that the defendant came into possession on the basis of the agreement. There is therefore no necessity to infer the agreement from the fact of the defendant's possession or to consider whether the possession of the defendant is referable to such an agreement; but the other part of the principle of Maddison v. Alderson (1) comes into play by reason of equities resulting from the part performance in the shape of delivery of possession which has been productive of an alteration of circumstances, and the locus pœnitentiæ that exists in the case of an inchoate or incomplete agreement is for that reason excluded and the plaintiff therefore cannot resile from the agreement. On the principles of Maddison v. Alderson (1) then it must be held that the defendant is holding under a permanent lease which the plaintiff agreed to grant him and which equity will regard as having been so granted. At one time it was doubted whether the principles of Maddison v. Alderson (1) could be invoked in cases in which there is an absence of a document which under the Statute Law would be necessary to create a title in the defendant, but in view of the broad form in which the principles have been recited and adopted by the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguly (2) and Venkayamma Rao v. Venkata Narasimha (5) the doubt, in my opinion, cannot reasonably arise. It is true that in the absence of a lease executed and registered in accordance with law (vide S. 107, T. P. Act and S. 49, Registration Act) the defendant has not acquired a valid title as that of a lessee, and has only such title as possession may confer, but the plaintiff cannot succeed as he is unable to displace the defendant's possessory title by reason of the equities arising out of the executed contract blocking his way.

Somewhat akin to the principle of Maddison v. Alderson (1) and owing its source to the same fountain head of equity is the doctrine enunciated in the cases of which Walsh v. Lansdale (6) is the type.

Shortly put, it may, in the case of an action in ejectment, be said to be this, that an enforceable right on the part of the defendant to specific performance of a contract entitling him to remain in occupation is a good defence to the action. The doctrine was approved by Cotton, L. J. in Lowther v. Heaver (7) and explained by Lord Esher in Swain v. Ayres (8) and Foster v. Reeves (9). One of the best expositions of this doctrine as regards the limits of its applicability was by Farwell, J., in Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs (10), who observed thus:

"It applies only to cases where there is a contract to transfer a legal title, and an act has to be justified or an action maintained by force of the legal title to which such contract relates. It involves two questions: (1) Is there a contract of which specific performance can be obtained? (2) If yes, will the title acquired by such specific performance justify at law the act complained of, or support at law the action in question? It is to be treated as though before the Judicature Acts there had been, first, a suit in equity for specific performance, and then an action at law between the same parties; and the doctrine is applicable only in those cases where specific performance can be obtained between the same parties, in the same Court, and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. Thus in Walsh v. Lansdale (6) the landlord under an agreement for a lease for a term of seven years distrained. Distress is a legal remedy and depends on the existence at law of the relation of landlord and tenant; but the agreement between the same parties, if specifically enforced, created that relation. It was clear that such an agreement would be enforced in the same Court and between the same parties: the act of distress was therefore held to be lawful".

The action in Walsh v. Lansdale (6) it should be mentioned, was one claiming damages for improperly distraining, for an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling under the distress and from continuing in possession, and for specific performance of the agreement for a lease. The applicability of this doctrine of Walsh v. Lansdale (6) in this country has been recognised in a course of decisions, though the decisions are not quite uniform as to whether the principle can be invoked in a case where the remedy by way of specific performance is not available by reason of efflux of time. A good deal of argument has been advanced before us on behalf of the respondent to establish that the doctrine is to be understood as operating even in cases where the right to enforce specific performance is not available by reason of the bar of limitation and that it is sufficient for the operation of the doctrine that the nature of the agreement is such that it may be specifically enforced. The words of Jessel M. R. in Walsh v. Lansdale (6)

"it being a case in which both parties admit that relief is capable of being given by specific performance" and of Farwell, J., in Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs (10)

"the doctrine is applicable only in those cases where specific performance can be obtained between the same parties in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls due"

have been sought to be interpreted as indicating merely the nature of the contract, that is to say, that it is inherently one capable of being specifically enforced and that it does not also mean that there is a present right to have it specifically enforced. This argument, in my opinion, is not well-founded; and the leading authorities on Contract, I may say, do not understand the doctrine in that way. To quote a passage from Leake in Contract [7th Edn. p. 916] referring to Walsh v. Lansdale (6), this is what is said:

"By force of the Judicature Act, 1873, the tenant under a parol agreement for a lease, if the right to specific performance by or against him has not been lost, is to be regarded as a tenant claiming under a deed".

The reason of the rule in Walsh v. Lansdale (6) is thus explained in Odger and Odger, Common Law of England [Vol. II p. 869]

"Leases in writing, but not under seal may be construed as agreements capable of being specifically enforced. At Common Law the tenant under such an agreement remained a tenant at will only, until he paid rent and so became a tenant from year to year; while in equity he became at once a tenant under the lease, if his agreement was one which he could have specifically enforced. 'Since the Judicature Act . . . there are not two estates as there were formerly, one estate at common law by reason of payment of rent from year to year and an estate in equity under the agreement. There is only one Court and the equity rules prevail in it. The tenant holds under an agreement for a lease. He holds, therefore, under the same terms in equity as if a lease had been granted' provided relief could have been granted by specific performance."

Or viewed in another light, where a person entitled in equity to an interest in land under an agreement is also entitled to specific performance and to have his interest turned into a legal interest, he will in a Court having jurisdiction to order specific performance, be treated as having the rights of a legal owner (Halsbury's Law of England) [Vol. XIII p. 64 note (k)]. I am of opinion that there is a wide distinction between Maddison v. Alderson (1) and Walsh v. Lansdale (6), so far as the practical application of the principles which they respectively lay down is concerned. To put the matter quite shortly, the part performance of a contract, inchoate or incomplete, may in view of Maddison v. Alderson (6) give rise to equities which complete the contract and it will then assume the character of a contract already executed and on the footing of that executed contract all the equities of the case may be adjusted; on the other hand there may be cases where to give the necessary reliefs to the parties a legal right may have to be established, and for the purpose of establishment of that legal right it may be necessary to invoke the aid of Walsh v. Lansdale (6). I am of opinion that for a defendant in an action in ejectment, if he can successfully bring his case within Maddison v. Alderson (1), it is not necessary to resort to Walsh v. Lansdale (6). Maddison v. Alderson (6) gives him higher rights, making it unnecessary for him to have specific performance of the contract, and so long as the rights of third parties are not sought to be affected, treating the contract as an executed one and debarring the plaintiff from any remedy.

Unfortunately the two cases or rather the principles which they seek to propound have been considerably mixed up in reported decisions in this country, especially of this Court, and I say with the utmost respect that it is on account of misconception of the principles which these cases respectively lay down that there is a considerable divergence of judicial opinion whether or not a person who is in possession in performance or part performance of a contract may successfully resist an action in ejectment when his right to specific performance of the contract is already barred by efflux of time. In the case of a defendant who has come to be in possession in performance or part performance of a contract and who is sought to be ejected, there seems to be now a concurrence amongst the High Courts of Allahabad, Bombay and Madras, that notwithstanding that the right of the defendant to enforce performance was barred at the date of the suit the performance affords a good defence to the action. [See Salamatuzzamin Begam v. Masha Alla Khan (11), Ram Sewak Rai v. Sheonaik Rai (12), Sandu Valji v. Bhikchand Surajmal (13), Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co. Ltd. v. Muthuramareddi (14).]

So far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned, as has been pointed out in Kali Pada Basu v. Fort Gloster Jute Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (5), there is some, though somewhat slight divergence of opinion, the preponderance of authority being in favour of the limited application of the doctrine that is to say in favour of the applicability of the doctrine to only those cases where at the date of the suit there is an enforceable right on the part of the defendant not extinguished by efflux of time. The finding of the learned District Judge in the present case is that there was a definite refusal by the plaintiff to the knowledge of the defendant to grant a permanent lease more than three years prior to the suit. This finding has been challenged on behalf of the defendant upon several grounds, all of which, however, more or less involve questions of fact on which I am not prepared to dissent from the view that the learned District Judge has taken. Nor am I prepared to assent to the view that when the defendant is still in possession under the promise that he would have a permanent lease, a suit for specific performance may be instituted at any time, a position that has been contended for on behalf of the respondent on the supposed authority of the decision in the case of Secretary of State v. Forbes (16) and Matilal v. Darjeeling Municipality (17), because I am of opinion that though it may well be that being in possession he will not stand in need of a formal lease, yet if he wants one and sues to get it, time must be taken to have run against him since the date of the refusal to which I have referred. Nor again am I prepared to hold, as I have been asked to hold on behalf of the respondent, on the authority of the decision of the House of Lords in Hughes v. Metropolitan Ry. Co (18) that he is entitled to a deduction on the ground of suspension of the notice of the refusal, because I cannot find any circumstances which would have the effect of suspending the definite notice of the refusal that was given. If then, I am to follow the current of authority of this Court, I think I must hold that Walsh v. Lansdale (6) will not assist the defendant in the present case in view of the fact that the defendant's claim to specific performance of the agreement to lease was barred at the date of the present suit. I am of opinion, however, as I have tried to make it plain, that Walsh v. Lansdale (6) has no application in the present case but the case is one clearly governed by Maddison v. Alderson (1).

The case, again, seems to me to fall well within the doctrine of equitable estoppel laid down in Gregory v. Mighell (19), as explained in the case of Ramsden v. Dyson (20), and from the application of that doctrine the same result follows. In Ramsden v. Dyson (20) two principles were stated by Lord Kingsdown : 1st :

"If a man under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land or what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land, with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation. This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v. Mighell (19), and as I conceive is open to no doubt."

"If on the other hand a tenant being in possession of land, and knowing the nature and extent of his interest, lays out money upon it in the hope or expectation of an extended term or an allowance for expenditure, then, if such hope or expectation has not been created or encouraged by the landlord, the tenant has no claim which any Court of law or equity can enforce. This was the principle of the decision in Pelling v. Armitage (21) and like the decision in Gregory v. Mighell (19), seems founded on plain rules of reason and justice."

The findings of the Courts below, such as they are now, clearly bring the case within the first of the aforesaid two principles. Indeed, it may be said that the appellant has not really sought to controvert this position. What has been said on his behalf, however, is that Lord Kingsdown was dissentiente in the case and the rule should be taken as qualified by the decision in Willmott v. Barber (22), and reliance is placed on his behalf in support of this contention upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (23). Now it is true that Lord Kingsdown's was the dissenting speech in Ramsden v. Dyson (20), but it will be seen that his dissent was only on the effect of the evidence in the case. There is nothing in the speeches of Lord Cranworth, L. C., or of the other noble and learned Lords who agreed with him which in any way is in conflict with these principles and the only difference was as to the applicability of these principles in view of the effect of the evidence that was there. The first of these principles has been expressly adopted by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Forbes v. Ralli (24) and has been said in that case to have been accepted by the same Board in Ahmad Yar Khan v. Secretary of State (25). In Willmott v. Barber (22) in which Ramsden v. Dyson (20), was cited at the Bar Fry, J. said :

"It has been said that the acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud, and in my view that is an abbreviated statement of a very true proposition. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. What, then, are the elements or requisites necessary to constitute fraud of that description? In the first place, the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of his mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it he is in the same position as the plaintiff, and the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of your legal rights. Fourthly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights. If he does not, there is nothing which calls upon him to assert his own rights. Lastly, the defendant the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist, there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but in my judgment nothing short of this will do."

It is said, on behalf of the appellant that the elements of "fraud" and "encouragement" are wanting in the present case. With this contention I do not agree. It will be seen that in Willmott v. Barber (22), a third party Bowyer was involved and these elements had to be specifically considered having regard to the effect that the transaction then in question had on him. As between parties to the agreement once it is found that in fact there was an agreement, then with the findings such as they are now in the present case what else but fraud of the character contemplated by these propositions should be imputed to the plaintiff and should not encouragement, by abstaining from asserting his legal right, be a finding that must legitimately follow? The case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (23), on which the appellant relies was the case of tenants for a term who knowing the limited character of their real rights erected permanent structures on the land in their occupation, and so cannot help the appellant in the present case. Nothing that was said by the Judicial Committee in that case militates against the first of the two propositions of Lord Kingsdown in Ramsden v. Dyson (20) within which the present case, in my judgment, clearly falls.

In their judgments the Courts below have taken a correct view of the rights of the parties in this suit and the plaintiff is not entitled to eject the defendant.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Graham, J.—I confess that during the hearing of the appeal I felt at times that there was a good deal to be said for the point of view of the appellant, inasmuch as, if his claim for ejectment fails, the result virtually will be that a permanent lease will be created against his wishes and notwithstanding the fact that no valid lease was ever executed.

I agree, however, with my learned brother that upon the facts proved in this

Appeal No. 956 of 1926, Decided on 19th July 1928, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Birbhum, D/- 11th December 1925.

(a) Bengal Patni Regulation (8 of 1819), S. 5—Liability of patnidar continues till his transferee's name is registered as a tenant.

The liability of the patnidar for rent continues even after a transfer till the zemindar registers the transferee of the patnidar as a tenant and removes the name of the original patnidar: 20 W. R. 380; 13 M. I. A. 160 (P.C.); and (1846), S.D. 372; Foll. [P 109 C 2]

(b) Bengal Patni Regulation (8 of 1819), Ss. 5 and 6—Liability of patnidar ceases when he fulfils conditions of S. 5 and if necessary follows it up by proceeding under S. 6.

The liability of the patnidar for rent does not cease by the deposit of the fee by the transferee and the tender of the necessary security as required by S. 5. He must be ready, if the zemindar refuses to register his transferee's name and accept the security, to follow it by the procedure laid down in S. 6: (1864) W.R. 53, Foll.: 22 Cal. 494, Ref.; 19 Cal. 17 and 16 Cal. 642, Dist. [P 109 C 2]

Bankim Chandra Mukherjee and Hari Prasanna Mukherjee—for Appellant.

Sitaram Banerjee—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The only point canvassed in this appeal is whether the appellant (defendant 1) is liable for the amount of rent decreed against him. The suit is for patni rent for the period from Magh kist of 1327 to Baisakh 1330, that is, from January 1921 to April 1923. The appellant's contention is that his liability for rent had ceased from 22nd March 1922—the date on which he made a gift of this patni to his daughter-in-law. The trial Court passed a decree against the appellants up to the Magh Kist of 1329 or 17th February 1923—that being the date when the security money was paid and the name of the transferee was registered in the zamindar's sherista. The decree was upheld by the District Judge in appeal. It is argued that the patni regulation invests the patnidar with absolute right of transfer and, therefore, as soon as the patnidar assigns his interest to any person his liability for rent ceases on and from that date. It is contended on the other side that the liability of the patnidar under the Regulation continues till the zemindar registers the transferee as a tenant and has removed the name of the original patnidar. In our opinion the respondent's contention must be upheld.

Section 5 of Regulation (8 of 1819) vests the right of alienation of a patni taluk in the holder thereof. It further says that it shall not be competent to the zemindar to refuse to register and otherwise to give effect to such alienations by discharging the party transferring his interest from personal liability. But he may demand his fee fixed at a certain percentage and may also demand security from the transferee or purchaser to the amount of one-half of the jama or yearly rent payable to him for the tenure transferred. S. 6 says that it shall be competent to the zemindar or other superior to refuse the registry of any transfer until the fee above stipulated is paid and until substantial security for the amount specified is tendered and accepted. S. 5 gives the patnidar a general right of transfer even without the consent of the zemindar but S. 6 protects the right of the zemindar and postpones the discharge of the patnidar from personal obligation till the zemindar is secured in his right to receive rent. So long, therefore, as the zemindar is not satisfied that the transferee may be looked upon for the rent reserved, he has the right to refuse to recognize the transferee. But if he wilfully refuses to approve the security tendered by the purchaser he may be compelled to accept it and give effect to the transfer without delay. These two sections read together indicate that the patnidar has the absolute right of transfer; but the zemindar has the right to refuse to recognise the transfer and hold the patnidar liable under the obligation created by the contract until the transferee gives substantial security which is accepted by the zemindar or which he is compelled by the civil Court to accept. A great deal of argument has been wasted on what should be the general law in a matter like this or whether under other enactments liability of a lessee should continue after the transfer. These sections of the patni law have been interpreted in several cases. In Khettur Paul Singh v. Luckhee Narain Mitter (1) the question was between the patnidar and the durpatnidar. It arose under S. 5 and 6 patni Regulation. The suit was brought by durpatnidar to recover from the patnidar certain sum which he had paid as rent to the zemindar in order to save the patni. The durpatnidar, however, had not got his name registered in the zemindar's sherista; and it was, therefore, objected that the payment of rent made by him was voluntary payment. It was held that though the durpatnidar was not registered in the zemindar's record he had sufficient interest to protect it from sale. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judges observed:

"In all cases until the transfer is registered the old tenant and the tenure itself are liable for the rent due."

The case was carried to the Privy Council Lakhinarain Mitter v. Khettro Pal Singh (2). Their Lordships referred to several reported cases in which it was held:

"The grantor of a darpatni taluk is not bound to recognize the assignee of the tenure until the transfer has been registered in his sherista and that, until such registry has been effected he may sue the original durpatnidar for the rent and sell the tenure in execution of a decree obtained in such suit without notice to the assignee."

Accepting this view, their Lordships proceeded to observe:

"Until the assignment has been registered or the assignee has been accepted by the patnidar as his tenant the assignor is not discharged from liability, and such liability may be enforced by the sale of the durpatni taluk in execution of a decree against him for the rent."

In Robert Watson & Co. v. Collector of Rajshahye (3) the Judicial Committee considered the effect of Ss. 5 and 6 and at p. 175 observed,

"It is to be considered that the zemindar has granted a tenure of a particular kind, the incidents of which are well defined by law to a tenant, and that he has a right to look to the ostensible tenant, and is not bound to take notice of the various interest which may be created otherwise than by an authorized alienation."

There can be no dispute that the liability of the patnidar does not cease with the transfer before the zemindar has accepted the transfer and registered the name of the transferee by removing the name of the patnidar from the record. Some support of this view is to be found in the old case of Peetumburree Dossea v. Chukooram Singh (4). The facts are not quite similar but the observation made in that case is relevant. There the patni stood in the names of two persons. Subsequently there was a litigation with a third person and by partition the patni fell to the share of that third person. It was contended by the two persons whose names stood in the sherista of the zemindar that they were not liable for rent after the date of the allotment. It was observed by a Bench of three Judges of the Suddar Diwani Adalat:

"They deemed the appellants also responsible inasmuch as they have not resorted to the easy remedy provided by S. 5, Regulation 8 of 1819 of relieving themselves by compelling the zemindar to record the transfer and erase their names."

Then it is contended on behalf of the appellants that his liability ought to cease from the date when the fee and the security were offered to the zemindar and he wrongfully refused to accept them. It appears that proceedings were started in the civil Court with reference to this matter under para. 2 of S. 60. Only a copy of the judgment of the District Judge relating to these proceedings has been filed. That judgment shows that the District Judge directed the zemindar to accept the fee mentioned in S. 5 and he was further directed to advise the defendant 2 (the transferee) to furnish or tender the security mentioned in S. 5. It does not appear from the judgment that any fee or security was offered and refused by the zemindar before the order made by the civil Court. It is said on behalf of the respondent and it seems to be very likely that the zemindar was unwilling to accept the transferee as a tenant because she was a pardanashin lady and the daughter-in-law of the original patnidar. The liability of the patnidar for rent does not cease by the deposit of the fee by the transferee and the tender of the necessary security. He must be ready if the zemindar refuses to accept the security and register his name to follow it by the procedure laid down in S. 6. That was the view which was adopted in Kristo Jeebun Bukshee v. A. B. Mackintosh (5) when it was remarked :

"We think too, that it is not enough to ask for registration only, but that S. 6 specifically provides what is legally to be done if the request be refused, and that this legal course was not adopted by the appellant."

Several cases have been cited before us which relate to the provisions relating to tenures under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It has been held on the wording of S. 12, Ben. Ten. Act, that the transfer is complete as soon as the deed is registered. This has no application to the present case. Then again several cases have been cited in which S. 108, (j), T. P. Act, came under consideration. There too it has been held that the liability of the lessor does not cease before the landlord had accepted the transfer of the lease : Sasi Bhusan Raha v. Tara Lal Singh (6). In Chintamani Dutt v. Rash Behary Mondal (7) which was a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act it was observed that

"Although it certainly was the case before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed that the Courts always held that the landlord is entitled to look to his recorded tenant for all rent until he receives due notice of the transfer, the present law, as explained by the decision in Kristo Bullary Ghose v. Krizto Lal Singh (8) appears to have altered that state of things."

This observation goes to indicate the law outside the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Our conclusion on the facts and the law applicable to this case is that the decree passed by the Courts below is correct in law and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The omission as to the description of the plaintiff as receiver does not render a suit or proceeding incompetent if under the letter of appointment he has the power to institute the suit and it has been instituted in the course of the management of the property over which he has been appointed receiver. A proprietor appointed as receiver does not lose his character as a party to the suit nor a fortiori does he lose the right that he possesses as proprietor of the property in respect of which he is appointed a receiver. Judgment.—The tenants are the appellants in this group of eight appeals which arise out of proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act. The respondent landlord claims settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands of the appellants who have been entered in the Record-of-Rights as settled raiyats. The defence mainly was that the defendants were mokarari tenants whose rents were not liable to enhancement. Both the Courts below have held that the jamas are liable to enhancement and settled rents in respect thereof. The Assistant Settlement Officer enhanced the rents under S. 30 (b), Ben. Ten. Act, for rise in the price of staple food crop to two and half annas in the rupee. The learned Special Judge reduced it to two annas in the rupee. Except this modification the decisions of the first Court in the cases before us were upheld in appeal.

Some preliminary objections have been taken before us with regard to the validity of the proceedings in the trial Court which are common grounds in all these appeals. The first objection under this head is on the ground that Gunendra Nath Basu Mallik who made the applications under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, was a receiver appointed by Court in respect of the property in suit and as the applications were filed without the leave of the Court which appointed him receiver the proceedings are bad in law and they should not have been continued. During the course of the proceedings Gunendra Nath Basu Mallik sold his interest in the lands in suit to the respondent before us—Monmohan Pandey—who continued the proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act. There is no evidence on the record, as has been admitted by the appellants' wakil, except the kobala executed by Gunendra Nath Basu Mallik in favour of Monmohan Pandey, relating to the appointment of Gunendra as receiver in respect of this property. From a perusal of the kobala it appears that Monmohan Pandey had brought a suit on a mortgage which he held against Gunendra Nath. In that suit Gunendra was appointed receiver by the Court for the purpose of selling the mortgaged properties by private treaty for paying off the mortgage debt. Gunendra under the authority thus given to him sold the properties to the mortgagee Monmohan Pandey.

On these facts, the first question that has to be determined is whether the proceedings were bad and void ab initio not having been instituted with the leave of the Court appointing Gunendra as receiver. In the first place, Gunendra's appointment as receiver was limited to a particular purpose. In the second place admitting that he was appointed a receiver under O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., with all the powers and liabilities attached to a receiver, there does not seem to be any bar to his instituting these proceedings. As I have said there is no evidence as to the terms under which the receiver was appointed; and it may be presumed that he was appointed under O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., and his appointment was in terms of the form given in Appendix F to the Code of Civil Procedure which is the form in use in the mofusil. Under those terms the receiver is vested with all the powers mentioned in O. 40, R. (1) (d). Under that sub-clause the receiver is vested with the power of bringing suits for the management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property and the present proceedings are proceedings taken in course of proper and due management and for the improvement of the property. But it is said that these proceedings were started by Gunendra in his own name and not as receiver. The omission as to the description of the plaintiff as receiver does not render a suit or proceeding incompetent if under the letter of appointment he has the power to institute the suit and it has been instituted in the course of the management of the property over which he has been appointed receiver. In the case of Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Nabagopal Chaki (1), the learned Judges observe at p. 318 thus:

"A Court may authorize a receiver to sue in his own name, and that a receiver who is authorized to sue, though not expressly in his own name, may do so by virtue of his appointment with full powers under S. 305 (corresponding to O. 40, R. 1) is supported on principle and authority and is consistent with the existing practice."

Thirdly, there does not seem to be any bar in the circumstances of the present case to Gunendra's instituting these proceedings in his own name as proprietor of the property in spite of the fact that he was appointed a receiver in respect of it. If a party is appointed receiver he does not lose his character as a party to the suit nor a fortiori does he lose the right that he possesses as proprietor of the property in respect of which he is appointed a receiver. In Scott v. Platel (2), it was held that a party by being appointed a receiver does not thereby lose his privilege as a party to the cause. It is not disputed that if a party who is admittedly the owner of a property is appointed a receiver he does not lose the right of dealing with the property during the continuance of the receivership by selling, mortgaging, or transferring his interest therein in any way but not so as to impair the value of the property in his hand or to cause interference with his possession of the property as receiver. By appointing a receiver the Court takes upon itself the management of the property during the continuance of the litigation. The proprietary right or interest in the property is not transferred from the rightful owner either to the Court or to the receiver appointed by it. There is no bar in law to the proprietor dealing with his property though a receiver may have been appointed in respect of it with certain reservations with regard to the right of the Court to manage the property through a receiver. The present proceedings were started by Gunendra for the improvement of the property and for increase in the value of the property which he was charged with selling and which it was his interest to sell at the highest value. The strictness of the rule as to the necessity of the leave of the Court to bring or defend the suit applies more appositely in the case of appointment of a person who is not a party to the suit or who is not interested in it.

(2) [1847] 2 Ph. 229.

Fourthly, Gunendra was a party to the settlement proceedings under Ch. 10, Ben. Ten. Act, and an application under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, was made in the course of those proceedings which a party to them is entitled to maintain. Fifthly, the initiation of the proceedings even without the leave of the Court was not absolutely void but could have been subsequently sanctioned by the Court appointing Gunendra as receiver. During the course of the proceedings and before they had terminated Gunendra had sold his interest in the property to the respondent who continued them up to the finish. Whatever defect there might have been at the initiation of the proceedings must be taken to have ceased to affect them when Monmohan became the proprietor and continued the proceedings in his own name. This ground accordingly must be overruled.

to the proceedings is that the respondent Monmohan being the karta of a joint Mitakshara family is not competent to maintain proceedings under S. 105 being one of several landlords, his cosharers being his sons. The proceedings at the start were not open to this objection and it has been held in Kali Charan Singha v. Mahammad Ismail Chowdhury (3) that if proceedings are started regularly it would make no difference if during the continuance of them one of the cosharer landlords dies, and when once an application is properly made further proceedings are governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. But on the merits, this objection has no force. It has not been proved that the respondent is still a member of a Mitakshara family consisting of more members than one and that he is still governed by the law of that school. A case connected with the family to which the respondent belongs came up to this Court, namely, the case of Sarada Prasanna Roy v. Uma Kanta (4). In that case it was held that the family of which the respondent was a member migrated more than 200 years ago from upcountry to Bengal and had adopted the Bengal School of Hindu Law as the law governing it. We have referred to the paper-book and the decree in the case and we find that Monmohan Pandey is a descendant of the ancestor who had migrated to this province more than 200 years and had adopted the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law by which the family is being governed. This objection must also be overruled.

The third preliminary objection is to the effect that some tenants, specially in second appeals Nos. 1656, 1658 and 1662 were joined after the period of limitation namely, two months from the date of the publication of the Record-of Rights. The fact appears to be that an application was made under S. 105, against the tenants whose names were recorded in the Record-of-Rights. But at the time when the application was made some of them were dead. It is argued that the applications against the dead persons are incompetent in the same way as a suit against a dead person is not maintainable. In second appeal No. 1662 this objection is of no avail because the defendants there were properly described but as they were minors at the time their guardian was appointed subsequently. The fact that the guardian was appointed after two months from the publication of the Record-of-Rights will not render the application barred by limitation. On the recent authorities of this Court the objection must be regarded as without substance. In the case of Sati Prasad Garga Bahadur v. Sonaton Dhara (5) a view was expressed that proceedings under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, are in the nature of suits and all the formalities and the procedure laid down by the Code of Civil Procedure should apply to proceedings under that section. This broad proposition was not necessary for the decision in that case in which the principal question raised was whether the proceedings by a member of a joint Mitakshara family were maintainable in view of S. 188, Ben. Ten. Act, and it was held that they were not. The opinion expressed in Sati Prasad Garga's case (5) has not been accepted in subsequent decisions.

In Bir Bikram Kishore v. Ambika Charan (6) it was held that in an application under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, it is not necessary for the landlord or the tenant to name any person as opposite party and that all that is necessary is to indicate the holdings in the record in respect of which settlement of fair and equitable rent is sought. This view has been endorsed by the Chief Justice and D. N. Mitter, J., in Siba Kumari v. Doshi Ghosain (7). Whatever view I might have previously expressed in the matter, on reconsideration I think that the interpretation put upon the law in these later cases is correct. It seems to me that an application under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, or even a suit under S. 106, Ben. Ten. Act is in the nature of continuation of proceedings in connexion with the preparation of Record-of-Rights. S. 105 says that within two months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of Record-of-Rights the landlord or the tenant may apply for settlement of fair rent; and S. 106 provides that in proceedings under Part 3 which deals with settlement of rent and decision of disputes a suit should be instituted within three months from the date of the certificate of the publication of the Record-of-Rights relating to the disputes mentioned in that section. Both the application and the suit are to be filed and instituted before the Revenue Officer and these proceedings come under Chap. 10, Ben. Ten. Act, which is headed as "Record-of-Rights and settlement of rent." Whatever may be said with regard to the application under S. 105 without naming any party against whom it is directed, the requirement of the law to my mind is satisfied if the application is made by a party to the Record-of-Rights against a party in whose favour an entry has been made in the Record-of-Rights. In this view the third preliminary objection must fail.

Now, certain special grounds have been taken in some of these appeals. In second appeal No. 1661 the objection taken is that the view of the lower Court that the ekrar filed in that case showed variation of rent is not correct. A translation of the ekrar has been placed before us and we are satisfied that the view taken by the Courts below is justified. The ekrar shows that the defendants' predecessors applied for settlement of the lands in suit held by the late tenant Gour Mondal for a period of ten years and there was a stipulation to the effect that after the expiry of the term there should be a subsidiary settlement with the tenant. Reading the ekrar as a whole it appears that it was an agreement for fresh settlement in respect of a holding which previously stood in the name of another tenant.

In the second appeal No. 1656 the ground taken is that the kabuliyat upon which the Courts below have relied as showing variation of rent has been misconstrued. The kabuliyat, however, shows that the land was purchased in execution of a rent decree of which the landlord was in khas possession by taking delivery of possession through Court. It was resettled with the appellant's predecessor together with another plot of land at a jama which was not the same as had been paid by the original tenant. This objection also fails.

With regard to the other cases a general ground has been taken that the decrees upon which the Court below have relied to prove variation of rent do not relate to the holdings in suit. This ground was not taken in any of the Courts below nor has it been taken specifically in this Court in the memorandum of appeal. It is very difficult for the second Court of appeal to determine a question which mainly depends upon facts. It is possible that no objection was taken upon this ground at the trial Court because it was understood by both parties that the decrees related to the jamas in suit or it may be that the landlords' papers showed that the old jama as mentioned in the decrees continued in the names of the appellants. We cannot give effect to this contention at this stage of the litigation.

In second appeal No. 1663 the objection taken is that the Special Judge has not considered the Special features of this case and has not come to any finding with regard to them. This objection has substance in it. It appears that the learned Judge has confined his attention mainly to the question about the tenancy being held at rates fixed in perpetuity or otherwise. He has not considered the preliminary objections to which I have referred at length before, which in the face of them do not seem to be entirely frivolous. The learned Judge ought to have dealt with the points raised in these cases and should not have contented himself by observing that the preliminary points were rightly dismissed. A party in the first Court of appeal expects that all the objections which he has taken to the decree should be considered by the appellate Court in the same way as they were considered by the trial Court. In this appeal the defendant filed very old rent receipts which show that the same jama continued for about 50 years. The trial Court discarded the presumption raised by this fact by making reference to the plaintiff's papers which showed that the rent of these holdings was at some time reduced. This is a matter which ought to have been examined by the lower appellate Court and we think that in this case the learned Judge has not given that consideration which the special facts deserved. We accordingly, set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court in this case and send the case back to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal.

In second appeal 1742 which forms one of this batch the ground taken is that the tenant should have been recorded as raiyat and not as tenure-holder, as was done by the Assistant Settlement Officer. In the finally published Record-of-Rights the tenant was described as a tenure-holder. The trial Court held that the tenant had adduced no evidence to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the entry in the Record-of-Rights. We cannot say that the Court was not justified in holding that the tenant was a tenure-holder relying solely upon the Record-of-Rights without any evidence to controvert it. This point moreover was not taken before the learned Special Judge and is not mentioned in his judgment. This appeal also fails. The result is that all the appeals of this group fail and are dismissed with costs, one gold mohur in each case except No. 1663 which is remanded to the lower appellate Court for further hearing; costs to abide the result, hearing fee one gold mohur.

In this group of eight cases the same preliminary objections are urged as were taken in the other group of cases comprising second appeals Nos. 1656 to 1663. It is not necessary to repeat the grounds which have induced us to overrule all those objections and they are accordingly overruled. In second appeals Nos. 1726 and 1731, it is stated that applications under S. 105 were made against dead persons. We have already dealt with this point and it need not be further considered. This objection cannot prevail. In No. 1726 a special ground is taken that the learned Judge is wrong in saying that the tenants have not produced rent-receipts showing uniform payment of rent for a period of more than 20 years. It has been pointed out that certain rent-receipts Exs. D17—D40 were filed by the appellant which are more than 20 years old. The learned advocate for the respondent has answered by saying that there is nothing on the record to show that the rent-receipts D17—D40 related to this holding. These rent-receipts stand in the name of one Joy Gopal Chakravarti and the holding in suit stands in the name of Hohan Mondal. There is no evidence as to how Hohan Mondal succeeded to the jama held by Joy Gopal. It has further been brought to our notice that no specific ground has been taken in the grounds of appeal filed in this Court though subsequently the appellant served the respondent with a copy of the ground relating to this objection which he intended to urge at the hearing. This objection fails.

Objection has also been taken that the decrees relied on by the Courts below have not been proved to relate to the holdings in suit. We have dealt with this objection in the other cases and overrule it on the same grounds.

A great deal has been said in connexion with these cases as well as in the cases of the other batch which we have just disposed of with regard to the jama wasil baki papers produced by the plaintiff and proved on his behalf. It is said that these papers under the law are only admissible in evidence if they are corroborated under S. 34, Evidence Act. It is, however, conceded that these papers may be proved in evidence under S. 32 (2), Evidence Act, without any corroboration. The evidence is that these papers were of the time of the previous landlords which came into the hands of the respondent after his purchase. There is further evidence that many of the gomasthas of the previous landlord are dead. We are not in a position to ascertain as to whether the papers were written by any of those persons. There is nothing to show that the papers were in the hand of any one now living. These papers are about 45 years old and a Court of fact, may in the circumstances of a particular case presume that the writer was dead at the time they were produced. In Dukha Mandal v. W. N. Grant (8), entries in papers began over 70 years before the action was tried, and it was presumed that the person who made them was dead and could not be called. A Court of fact, in a proper case may raise such a presumption also in this case. But the point does not seem to have been taken in any of the Courts below. Where admissibility of a certain document rests upon facts which need to be proved, the proper place to take objection is the trial Court where the document is admitted. In the present case it may be the Courts below presumed that the writers of the papers were dead. We cannot allow this ground to be taken for the first time in second appeal. This objection also fails. In the result all these appeals are dismissed with costs—one gold mohur in each case. The respondent has filed cross-objections in both the batches of cases and does not press them at the hearing. They are dismissed.

(8) [1912] 16 O. L. J. 24=16 I. O. 467.

In Second Appeal No. 1742 the cross-objection has been pressed and it is to the effect that the calculation made by the learned Judge as to the division of assets of the tenure is not correct on the facts of the case. The learned Special Judge has deducted 10 per cent. from the gross assets under the heading of collection charges. Of the balance that is left over he has allowed 40 per cent. to the tenure-holder and 60 per cent. to the landlord. The trial Court allowed 65 per cent. to the landlord upon the gross assets. Under S. 7, Ben. Ten. Act, the profit left to the tenure-holder should not be less than 10 per cent. In the present case the learned Judge has allowed him about 50 per cent. including the collection charges. The proportion generally allowed in this Court is 40 per cent. to the tenant and 60 per cent. to the landlord. We accordingly modify the decree of the lower appellate Court and order that in this case the rent of the landlord be assessed at 60 per cent. of the total assets found by the Court below. We allow the cross-objection, but we make no orders as to costs.

Amulya Chandra Bhaduri — Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 637 of 1928, Decided on 19th June 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Hooghly, D/-11th April 1928, in Misc. Case No. 15 of 1928.

(a) Contempt — Proceedings resemble criminal proceedings—Court acting on receiver's or other officer's report—Finding should be based on evidence, either oral or by means of affidavits.

A proceeding in contempt of Court partakes of the nature of a criminal proceeding in as much as the party charged, if found guilty, is punished with fine or imprisonment. No doubt, the Court may act summarily in matters of this kind. But when it acts on the report of a receiver or any other officer, there should be some evidence either oral or by means of affidavits in order to enable the Court to come to a finding. As the proceeding taken by the Court in matters of contempt is a judicial proceeding in which the Court acts judicially, ordinarily, if the offence is not committed in the presence of the Court, it is started by means of an application supported by an affidavit : 45 Cal. 169, Rel. on.

(b) Contempt—Order should not be passed unless there is ample material to justify it.

The law relating to contempt of Court invests the Court with absolute power. It is, therefore, more necessary that it should be exercised with great caution and not without ample materials before it. [P 116 C 2]

Asitaranjan Ghose—for Petitioners.

Jatindra Nath Sanyal—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Hooghly, dated 11th April 1928 imposing a fine of Rs. 50 on each of the petitioners for contempt of Court should not be set aside on the ground that it is based on no material evidence on the record. It appears that the Judge appointed a receiver in a suit in respect of some properties alleged to belong to the Tarakeswar Temple. On 28th January 1928 the receiver submitted a report to the Judge the purport of which is that from the report of his collection agent he has found that the persons named in the report are systematically opposing his collection agent and obstructing the collection of rent from the tenants by him. On receipt of this report on 31st January the Judge issued notices to the petitioner to show cause why they should not be dealt with according to law for systematic opposition to the receiver's collection. The petitioners appeared before the Judge and in showing cause said that they were falsely implicated because they were not on good terms with the receiver's gomashtha or collection agent. Without further materials, the learned Judge by his order of 11th April 1928 found the petitioners guilty of contempt of Court and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each. The only point which calls for consideration in this case is whether the order of the Judge based on the mere report of the receiver which again was based upon the report of his collection agent can be supported in law. A proceeding in contempt of Court partakes of the nature of a criminal proceeding inasmuch as the party charged, if found guilty, is punished with fine or imprisonment. No doubt the Court may act summarily in matters of this kind.

But when it acts on the report of a receiver or any other officer, there should be some evidence either oral or by means of affidavits in order to enable the Court to come to a finding. As the proceeding taken by the Court in matters of contempt is a judicial proceeding in which the Court acts judicially, ordinarily, if the offence is not committed in the presence of the Court, it is started by means of an application supported by an affidavit; and it is the practice in England that copies of the affidavit and other necessary papers are served with the notice of motion on the other party. Oswald on Contempt, Edn. 3, p. 205. At p. 212 the law is thus stated :

"In cases of criminal contempt, the facts are proved by affidavits and the person against whom a committal is sought has the right to see the applicants' evidence in reply."

In re Motilal Ghose (1) Woodroffe, J. at p. 200 observed thus :

"It is what is called a 'criminal' contempt, but all proceedings, whether in respect of civil or criminal contempts, are, in my opinion, of a criminal nature where and in the sense that they are in poenam, that is, when their object is to punish by fine or imprisonment. It does not, however, follow that the procedure in such cases is in all respects the same as in an ordinary criminal case" . . . . .

"As regards the question of proof, no case, either civil or criminal should be tried and determined otherwise than according to the law governing it."

Mookerjee, J. at p. 240 of the report drew a distinction between civil contempt, and observed:

"In the case of a criminal contempt, the proceeding is for punishment of an act committed against the majesty of the law, and as the primary purpose of the punishment is the vindication of the public authority, the proceeding conforms as nearly as possible, to proceedings in criminal cases."

Now in this case the only material before the Judge was the report of the receiver and that report too was based on hearsay evidence. That hearsay evidence also was not before the Court. The law relating to contempt of Court invests the Court with absolute power. It is, therefore, more necessary that it should be exercised with great caution and not without ample materials before it to justify the order proposed to be passed so as to enable the superior Court to test the propriety of the order. We do not think that there was any legal evidence before the Court upon which the order of the learned Judge could be based. The rule is therefore made absolute and the order of the Judge set aside. We direct that the fine if paid be refunded.

REMFRY, J.

Sudhir Chandra Das—Plaintiff.

v.

Raseswari Chaudhurani—Defendant.

Original Civil Suit No. 415 of 1912, Decided on 11th June 1928.

(a) Calcutta High Court Rules—Original Side—Ch. 14, R. 3—Except for purposes of defence, defendant in contempt cannot claim benefit of Court's procedure—Extent of right is matter for discretion—Party is entitled to resist proceedings.

A defendant in contempt cannot claim as of right the benefit of the procedure of the Court except for the sole purpose of defending himself and how far these rights extend is a matter for the discretion of the Court. Though the party cannot himself come into Court to take any advantage of the proceedings in the cause, yet he is entitled to appear and resist any proceedings against him: Hewitt v. McCartney, (1807) 13 Ves. 560 and King v. Bryant, (1838) 3 Myl. & Cr. 191, Foll. Gordon v. Gordon, (1904) P. 163, Expl. [P 118 C1; P 119 C1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 11, R. 21—Party against whom order has been made continues in contempt unless and until contempt has been cleared by the only way of obeying Court's order.

Where the original order of the Court stated that, if the defendant failed to obey a certain order of it, certain penalties would follow:

Held: that it would be an entirely wrong construction to place on this order that the Court finally or at all assessed a penalty for prospective contempt and informed the defendant of the terms on which he might defy the order. A distinction must be drawn between the two aspects of contempt, viz., (1) a process to assist a party against an opponent who defies the order and (2) a process to maintain the dignity of the Court. [P 118 C 2]

A party against whom an order has been made under O. 11, R. 21, cannot say that the order has cleared his contempt; the Court may proceed to attach him; for, unless and until his contempt has been cleared from both aspects, he continues in contempt, to clear which there is only one way, viz., obedience to the order: Seward v. Paterson, (1897) 1 Ch. 545, 555; 7 Bom. 5; 27 All. 380; and 6 C. L. J. 374; Ref. [P 118 C 2]

H. D. Bose and K. C. Basu, (Jr.)—for Plaintiff.

Bimala Chandra Dev and Prafulla Chandra Bose—for Defendant.

Judgment.—In this matter the defendant Raseswari Chaudhurani has filed exceptions to the report made by the Official Referee of this Court in pursuance of an order made on 6th May 1913. The report was made on 8th December 1916. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the plaintiff on the ground that as the defendant was in contempt she was not entitled to file exceptions to the report. It appears that the defendant is an executrix under the will of her late husband and that there was another executor since deceased. This suit was filed on 27th April 1912 on behalf of the adopted son of the defendant against her and her co-executor for, inter alia, on account of the dealings of the defendant and her co-executor with the estate. To put the matter shortly, accounts were ordered and the defendant as one of the accounting parties was ordered to file her accounts. A preliminary decree was passed on 6th May 1913. An order was made on 6th May 1916, by Greaves, J., directing the defendant to file her accounts. On 7th August 1916, Chaudhuri, J., passed an order the material portion of which is:

"I gave her time up to 15th September to file her accounts. This date is fixed peremptorily. In default the referee to proceed without her accounts and she will be precluded from filing any accounts thereafter and the reference will be treated as being heard ex parte against her."

Against this order the defendant appealed. The judgment of the appeal Court was:

"We have come to the conclusion that the matters which were before the learned Judge were matters for his discretion and on the materials before us we cannot say that he has exercised his discretion wrongly. We desire to make it clear that the applicant, the executrix, is not precluded by the order as we construe it from appearing at the reference. If any order is necessary (I do not think it is necessary) to make it quite clear we include in our judgment a direction that she shall have a right to appear at the reference."

The appeal was dismissed with costs.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant having failed to comply with the order of the Court was and is in contempt, citing Gordon v. Gordon (1) and Daniel's Chancery Practice, Vol. I, p. 786. Being in contempt, the defendant, it was argued, could not move the Court and under the rules and orders the application is a motion. For the defendant, it was contended that it had never been suggested that she was in contempt, and that the judgment of the appeal Court, as it gave her the right to appear, reversed the order of Chaudhuri, J., in so far as it directed that the reference should proceed ex parte against the defendant.

Now undoubtedly the defendant, an accounting party, was in contempt inasmuch as she failed to obey the orders of the Court that she was to file her accounts. It is also clear that the order of Chaudhuri, J., was affirmed in every particular by the Court of Appeal, although it was construed. This was the view taken of the judgment by the defendant—see exception filed, ground 7. It was argued for the plaintiff that all the Court of appeal did was to point out that although the reference would proceed ex parte the defendant would have the rights allowed under the rules and Orders, Ch. 14, R. 3. In my opinion a defendant in contempt cannot claim as of right the benefit of the procedure of this Court except for the sole purpose of defending herself, and how far those rights extend is a matter for the discretion of the Court and this last point accounts for the fact that in circumstances apparently similar the Court has and has not allowed a defendant to appear : See Hewitt v. McCartney (2) per Lord Eldon.

The point which requires consideration is this. Undoubtedly this Court treated the defendant as being in contempt, but the order passed by Chaudhuri, J., was that if she failed to obey the order of the Court certain penalties would follow : one penalty was that the reference would proceed ex parte. Under the practice of this Court a party who has allowed a reference to proceed ex parte may still file exceptions. The question therefore arises whether the order of this Court having specified the consequences of a failure to file accounts must be taken to have limited the consequences or whether the defendant after incurring the specified penalty is still in contempt.

It was argued that as the Court had imposed a penalty on the defendant for her contempt, that should be regarded as analogous to a conviction and sentence and that it was not open to the Court to treat the defendant, once the penalty had been exacted, as being still in contempt and still liable to any further disability or penalty. But the form of the original order was that in the event of a failure to obey the order of the Court, certain consequence would follow and in the Court of appeal that order only was before the Court, and although the defendant had then failed to obey the order, the Court did not deal with the matter as, so to speak, a completed contempt. And it seems to me that it would be an entirely wrong construction to place on this order that the Court finally or at all assessed a penalty for prospective contempt and informed the defendant of the terms on which she might defy the order of this Court. There are two aspects of contempt. A distinction must be drawn between a process to assist a party against an opponent who defies the orders of the Court, and a process to maintain the dignity of the Court : see Seward v. Paterson (3).

A party against whom an order has been made under O. 11, R. 21, will not be heard to say that that order has cleared his contempt ; the Court may proceed to attach him : See Navivahoo v. Narotamdas Candas (4). A litigant, unlike a practitioner in the Court, is not treated as in contempt in any but the suit in connexion with which the contempt has been committed, but unless and until his contempt has been cleared from both aspects of the offence, he continues in contempt. The order in this case, in my opinion, should be regarded merely as directions to the Official Referee, and not as a final settlement with the defendant in the event of her failure to obey the order of the Court.

I therefore hold that the defendant is still in contempt and that there is only one way in which contempt in a matter of procedure can be cleared and that is by obedience to the order of the Court, for otherwise the defendant might obtain an advantage from her own contempt.

But, assuming that defendant is still in contempt and has in no way cleared her contempt, it does not follow that she is not entitled to file these exceptions. Mr. H. D. Bose laid great stress on the judgment of Sterling, J. in Gordon v. Gordon (1). But in that case Vaughan Williams L. J. laid down the proposition that a defendant though in contempt will be heard in some cases in which all that he is seeking is to be heard in respect of matters of defence. Sterling L. J. cited a passage from a judgment of Lord Cottenham's which certainly reads as if such a defendant will only be heard if an order subsequent to her contempt was made without jurisdiction or on the ground that there was some irregularity in the order. But Lord Cottenham added in his judgment a passage not quoted by Sterling L. J., namely:

"but he was not generally entitled to take a proceeding in the cause for his own benefit. That there were exceptions to the last rule, but they were few in number." : see Chuck v. Cremer v. (5) and in King v. Bryant (6).

He made an order which throws a good deal of light on his view of the law. In that case the defendant to an action for foreclosure was committed to the Fleet for failure to file his reply. While he was there, the plaintiff proceeded to obtain an order for an account and served the defendant with no notice of it. The plaintiff then served no notice of an application for confirmation of the Master's report. The defendant, who was still in the Fleet, moved the Court to set aside these proceedings, and Lord Cottenham granted his application on the ground that though in contempt a defendant was not to be deprived of his property without being heard in his defence.

The Lord Chancellor said the Court would not hear a party in contempt coming himself into Court to take any advantage of the proceedings in the cause, yet such a party was entitled to appear and resist any proceeding against him and that it would be a most unjust extension of the rule against parties in contempt to take away a man's estate without giving him any opportunity of coming in and protecting himself.

It is true that Cozens-Hardy, L. J., declined in Gordon v. Gordon (1) to assent to any proposition beyond that necessary in that case—namely, that a defendant in contempt could move against an order made without jurisdiction. Still the view taken by Vaughan Williams L. J. was, if I may respectfully say so, more in accord with the authorities and Sterling L. J. was not prepared to dissent without further consideration from a view taken by Lord Cottenham. I cannot distinguish this case from King v. Bryant (6) and Wigram, V. C. in Morrison v. Morrison (7), held that a defendant in contempt for non-payment of an order for costs, was entitled to file exceptions to a report of the Master, for that was merely a step taken in his own defence. There the default was not wilful, but in King v. Bryant (6) as the defendant was committed to the Fleet his default was presumably wilful and therefore assuming that the defendant in this case was and is in wilful contempt of the Court, I am unable to hold that she is not entitled to be heard, but as it is not suggested that the report was made without jurisdiction or that any irregularity occurred, she is only entitled to be heard in her own defence: see Morrison v. Morrison (7). The view which I take of the matter seems to me to be in exact accord with that taken by the Court of Appeal. The defendant was allowed by both Courts to appear and that meant to appear in order to defend herself and no more. The argument that liberty to appear presupposed that the defendant was not treated as in contempt was founded on a misapprehension of the position of a defendant in contempt.

As I read the cases it was never the rule that a party in contempt in a matter or procedure was not entitled to be heard in his own defence, for the penalty as far as the Court is concerned in maintaining its own dignity may be assessed by the Court as if it were as it is, a criminal offence, but is by no means limited to that, nor is the contempt cleared whatever penalty be imposed until the Court's order is obeyed, but as far as the other side is concerned the penalty is to be limited to frustrating the effect of a failure to comply with the procedure and does not, if that can be avoided, give him any further advantage.

In this matter I have considered the provisions of O. 11, R. 21, Civil P. C. It is clear that the rule in no way limits the powers of the Court: see Hassonbhoy v. Cowasji Jehangir (8), Navivahoo v. Norottandas Candas (4) and Godu Ram v. Surajmal (9). The order appears to have been considered in only two cases in this Court by Woodroffe, J. in Kamalakhya Dossee v. Jotindra Mohan Banerjee (10) and Okinealy, J., in Kesharia Acoomar Sreesungje v. Patooah Set (11). I find nothing in these decisions which is not in accord with the views expressed above, though in the Calcutta decisions the position of a party in contempt was not considered in any detail.

I must add, that although Lord Cottenham in Smith v. Smith (12) where the defendant was imprisoned for breach of an injunction in the cause, held that the rule that a defendant in contempt shall not be heard, would not extend to a step necessitated by the proceedings of the plaintiff, still in Hewitt v. McCartney (2), which was a suit for foreclosure, the defendant not having put in an answer and stood out all process for contempt, applied for the usual reference although the cause was set down to take a decree pro confesso, Lord Eldon said that the effect of the contempt according to the law of every Court was that the defendant could not come in upon such a motion. But in my opinion I am bound by the order of the Court of appeal in this suit which gave the defendant the right to appear at the reference and I think impliedly gave her the right to file exceptions, but in my opinion as I have endeavoured to explain that order, if I may respectfully say so, is in entire accord with the view of Vaughan Williams L. J. in Gordon v. Gordon (1) and of Lord Cottenham and Wigram V. C. in the cases cited above and as I have been able to find no authority which allows a defendant in contempt to do more than protect herself except in exceptional cases. I will hear the exceptions, but will confine the defendant strictly to a defence of her rights, and as she has not yet filed her accounts she is still bound by the order that she can file no accounts and in my opinion the Court is bound to see that the plaintiff is not placed at a disadvantage by reason of the defendant's failure to file her accounts.

The defendant argued that the plaintiff waived contempt citing anon 15 Ves. 174. It seems to me that the alleged waiver, which is that the defendant was allowed by the Official Referee to file a state of facts and the plaintiff thereupon filed his answer to that state of facts, does not come within this ruling, and that there is no case of waiver of contempt in this case.

Appeal No 658 of 1926, Decided on 1st August 1928, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Jessore, D/- 10th November 1925.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 87—Abandonment is established by cessation of cultivation and absence of arrangement for payment of rent—Leaving the village is not necessary.

All that is necessary, in order to establish an abandonment by a raiyat, is to show that he has ceased to cultivate his holding either by himself or by some other person and that he has made no arrangement for the payment of his rent. The tenant need not have left the village in which the holding is situate in order to constitute abandonment under S. 87.

Bimala Charan Deb, Tarakeswar Nath Mitter, Nagendra Nath Bose and Biraj Mohan Majumdar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In this appeal by defendants 1 and 2 the only question raised is that the lower appellate Court was not justified in treating the tenancy as having been abandoned as the tenant did not leave the village in which the holding was situate. It appears that the plaintiffs, now respondents, instituted the suit in which this appeal arises for recovery of possession of a plot of land on eviction of defendants 1 and 2 who are described as principal defendants after establishment of their jamai right to the same. There is no dispute with regard to the plaintiffs' title before me but it is said that the findings of the lower appellate Court (i) that defendants 3 and 4 who are under-raiyats under the plaintiffs are not in possession of any portion of the disputed land and (ii) that they have made no arrangement for the payment of rent are not sufficient to constitute abandonment within the meaning of S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act and in support of this contention reliance has been placed on an unreported decision of this Court in appeal from appellate decree No. 2620 of 1912 decided on 22nd January 1915 in which two learned Judges of this Court held that in order to come to a finding that there was an abandonment under S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act there must be a finding that the tenant had left the village in which the holding was situate without making any arrangement for the payment of rent. Looking to the terms of S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act it seems to me that all that is necessary in order to establish an abandonment by a raiyat is to show that he has ceased to cultivate his holding either by himself or by some other persons and he had made no arrangement for the payment of his rent. I do not understand how in the face of this section it can be contended that in order to constitute an abandonment a tenant must leave the village in which the holding is situate. There is no other case of this Court except the unreported case to which I have already referred. I do not think that the unreported case could have laid down any inflexible rule that in every case a tenant must be proved to have left the village before abandonment could be inferred. S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act does not in terms apply to the present case as the persons who abandoned their residence are not raiyats but are under-raiyats and they were made defendants 3 and 4 to the suit in which this appeal arises. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore has reversed that decision and has declared plaintiff's title to the disputed land and has directed that they do get khas possession of the same on ejecting defendants 1 and 2 therefrom.

The question of abandonment is a question of fact and in second appeal I am bound by the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Court to the effect that there has been an abandonment of the under-raiyati tenancy by defendants 3 and 4. It was sought to be argued at one stage by the learned advocate for the appellants that S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act does not apply to the case of an under-raiyat and that there may be other methods of evicting an under-raiyat but he cannot be evicted under S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act. This argument fails to take into account several decisions of this Court in which it has been held that the same principles which govern the case of a raiyat also govern the case of an under-raiyat with regard to the circumstances under which the landlord can re-enter in case of an abandonment. Reference may be made in this connexion to the cases of Aminunnissa v. Jinnat Ali (1) and Ishan Chandra Dhupi v. Nishi Chandra (2). I think this appeal is concluded by the findings of fact and must be dismissed with costs.

Adhar Chandra Naskar — Judgment-debtor—Appellant.

v.

Sarnwamoyi Dasi — Decree-holder—Respondent.

Appeal No. 1751 of 1925, Decided on 3rd May 1928, from appellate decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, Zillah Hooghly, D/- 29th May 1925.

Civil P. C., O. 34. R. 6—For application under R. 6, it is not a condition precedent that property must first be sold and proceeds found insufficient.

A second mortgagee brought a suit against the mortgagor and obtained a final decree. Before he applied for execution the prior mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage making both the mortgagor and the second mortgagee parties and sold the property in execution of his decree. The sale proceeds satisfied only the decretal debt of the prior mortgagee. The second mortgagee applied under R. 6 for a personal decree. It was contended that no action could be taken on it as the mortgagee had not brought to sale the property and found that the sale proceeds were insufficient to satisfy his decree.

Held: that the Court will not compel the mortgagee to make a fruitless attempt to sell the property which was already sold, in order to enable him to apply under R. 6 read with S. 68, T. P. Act. In order that the application for personal decree should be held to be untenable, there must be something which the mortgagee should be able to recover by such sale: A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 159, Appl. 17 Mad. 309 and 38 Mad. 677 Appr.; 33 Cal. 890; A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 209; 18 C. L. J. 133; 22 All. 404 and 31 All. 373, 1 I.C. 799; Held Overruled.

Sitaram Banerji and Bejoy Prosad Singha Roy—for Appellant.

Asita Ranjan Ghose—for Respondent.

Suhrawardy, J.— The appellant in this case has been described as the judgment-debtor but he is in reality the defendant in the suit out of which the present appeal arises. The facts are that the plaintiff as second mortgagee in respect of certain properties brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a final decree. But before he could execute the decree, a suit was brought by a prior mortgagee on his mortgage to which the mortgagor and the plaintiff in the present suit as puisne mortgagee were parties. A decree was obtained in execution of which the property mortgaged with the plaintiff was sold in satisfaction of the debt due to the prior mortgagee. Thereafter the plaintiff made an application to the Court for a decree under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C. That application was granted and a decree has been passed under that rule in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant appeals and it is contended on his behalf that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to pass a decree under O. 34, R. 6, before the plaintiff had exhausted all his remedies under the decree obtained by him, in other words, before he had sold the mortgaged property or attempted to sell it, and that only in the event of a balance of the debt remaining unpaid that he had the right to apply for a decree under that rule. On the wording of the rule it would seem that the contention of the appellant has some substance. But a recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee has to my mind settled the point in controversy. In Jeenu Bahu v. Parmeswar Narain (1) a decree was passed in favour of the mortgagee which was a combined decree under Ss. 89 and 90, T. P. Act, corresponding to Rr. 5 and 6, O. 34, Civil P. C. The same objection as is now urged before us was pressed at their Lordships' Bar but it was overruled. On the point with which we are now concerned the following observation was made:

"The appellants contend that the opening words establish as a condition precedent to the power of decreeing payment of the balance that the mortgaged property must first be sold and found insufficient to satisfy the debt. It is admittedly a strict and technical construction of the statute and one for which no reason can be assigned and from which no advantage can possibly be derived by any mortgagor. It would be unfortunate if the statute by its terms rendered necessary the adoption of this contention; but in their Lordships' opinion it is not necessary so to construe the Act."

The principle on which the decision of their Lordships is based is that on a reasonable construction of the statute a decree may be passed under S. 90, even before the condition contemplated by the section has been followed; that is, before it has been ascertained that the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged properties are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt. And it is in accord with English law. Fisher on Mortgage, Ss. 806, 990. In this view of the decision of the Judicial Committee the rulings of this Court and of the Allahabad High Court which held a contrary view must be deemed to have been overruled such as Ramranjan Chakravarty v. Indra Narayan Das (2), Chand Mal v. Ban Behary (3), Lakhi Narayan v. Krithibas Das (4), Badri Das v. Inayat Khan (5) and Kamta Prasad v. Syed Ahmad (6). Now if a combined decree under Rr. 5 and 6, O. 34, can be passed before the mortgaged property has been sold and the sale proceeds found insufficient, there seems no reason why a decree cannot be passed under R. 6 before that under R. 5 has been executed. In other words, the difference between the decree before the Judicial Committee and the present decree is that in that case there was a combined decree under Rr. 5 and 6 of O. 34, Civil P. C., and in the present case there are two decrees one under R. 5 and another under R. 6. The only difference is that in one case there was a combined decree and in the other case there are two decrees which taken together would have the effect of combined decree. There is difference in form but not in principle.

Then again under S. 68, T. P. Act, the mortgagee has the right to bring a suit for the mortgage money when the mortgaged property has been wholly or partially destroyed or the security rendered insufficient. The plaintiff's case is that the mortgaged property was lost to his mortgage and it is not now available as security for his debt. He has accordingly asked for a personal decree under R. 6. Had he not brought a suit upon his mortgage he would certainly have been entitled under S. 68, T. P. Act, to sue the mortgagor for the mortgage money or to sue on the original consideration for the money lent. I do not think that for simply bringing a fruitless suit on his mortgage he should be held to be without any remedy. To give full effect to the contention of the appellant is to hold that even though the mortgaged property ceased to exist or become available to the mortgagee for the purpose of realization of his dues, the mortgagee cannot claim a decree under R. 6 or any decree for that matter, and must lose his money, or he must go through the farce of attempting to sell the mortgaged property which at the time may not be existing or may not be available. This is the view taken by the Madras High Court on this point before the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jeenu Bahu v. Parmeshwar Narayan (1). In Shanmuga Pillai v. Ramanathan Chetti (7), the property mortgaged was found not to belong to the mortgagor but to a third party. It has been held that in the circumstances the mortgagee was entitled to claim a money decree against the mortgagor. In Periasami Koni v. Muthia Chettiar (8), it was held that when the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the properties directed to be sold the decree-holder need not go through the farce of putting them up to sale. The remark of the learned Judge is happily worded and may be quoted here:

"If of course the mortgaged properties directed to be sold under the mortgage decree do not belong to the mortgagor, the mortgagee need not be compelled to resort to the farce of bringing them to sale and to undergo useless delay involved in bringing them to sale, because it is an elementary principle of law that the Court will not do a vain thing, nor will it compel a man to do a fruitless thing."

It is not the appellants' case that there is any other remedy open to the plaintiff to satisfy his decree under the mortgage. It would seem absurd that the plaintiff should be compelled in order to entitle him to get a decree under R. 6 to attempt to sell a property which belongs to a third person. In this view the objection on the ground that the decree passed by the Court below is ultra vires must be overruled. This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Cammiade, J.—I agree. As my learned brother has said, the proposition that it is necessary for the mortgagee to put to sale the mortgaged property before a personal decree can be obtained against the mortgagor cannot be maintained. What the mortgagor should prove in order to be able to set up a contention of this sort is that there was something which the mortgagee could recover by such sale. Such a contention was never made. The mortgagor appellant filed a written objection to the application made by the mortgagee respondent for a final decree; but he did not think it worth his while to come forward and support the objection filed by him. It is not even suggested that the property which was the subject of the two mortgages was worth anything more than what it fetched at the sale held in execution of the decree on the first mortgage. In these circumstances it would be grossly unjust to require the respondent to go through the empty formality of a second sale which would have been productive of no result. It would also have been foolish to require him to redeem the first mortgage, as he could recover nothing. In all these circumstances the only possible course which the Court below could follow was to give a personal decree against the mortgagor.

of their evidence—the consideration that not only do they now say that at the time when they were present they saw and witnessed the execution, but they are able to go on to say “I put my signature on the instrument at the time by way of saying then what I am saying now, namely, that it was executed and that I saw it “executed.” [P 126 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33—Appellate Court has power to make a decree in favour of non-appealing parties.

It does constantly occur where some people appeal and others do not that the Court is put in a position of having to make impossible or contradictory or unworkable orders. Accordingly, it has been given power to make a decree in favour of persons who have not even approached it. This power may be exercised by the Court in favour of any of the parties who may not have filed any appeal or objection.

Hemendra Kumar Das and Priya Nath Dutt—for Appellant.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the plaintiff brought his suit upon a mortgage bond. The Munsif decreed the suit for the full amount holding that the execution of the bond had been proved and holding also as regards defendant 2 (who was interested because subsequently to the mortgage bond he had purchased a tin hut which was part of the mortgaged subjects) that the plaintiff's claim prevailed against the claim of the defendant 2. Defendant 2's case was that he had purchased the tin hut not from the mortgagor but from another. However, the Munsif decreed the suit both as regards the tin hut and the land. So far as defendant 1 is concerned, he did not appear at the trial to contest the suit. The contest was between the plaintiff and defendant 2 throughout. Defendant 2 appealed to the lower appellate Court and the first ground he took was that this mortgage was invalid because it had not been properly attested as required by law. On that issue, the learned Subordinate Judge of Dacca found for the appellant and held that the mortgage bond was not attested as required by law.

Now, when we come to look into the matter, we find that there are two people who are put forward as attesting witnesses. As to one, there can be no doubt at all because he was a person who was present at the time of the execution and who put his name down on the instrument to authenticate its execution. As regards the other, the position is this: that man was, in fact, the scribe or the person who wrote the document out. He put his name to a statement in the margin to the effect that he had read the document out to the executant and also that he had put in certain alterations at the executant's desire. This statement he affirmed with his signature and it is reasonably clear that he put his signature down for that purpose before the document was executed at all. There is, however, another part of the document on which the same man's signature appears. Underneath the word “scribe” the man has put his name. It is not a case where a person has put his name with the word “scribe” after it by way of extra information. It is a case where the man has put his name under the heading “scribe.” The question is whether, in these circumstances, this man is an attesting witness so as to satisfy the requirements of the law. The appellant says that the trial Court is to go into the evidence to find out from the oral evidence of the man if he is available—whether or not he put his name down with the object of attesting the document. It is contended also that it does not matter for what purpose that signature was put down and that, as a matter of law, it is a good attestation.

That contention is based upon certain cases of this Court. The first case that is relied upon is the case of Raj Narayan Ghose v. Abdur Rahim (1) being a decision of Harrington, J. In that case, the document is not well described in the report; but it is said that the plaintiff called a person who was described in the deed as the writer of the mortgage and the learned Judge said that he was of opinion that a person who was present and witnessed the execution of the deed and whose name appeared on the document was a competent witness to prove the execution of the deed. In other words, he held that the person was a good attesting witness if he was present and witnessed the execution and his name appeared on the document at all for whatever purpose and in whatever manner. Whether the decision on the particular document before the Court was right or wrong, I have no materials before me to say. But it does appear to me that the learned Judge's exposition of the law is somewhat too wide. The next case relied upon is the case of Dinomoyee Debi v. Bon Behary Kapur (2). That was a case of a woman who executed a document by making her mark and underneath her mark was written her name "by the pen of so and so." These words were written in the ordinary way of "bakalam" signature as written in India, and the Court held that the person who wrote down the statement that the mark was the lady's mark and the statement that her name was written by his pen was an attesting witness. That is a very different case from the present case and from the case before Harrington, J. and I have no doubt that that decision was perfectly right because the man had put his name down on the document by way of saying that the lady had executed in his presence. The next case is the case of Jaganath Khan v. Bajrang Das (3). There again the document and the facts are not too clear. But it would seem that the name of the writer—the name of the witness in question was put somehow upon the instrument but apparently only for the purpose of saying that he was the writer of the bond; and the learned Judges there differing from certain decisions of the Allahabad and the Patna High Courts and proceeding upon the two cases which I have mentioned took the view that a person who was present and witnessed the execution of the deed and whose name appeared on the document though he was therein described merely as the writer of the deed was a competent witness.

Now, we have by recent legislation had a definition of "attested" given by Act 27 of 1926 and that definition has been made retrospective by an Act of 1927. The definition is:

"attested, in relation to an instrument, means attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant; but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary."

Now, the word "attested" is the word to be defined because that word when it is used in the Statute with reference to

an instrument is really a shorthand expression and the meaning of it is given at length in this Act—Act 27 of 1926. The word "attested" occurs not merely as the thing to be defined but as a part of the definition or explanation and it remains, therefore, to enquire in cases such as the present, what is meant by saying that a document has been attested or that its execution has been attested. In my judgment, the matter is reasonably clear. A person may be a witness to the execution of a mortgage or a will and yet may not have written his name at the time by way of saying that he was a witness. It is quite clear that in India no formal attestation clause is necessary. Ordinarily a string of signatures towards the end of an instrument or somewhere on the instrument without any explanation will be quite sufficient to show that the persons put their signatures by way of saying that they had seen the document executed or had received an acknowledgment. Again, the mere fact that a person is the scribe or that he puts the word "scribe" after his name will not, in itself, show that he has not put his signature on the document by way of saying that he had seen the instrument executed. Such a signature often occurs under the heading "witness" or, at least among a host of signatures put down without any explanation but obviously as the signatures of witnesses. The present case is not of that sort. The present case is where under the separate heading "scribe" the man has put his name. The question is whether it is right to hold as a matter of law that, even although on the construction of the document the name is put alio intuitu; the fact that the name is on the document at all makes the man an attesting witness.

In my judgment, any such proposition is erroneous. A man's name may be put on the instrument by way of authenticating a statement that the supposed testator did not execute. It may be put by way of professional advertisement to show that he acted as the scribe or by way of showing that he acted as the scribe for other purposes than professional advertisement. It may be put down for authenticating a particular correction in the body of the deed. In all those cases, it seems to me wrong to say that because the man's signature is on the document at all disregarding the purpose for

of their evidence—the consideration that not only do they now say that at the time when they were present they saw and witnessed the execution, but they are able to go on to say “I put my signature on the instrument at the time by way of saying then what I am saying now, namely, that it was executed and that I saw it “executed.” [P 126 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33—Appellate Court has power to make a decree in favour of non-appealing parties.

It does constantly occur where some people appeal and others do not that the Court is put in a position of having to make impossible or contradictory or unworkable orders. Accordingly, it has been given power to make a decree in favour of persons who have not even approached it. This power may be exercised by the Court in favour of any of the parties who may not have filed any appeal or objection. [P 126 C 2]

Hemendra Kumar Das and Priya Nath Dutt—for Appellant.

Govinda Chandra De Roy and Hiran Kumar Roy—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the plaintiff brought his suit upon a mortgage bond. The Munsif decreed the suit for the full amount holding that the execution of the bond had been proved and holding also as regards defendant 2 (who was interested because subsequently to the mortgage bond he had purchased a tin hut which was part of the mortgaged subjects) that the plaintiff's claim prevailed against the claim of the defendant 2. Defendant 2's case was that he had purchased the tin hut not from the mortgagor but from another. However, the Munsif decreed the suit both as regards the tin hut and the land. So far as defendant 1 is concerned, he did not appear at the trial to contest the suit. The contest was between the plaintiff and defendant 2 throughout. Defendant 2 appealed to the lower appellate Court and the first ground he took was that this mortgage was invalid because it had not been properly attested as required by law. On that issue, the learned Subordinate Judge of Dacca found for the appellant and held that the mortgage bond was not attested as required by law.

Now, when we come to look into the matter, we find that there are two people who are put forward as attesting witnesses. As to one, there can be no doubt at all because he was a person who was present at the time of the execution and who put his name down on the instrument to authenticate its execution. As regards the other, the position is this: that man was, in fact, the scribe or the person who wrote the document out. He put his name to a statement in the margin to the effect that he had read the document out to the executant and also that he had put in certain alterations at the executant's desire. This statement he affirmed with his signature and it is reasonably clear that he put his signature down for that purpose before the document was executed at all. There is, however, another part of the document on which the same man's signature appears. Underneath the word “scribe” the man has put his name. It is not a case where a person has put his name with the word “scribe” after it by way of extra information. It is a case where the man has put his name under the heading “scribe.” The question is whether, in these circumstances, this man is an attesting witness so as to satisfy the requirements of the law. The appellant says that the trial Court is to go into the evidence to find out from the oral evidence of the man if he is available—whether or not he put his name down with the object of attesting the document. It is contended also that it does not matter for what purpose that signature was put down and that, as a matter of law, it is a good attestation.

That contention is based upon certain cases of this Court. The first case that is relied upon is the case of Raj Narayan Ghose v. Abdur Rahim (1) being a decision of Harrington, J. In that case, the document is not well described in the report; but it is said that the plaintiff called a person who was described in the deed as the writer of the mortgage and the learned Judge said that he was of opinion that a person who was present and witnessed the execution of the deed and whose name appeared on the document was a competent witness to prove the execution of the deed. In other words, he held that the person was a good attesting witness if he was present and witnessed the execution and his name appeared on the document at all for whatever purpose and in whatever manner. Whether the decision on the particular document before the Court was right or wrong, I have no materials before me to say. But it does appear to me that the learned Judge's exposition of the law is somewhat too wide. The next case relied upon is the case of Dinomoyee Debi v. Bon Behary Kapur (2). That was a case of a woman who executed a document by making her mark and underneath her mark was written her name "by the pen of so and so." These words were written in the ordinary way of "bakalam" signature as written in India, and the Court held that the person who wrote down the statement that the mark was the lady's mark and the statement that her name was written by his pen was an attesting witness. That is a very different case from the present case and from the case before Harrington, J. and I have no doubt that that decision was perfectly right because the man had put his name down on the document by way of saying that the lady had executed in his presence. The next case is the case of Jaganath Khan v. Bajrang Das (3). There again the document and the facts are not too clear. But it would seem that the name of the writer—the name of the witness in question was put somehow upon the instrument but apparently only for the purpose of saying that he was the writer of the bond; and the learned Judges there differing from certain decisions of the Allahabad and the Patna High Courts and proceeding upon the two cases which I have mentioned took the view that a person who was present and witnessed the execution of the deed and whose name appeared on the document though he was therein described merely as the writer of the deed was a competent witness.

Now, we have by recent legislation had a definition of "attested" given by Act 27 of 1926 and that definition has been made retrospective by an Act of 1927. The definition is:

"attested, in relation to an instrument, means attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant; but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary."

Now, the word "attested" is the word to be defined because that word when it is used in the Statute with reference to

an instrument is really a shorthand expression and the meaning of it is given at length in this Act—Act 27 of 1926. The word "attested" occurs not merely as the thing to be defined but as a part of the definition or explanation and it remains, therefore, to enquire in cases such as the present, what is meant by saying that a document has been attested or that its execution has been attested. In my judgment, the matter is reasonably clear. A person may be a witness to the execution of a mortgage or a will and yet may not have written his name at the time by way of saying that he was a witness. It is quite clear that in India no formal attestation clause is necessary. Again, the mere fact that a person is the scribe or that he puts the word "scribe" after his name will not, in itself, show that he has not put his signature on the document by way of saying that he had seen the instrument executed. Such a signature often occurs under the heading "witness" or, at least among a host of signatures put down without any explanation but obviously as the signatures of witnesses. It may be put by way of professional advertisement to show that he acted as the scribe or by way of showing that he acted as the scribe for other purposes than professional advertisement. It may be put down for authenticating a particular correction in the body of the deed. In all those cases, it seems to me wrong to say that because the man's signature is on the document at all disregarding the purpose for which it is on the document and disregarding altogether what his signature is put to authenticate the man in question is an attesting witness. To take the ordinary case, a man is an attesting witness when he has seen the execution of the instrument and has put his name on the document by way of saying at the time that he has seen the execution of the document. To meet the cases where the execution is not seen but is acknowledged, this definition would have to be extended. The present is not such a case. The purpose of requiring an attesting witness would be entirely defeated by any other rule. The object is that when the factum of the document comes into question it may be years afterwards the document shall be proved by the evidence of witnesses who have this to vouch for the truth of their evidence. I take again the ordinary case the consideration that not only do they now say that at the time when they were present they saw and witnessed the execution, but they are able to go on to say :

I put my signature on the instrument at the time by way of saying then what I am saying now, namely, that it was executed and that I saw it "executed".

Any other meaning to the word "attestation" reduces the whole purpose of this requirement to an absurdity. It seems to me that the definition, if I may so call it, given by Act 27 of 1926 would be entirely perverted if the word "attested" which appears at the beginning of the definition is not correctly considered. For these reasons, it appears to me that in this case the signature as a matter of construction is not capable of being read as an attestation at all. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge, so far as defendant 2 the appellant before him was concerned, was right in dismissing the suit of the plaintiff altogether.

The only other question is whether or not the learned Judge of the Court of appeal below was right, defendant 1 having done nothing to resist the decree of the first Court and bringing no appeal before him in dismissing the whole suit, that is, not only as against defendant 2 but also as against defendant 1 the mortgagor. In my judgment, the learned Judge had jurisdiction to do that by virtue of R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C. It does constantly occur where some people appeal and others do not that the Court is put in a position of having to make impossible or contradictory or unworkable orders. Accordingly, it has been given power to make a decree in favour of persons who have not even approached it. This power may be exercised by the Court in favour of any of the parties who may not have filed any appeal or objection. The only question is whether the learned Judge exercised a proper discretion in dismissing this mortgage suit against defendant 1 on the ground of this technical defect as regards attestation. Upon the whole, it seems to me that in a case of this character the learned Judge would have done well to confine himself to the case of defendant 2 and I think that this appeal ought to be allowed so far as regards the setting aside of the decree as against defendant 1.

It remains to consider in the present case another decision of this Court, namely, the decision in Radha Mohun v. Nripendra Nath (4). In that case, as in the present, the mortgagor at the time of registration admitted the execution of the mortgage-deed and the Sub-Registrar by his signature and seal acknowledged or asserted on the document that execution had been admitted by the mortgagor. Accordingly, in the case to which I am now referring, it was held that the Court would take judicial notice of that signature and seal and that the Sub-Registrar was a good attesting witness as required by law. It appears to me that the learned Judges in that case may not have paid sufficient attention to the circumstance that by Act 27 of 1926 and, indeed apart from that Act, it is necessary that each of the witnesses should have signed the instrument in the presence of the executant. It does not appear that there was any evidence before the learned Judges that the Sub-Registrar had affixed his signature or seal in the presence of the mortgagor. But in the case before us now, it is quite clear that there is no such evidence at all. In view of the fact that the instrument is an old one now, it seems unreasonable that we should reopen the matter by sending the case for further evidence. It has been suggested to us that the ordinary practice is for the Sub-Registrar to sign his statement in such cases in the presence of the mortgagor. Not only do I entertain considerable doubt as to whether this is, in fact, the ordinary practice but I need hardly say, whether it is so or not, there is no evidence that it is a practice which has been followed in this case. I do not therefore, think that the present case is complicated at all by any question as to what happened at the time of the registration. In this view, the appeal succeeds so far as against the heirs of defendant 1 and the Munsif's decree against the said defendant is restored. But the appeal must be dismissed with costs as against defendant 2. It is quite clear that the right of defendant 2 to the hut in question cannot be affected by the plaintiff's decree against the heirs of defendant 1.

Appeal No. 1762 of 1926, Decided on 13th August 1928, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Rajshahi, D/- 1st May 1926.

* Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885) S. 128 (2) (d)—Interest of occupancy raiyat of a non-transferable holding is interest in immovable property and therefore bequeathable—Such raiyat has as much right to bequeath as transfer as is not limited by the Act.

The right of an occupancy raiyat in a non-transferable holding is a right in immovable property and not a mere personal right and he has a right to transfer it. The right to bequeath is also one of the incidents of ownership; it cannot be taken away or restricted except by express enactment. Therefore, a raiyat holding a non-transferable holding has as much right to make a testamentary disposition of the holding as he has to transfer its subject to the limitation mentioned in the Act. Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of bargah produce for the years 1324 to 1327 against the under-raiyat. The plaintiff's allegations are that the jama originally belonged to Alokemani Baishnabi who bequeathed it to the plaintiff's husband

Shama Charan by a will of which probate was duly taken. The plaintiff as successor of Shama Charan thereupon sued the defendant who is an under-raiyat for rent. The defendant denied the relation of landlord and tenant on the ground that neither the plaintiff nor her husband was ever in possession of the jama. He also took exception to the quantity and the price of the bargah produce claimed. The learned Munsif who tried the suit overruled the defendant's objections except with regard to issue 2 and gave the plaintiff a partial decree. The defendant appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge in deciding the question as to whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties raised the point as to whether Alokemani as an occupancy raiyat had the right to make a will in favour of Shama Charan. Relying upon certain cases which we shall refer to later the Subordinate Judge has held that an occupancy raiyat, as the law stands, is not competent to make a will and, therefore, the plaintiff has no right to the jama. The plaintiff has appealed and it is argued on his behalf firstly that the view taken by the lower Court is incorrect and secondly that the point not having been raised in the trial Court an opportunity should have been given to the plaintiff to prove that by local usage and custom an occupancy raiyat has the right to make a will.

With regard to the question whether an occupancy raiyat has the right to make a testamentary disposition the law seems to be in a fluid state. The point so far as the reports go was first seriously raised and discussed in Haridas v. Uday Chandra (1) before Doss, J., sitting singly. The learned Judge held that an occupancy raiyat has the right to make a testamentary disposition as much as he has the right to make a gift or a transfer. There was a letters patent appeal from that decision, but the point now raised before us was not considered by the Bench hearing the letters patent appeal as the case was disposed of on a different point. The question next came up for consideration in Amulya Ratan Sircar v. Tarini Nath De (2) where it was held that a non-transferable occupancy holding could not be the subject of a valid testamentary disposition. This case was followed without further discussion in Kunja Lal Roy v. Umesh Chandra Roy (3) in which one of the learned Judges expressed the opinion that the law on the point was admittedly in unsatisfactory condition, but on the authorities as they then stood, an occupancy right was not capable of being made the subject of testamentary disposition. The case of Amulya Ratan Sircar v. Tarini Nath De (2) was again followed in Umesh Chandra Dutta v. Jeynath Das (4). There it was held that the testamentary disposition of a part of a non-transferable holding like that of the whole holding was invalid though at the time the case was decided it was firmly established that a transfer of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was valid even without the consent of the landlord.

The basis of all these decision is the ratio decidendi adopted in Amulya Ratan Sircar's case and, therefore, we have to examine whether that decision can be said to be good law at the present day. In Haridas Banerji's case Doss, J., held that gift and testamentary disposition stood on the same footing. In Amulya Ratan Sircar's case Mookerjee, J., observes that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not invest a raiyat holding a non-transferable occupancy right with the power to transfer his holding. But such transaction by the raiyat must be held to be operative against him and the persons claiming through him on the application of the principle of estoppel. The principle of estoppel does not apply to the case of a simple gift where there is no consideration and no representation to work estoppel. There can be no estoppel as against the heir-at-law as his right to the properties and the operation of the bequest accrue at the same time, namely, on the death of the testator. On these considerations the learned Judge held in Amulya Ratan's case that an occupancy raiyat has no right to make a testamentary disposition. It should be noted that this case was decided shortly before the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Annada Mohan Roy (5). In Behari Lal

Ghose v. Sindhu Bala Dassi (6) Mookerjee, J. held that Dayamoyi's case has made such an alteration in the view of the law as to make gift of a non-transferable occupancy holding valid except as against the landlord. But in that case the learned Judge adhered to his view that the case of a gift must be distinguished from that of a testamentary disposition in that in the latter case bequest was revocable up to the last moment of the life of the testator and that the moment the bequest came into operation, if legal and valid, was the moment at which the right of the heir accrued by operation of law. In the Full Bench Case of Dayamoyi which dealt only with the question of transfer the deductions drawn by the learned Judges from the authorities were merely given in the form of propositions of law without discussion of the grounds of the decision. It was there laid down that the transfer of the whole or part is operative against the raiyat where it is voluntary and also where it is involuntary, if the raiyat with knowledge fails to have the sale set aside. As I have said, in the Full Bench case there is no discussion of law; but it is evident that the rules laid down there were based on the application of the principle of estoppel and the doctrine of derogation of grant by the grantor; and also in cases of involuntary transfer, on the application of the doctrine of waiver.

The Full Bench case came up for consideration by a Special Bench the decision of which must now be taken to have settled all points in controversy with regard to the right of an occupancy raiyat to transfer or make a gift or bequest. Up to the time of the Special Bench case of Chandra Benode Kundu v. Ala Bux (7), the question in controversy was as to whether the right of a raiyat in a non-transferable occupancy holding was a personal right or an interest in land. If it was a personal right it could not be transferred under the law and, therefore, there could not be any question of estoppel but strangely enough it is in the cases which held that the right of an occupancy raiyat in his holding was not much distinguishable from a personal right that the doctrine of estoppel was employed. In the Special Bench case the same learned Judge who had decided Amulyaratan's case and who was then the Acting Chief Justice in his elaborate judgment, the result of a scholarly research in the history and nature of the right of a raiyat apparently went back on his view which he had expressed in his previous decisions. On the question as to whether the right of an occupancy raiyat is a personal right or a right in immovable property the learned Acting Chief Justice held that whatever might have been the law earlier the occupancy raiyat enjoys under the Bengal Tenancy Act substantial right in the land and his interest cannot be appropriately described as merely a personal right or personal privilege. With regard to the application of the principles of estoppel and waiver the learned Chief Justice observed :

"There were manifest difficulties in the application of all such doctrines because if the right of occupancy was purely personal right or personal privilege it is not easy to appreciate how it could in fact be made transferable by invoking the aid of one or other of those principles of law."

The result of that decision is that the right of an occupancy raiyat in a non-transferable holding is a right in immovable property ; that if it was a personal right the application of the doctrine of estoppel and waiver would be inconsistent with the nature of the right and that if it is an interest in land the applications of those principles would be superfluous. The Special Bench case was considered by a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Jugeshar Misra v. Nath Koeri (8) in which the learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court following the Special Bench case of this Court negatived the application of the principles of estoppel and waiver to transfers by an occupancy raiyat and held that the right of an occupancy raiyat in a holding was an interest in land and carried with it all the incidents of an immovable property. The foundation of the decision of Amulya Ratan's case has accordingly, by subsequent decisions, been entirely cut away.

Looking at the rules as laid down in the Bengal Tenancy Act it appears that the statute does not pretend to lay down all the incidents of an occupancy right as was pointed out in Kripa Sindhu Mukherjee v. Annada Sundari Debi (9) approved.

by the Special Bench. The preamble of the Act shows that it presumes to amend and consolidate the law relating to landlord and tenant. It was therefore beyond its scope to deal with the law as between the tenant and a third party. The Bengal Tenancy Act does not invest the occupancy raiyat with any particular right as against a third party nor does it take away any right which he may have under the general law. It was at one time argued that an occupancy raiyat has no right of transfer because the Bengal Tenancy Act though it expressly mentions such right as existing in tenure-holders and raiyats at fixed rates does not refer to such right (right of transfer or testamentary disposition) in occupancy raiyats ; and reliance was also placed on S. 178 (3) (d) which prohibits a contract likely to take away the right of the raiyat to transfer or bequeath his holding in accordance with local usage, as showing that the right of transfer or testation does not exist in a raiyat except in accordance with local usage. This argument does not seem to be effective as it can be explained on the general principles of law. As in an ordinary lease there may be enforceable terms relating to restraint against alienation so in the case of an occupancy holding a raiyat may contract with his landlord not to transfer his holding to any one except the landlord. But the law invalidates a contract where the right to transfer or bequeath is acquired by the raiyat in accordance with local custom or usage.

The right of a raiyat in his holding has gradually improved according to the decisions of this Court and it must now be taken to be co-extensive with the right to any other immovable property. At one time his interest was supposed to be not heritable, subsequently it was held to be so. It was then again held to be non-transferable. It has subsequently been held that it is transferable except in so far as it is prohibited by the Bengal Tenancy Act namely, that it should not affect the interest of the landlord. Under the Bengal Tenancy Act the right to transfer and the right to bequeath are placed on the same footing as was admitted by Mookerjee, J., in Amulya Ratan's case. If the right of transfer is available to the raiyat by virtue of his interest being an interest in the land there can be no doubt that the right to bequeath must also be held available to him. The right to bequeath is one of the incidents of ownership and it cannot be taken away or restricted except by express enactment. The distinction that was originally made between the right of transfer and the right to bequeath was based on the application of the principle of estoppel. Since that has disappeared there is nothing to support the distinction as has been fairly conceded before us by the learned advocate for the respondent. The absence of mention of a right in any enactment which does not deal completely with the law of immovable property as the Bengal Tenancy Act does not necessarily prove that the right does not exist. In the Special Bench case of Chandra Binode Kundu v. Ala Bux (8) at p. 244 the learned Chief Justice remarked :

"the fact that S. 26 makes the occupancy right heritable and does not refer to the question of transferability does not consequently justify the inference that the legislature did not intend to make the occupancy right transferable."

We adopt this passage verbatim by only altering the word "transferable" into "bequeathable." It is worthy of note that on the conclusions arrived at by the learned Chief Justice in the Special Bench case he expressly stated that it was not necessary to examine the cases which dealt with voluntary transfer for value by an occupancy raiyat or with the power to make testamentary devise. There can be no doubt that if the cases with regard to bequest had come under scrutiny the Special Bench would have held that they were wrongly decided.

I have given full consideration to the point raised before us and to the authorities bearing on it and have come to the conclusion that as the law now stands a raiyat holding a non-transferable holding has as much right to make a testamentary disposition of the holding as he has to transfer it subject of course to the limitation mentioned in the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this case we should not lose sight of the fact that the objection with regard to the validity of the bequest is not taken by the heir-at-law but by an under-tenant. It is in evidence as remarked by the Munsif that Alakmani left two nephews as heirs one of whom was Shama Charan in whose favour the will was and the other was a witness to the will. In the view that we have taken of the matter it is not necessary to consider the second point raised on behalf of the appellant. The result is that this appeal is allowed that the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal No. 278 of 1926, Decided on 6th June 1928, from appellate decree of 2nd Offg. Sub-Judge, Pabna, D/- 16th September 1925.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Partial dispossession by landlord — Lands separately assessed — Abatement and not suspension of rent should be allowed.

Where the lands demised are included in several schedules which are separately assessed, partial dispossession of the tenant from the tenure by the landlord does not entitle the tenant to total suspension of the rent. He can get only abatement thereof: A. I. R. 1925 P.C. 97 and A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 737, Foll. [P 131 C 2]

(b) Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (1919), S. 57—Certificate Officer is not Court with special jurisdiction—His decision cannot operate as res judicata in a civil Court—Civil P. C., S. 11.

A Certificate Officer, who is a mere agent for speedy and summary recovery of rents due to an estate under the management of the Court of Wards and on whom certain powers of a civil Court have been conferred, is not a Court exercising special jurisdiction. And so any decision arrived at by a certificate officer cannot operate as res judicata on any question raised in the civil Court: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 421, Ref. [P 132 C 1,2]

Atul Chandra Gupta and Bansori Lal Sarkar—for Appellants.

Naresh Chandra Sen Gupta and Krishna Kamal Moitra—for Respondent.

B. B. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants which arises out of a suit for rent which was dismissed by the Munsif, but an appeal by the plaintiff was decreed by the Subordinate Judge. The points which are urged on behalf of the appellants are three in number. The suit was for rent for the years 1326 to 1330. With regard to the rent of 1326 no decree has been made in favour of the plaintiff, as it was barred by limitation.

The facts which gave rise to the question in controversy are these:

The estate of the plaintiff was under the management of the Court of Wards. The Manager of the Court of Wards applied for a certificate to be filed to the Certificate Officer for rent alleged to be due on account of this tenure from the year 1326 to the year 1329 B. S. The certificate was filed. On the objection of the defendants made under S. 9, Public Demands Recovery Act 3 of 1919 (B.C.), the Certificate Officer cancelled the certificate. The objection was that the rent was to be suspended on account of the defendants having been dispossessed at the instance of the plaintiff, of about 12 bighas of land. The tenure of the plaintiff consists, we are told, of about 100 bighas. The Certificate Officer apparently held that under the circumstances proved the landlord was not entitled to receive any rent. The contention in the Court below was that on account of this decision of the Certificate Officer the plaintiff is precluded from suing for rent for the period covered by the decision of the Certificate Officer, and the same argument has been addressed before us which includes the rent for the years 1327 to 1329 B.S. The Subordinate Judge held that in the present case the Certificate Officer filed the certificate without any jurisdiction and, therefore, his order must be treated as if non-existent. It is, however, argued on behalf of the appellants that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in his conclusion.

It is submitted in the first place that the Certificate Officer took cognizance of the requisition for filing the certificate with jurisdiction, and he had also jurisdiction to make the order cancelling the certificate. That being so his order should be treated as the order of a Court of special jurisdiction and as the order was made in the exercise of the jurisdiction of that Court, that order should operate as res judicata in the present case. A third point was urged that upon the facts found that the defendants had been deprived of 12 bighas of the lands comprising his tenure there should be total suspension of rent.

With regard to the last point raised as regards the total suspension of rent the Subordinate Judge found that in the patta granted to the defendants the lands are included in several schedules and each schedule containing different plots of land was separately assessed. The lands of which the defendants have been dispossessed are included in one schedule the rent for which was Rs. 3 odd per year. Upon that finding the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that there should be abatement of rent by that amount, and he gave a decree for the balance at the rate of Rs. 35-10-6. This question of suspension of rent has been elaborately dealt with by me in the case of Susil Kumar Biswas v. Rajani Kanta (1) where I have endeavoured to examine the question from all points of view with reference to the decided cases, and I do not propose to travel over the same grounds. In the present case the point appears to me to be covered by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Katyayani Debi v. Uday Kumar Das (2) although in this case the rent was not fixed at so much per bigha. It was fixed for each schedule separately; and, therefore, it falls within that decision. I think, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in his view that there should be no suspension of rent in this case but only abatement of rent as ordered by him.

The real question in controversy is whether the decision of the Certificate Officer could operate as res judicata or not in the present litigation. The learned advocate for the appellants relies upon a case, in which the judgment was delivered by me: Dwijapada Das v. Kalipada De (3) in support of the contention that the judgment of the Certificate Officer with which we are concerned was the judgment of a Court of special jurisdiction and is, therefore, binding upon the civil Court in this case.

This leads us to the question as to whether the Certificate Officer is a Court and secondly, it is a Court of special jurisdiction as contemplated in the decision I have referred to and in all the cases cited in that judgment. Reference is made first to S. 57, Act 3 of 1913 (B. C.) where it is stated that the Certificate Officer shall be deemed to be a Court and any proceeding before him shall be deemed to be a civil proceeding within the meaning of S. 14, Lim. Act 1908. It is argued that this shows that the Certificate Officer shall be deemed to be a Court for all purposes and this position of the Certificate Officer is not restricted to the matter referred to in S. 14, Lim. Act. The contention of the learned advocate for the respondent, on the other hand, is that no such construction can be put on that section. He refers to S. 49 of the Act. Under S. 49 of the Act it is specially provided that every Collector, Certificate Officer and other officers acting under the Act shall have the power of a civil Court for the purpose of receiving evidence and so forth. It is contended, therefore, that certain powers of the civil Court have only been conferred on the Certificate Officer and he cannot be deemed to be a Court. It seems to me that there is considerable force in this contention, many officers have been invested with the powers of a Court for different purposes; for instance a Registering Officer exercises the powers of a Court for the purpose of summoning witnesses, taking evidence and so forth. In certain instances a Survey Officer has also been given that power. That does not necessarily make those officers a Court with special jurisdiction.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 P. O. 297=52 Cal. 417=52 I. A. 160 (P.C.).

(3) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 421.

In my view the Certificate Officer cannot in any circumstance be considered as a Court. He is the mere agent for speedy and summary recovery of rents due to an estate under the management of the Court of Wards. (I deal at present merely with the question of recovery of rent by the certificate procedure). The mere requisition in a prescribed form by a person entitled to recover rent enables the Certificate Officer to file a certificate. This certificate may be challenged by the certificate debtor by following a certain procedure. If you call this officer a Court the procedure is contrary to all sense of justice and the rules universally followed by a Court. First comes the sentence and then the trial of the certificate debtor who comes and seeks for trial. That certainly cannot be the procedure of a Court of Justice. Then again the Certificate Officer may cancel the certificate on various grounds which need not be such as a judicial officer considers proper. For instance it appears from the judgment of the Munsif that in this case the Certificate Officer cancelled the certificate on a previous occasion relying upon the Commissioner's letter containing certain directions to the manager in which he directed that requisition should be made for certificate only in cases where there would be no contest.

Now if it is held that the decision of the Certificate Officer cancelling the certificate prevents the plaintiff from bringing a suit in the regular Court, could it be said that even in the case last mentioned a person who made the requisition for certificate shall be debarred from getting his rent by a suit in the civil Court? I think not. Moreover it seems to me that the intention of the legislature was that the Certificate Officer should deal with such simple questions as to whether the certificate debtor was really in possession of the land for the rent of which the certificate has been filed, or whether he has actually paid the amount due. It could not possibly have been the intention of the legislature that the Certificate Officer who cannot be presumed to be a trained lawyer, should decide such complicated question as arose in this case, as to whether there should be a suspension of the entire rent because the defendants had been dispossessed of a small area of the tenure. The question involved is one of considerable difficulty and there has been a number of authorities taking different views on different sets of facts. In that view, in my opinion, the judgment of the Certificate Officer cannot operate as res judicata as regards the suspension of rent. Another argument raised on behalf of the respondent is that power has been given to the certificate debtor to question the certificate in the civil Court, but no power has been given to the landlord when the certificate is cancelled to question the decision of the Certificate Officer in a civil Court. To say that the landlord must be bound by the order of the Certificate Officer who cancels his certificate but the certificate debtor may question his decision by a reference to the civil Court would be essentially wrong. There is considerable force in this argument which is not met by the reply of the appellants that the landlord chose his own tribunal and he must abide by its decision, right or wrong; and he cannot make a grievance if he is prevented from going to the civil Court and question the decision of the Certificate Officer.

I hold, therefore, that the Certificate Officer not being a Court exercising special jurisdiction, any decision arrived at by him cannot operate as res judicata on any question raised in a civil Court. In that view it is unnecessary for me to discuss the question whether the action of the Certificate Officer in filing the certificate was ultra vires or not.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This rule was obtained by the petitioner who happens to be a mortgagee of a non-transferable occupancy holding for the revision of an order by which the Munsiff declined to allow her to make a deposit of the decretal amount under S. 52, Act 8 of 1869 which prevails in the district from which this case comes. It appears that the opposite party 4 held a mourashi occupancy holding under the opposite parties 1, 2 and 3 for a considerable length of time, that on 7th December 1915 opposite party 4 mortgaged a portion of the holding to the petitioner on executing a mortgage bond and taking a loan of a certain sum which afterwards swelled into Rs. 329. Opposite party 4 not having paid the money he borrowed, the petitioner instituted a suit on 6th December 1926 in the Court of the Munsiff at Habiganj for enforcing the dues under the mortgage and for realizing the sum of Rs. 329. After the institution of the mortgage suit opposite parties 1 to 3 brought a rent suit against opposite party 4 for arrears of rent. The suit was decreed ex parte on 1st February 1927. The decree directed that if the defendant did not pay Rs. 9-1-0 as rent for the year 1322 B. S. within fifteen days of the date of the decree, the defendant in that suit would be liable to be ejected from the suit land. The petitioner states that on coming to know of this fact and of the decree for ejectment she applied on the 9th February 1927 to be allowed to make the deposit and as a matter of fact she actually deposited the sum of Rs. 9-1-0 in the Court on 16th February 1927. Her application to make the deposit was considered after several adjournments on the 11th February 1928 and the Munsiff held that she had no locus standi to make the deposit although the application was not contested by the defendant in the rent suit, that is, opposite party 4. For the revision of that order this Rule was asked for and obtained and it is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the Munsiff had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law in not allowing the petitioner to make the deposit under S. 52 and in declining to entertain her application for that purpose. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on a very early decision reported in Saroda Proshad Roy v. Nobinchandra Dutt (1), where Norman, J. and Kemp, J. dealing with S. 78, Act 10 of 1859, the words of which section are precisely similar to the words of S. 52 of Act 8 of 1869, held that the arrear could be paid not only by the tenant but also by his transferee or by any other party interested in saving a forfeiture of the tenure. Reliance has also been placed on a decision of this Court in the case of Inder Pershad Singh v. Campbell (2) where it was assumed by Ramesh Chandra Mitter, J. and Maclean, J. that a deposit could be made not only by the tenant but by a transferee from him or by a person who held under the tenant. At p. 478 of the Report the learned Judges said this :

“The mere fact that the plaintiff might have paid up the amount of the decree against the Bhatowlia Factory, and thus saved the factory and himself as its tenant from ejectment, is not enough. We are informed it was a decree for rent and for ejectment under S. 52, Beng. Act 8 of 1869 : but it may be that the decree was for a sum which the plaintiff could not reasonably be expected to pay, considering that he would have no security for his payment. The law which allows any one interested in protecting a tenure from sale to pay up a decree, gives him full security in the shape of a right to take possession of the tenure: but this is not the case under S. 52 of the same Act."

(1) [1864] 1 Marshall's Rep. 417=2 Hay. 527.

(2) [1881] 7 Cal. 474 = 8 C. L. R. 501.

The next decision on which reliance has been placed is a decision of Teunon, J. and Cuming, J. in the case of Kali Kishore Das v. Gopal Ram Shaha (3), and the learned Judges there held that where in execution of a decree for rent the landlord decree-holder proposed to eject the tenant of a non-transferable holding under the provisions of S. 52, Bengal Act 8 of 1869, and to avoid the ejectment a third person claiming to be a transferee from the tenant sought to make the deposit provided for by the section he was entitled to make the deposit. In arriving at that decision the learned Judges referred to the Full Bench case of Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan (4) and the learned Judges held that having regard to the principles laid down in the case from Marshall's Reports to which I have referred and to the principles of the decision in the Full Bench case in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan (4), the transferee of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was entitled to make the deposit under S. 52. So the view of the law is that under S. 52 it is not the judgment-debtor alone but anyone who happened either to be a transferee from the judgment-debtor or a person who was otherwise interested in protecting the tenure from forfeiture, was entitled to make the deposit.

This was the view of the law which obtained in this Court from the year 1864 to the year 1927 when two of my learned brothers (Suhrawardy, J. and Mallik, J.) took a view contrary to the view taken in the cases to which I have referred. In that case the learned Judges held that there was nothing in Act 8 of 1869 which entitled the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding to make a deposit under S. 52 of the said Act in order to avoid ejectment of the tenant. Apart from authorities it

"Any person desiring to eject a raiyat or to cancel a lease on account of non-payment of arrears of rent, may sue for such ejectment or cancelment and for recovery of the arrear in the same action, or may adduce any unexecuted decree for arrears of rent as evidence of the existence of such arrear in a suit for such ejectment or cancelment. In all cases of such suits for the ejectment of a raiyat or the cancelment of a lease, the decree shall specify the amount of the arrear, and if such amount together with interest and costs of suit, be paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, execution shall be stayed."

The words "to be paid into Court within fifteen days" do not impose any limitation as to the person by whom the payment is to be made and it has been argued on behalf of the petitioner that if under S. 62 of Act 8 of 1869 any one interested in the protection of the under-tenure can put in the money for the purpose of preventing the sale there is no reason why any person other than the judgment-debtor who is interested in protecting the holding from forfeiture by the landlord is not entitled to make a deposit. The language of the section itself does not suggest that the money must be paid by the judgment-debtor in the rent suit and by him alone. It has, however, been argued by Mr. Satyendra Kishore Ghose, who appears for the opposite party that the language of Ss. 46 and 47, Act 8 of 1869, suggests that there is also an implied prohibition in S. 52, for any person other than judgment-debtor to make the deposit in just as under Ss. 46 and 47, it is said, the judgment-debtor alone could make that payment, so also in S. 52, the payment could only be made by him. I do not think that would be the proper mode of the interpretation of the statute.

In order to affect the rights of persons who have got interest in the holding, the statute must expressly say so, as it seems unreasonable as to why any one having an interest in the holding should be prohibited under S. 52 unless the statute either expressly or by the plainest implication suggests a contrary construction. Besides, looking to the facts of this particular case before me it would certainly be a great hardship to the petitioner if for a decree for Rs. 9-1-0 obtained in circumstances I have narrated, the tenant would be evicted from the holding which had been mortgaged to the petitioner for a large sum of Rs. 329 odd. Looking from the common sense point of view the landlord certainly is entitled to get the arrears of rent from his tenant and if a tenant chooses for his benefit to effect a transfer of a portion of his occupancy holding for a large sum, the interest of such a transferee ought not to be allowed to be affected to his prejudice so long as the landlord gets all his dues which is said to be recoverable from the tenant. There is undoubtedly the decision in the case of Baneswar Singh v. Abdul Hassan (5), which supports the contention of the opposite party but having regard to the language of the statute and having regard to the fact that the earlier authorities applicable to the case and which are relied on on behalf of the petitioner have stood for more than half a century, I feel myself reluctant to follow the last decision in the case. It is true, as I have said in another case that it cannot be said that the last word has been said on the subject. I think the ends of justice will be met if the petitioner be allowed to make the deposit. The order of the Munsiff is, therefore, set aside and he is directed to receive the deposit which has been made by the petitioner. The Rule is made absolute. There will be no order as to costs.

There is no objection to consolidating a number of appeals in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, if the matter for consideration in a number of appeals is the same and the parties are the same. But it is another matter when it is sought to invoke the aid of S. 17, Court-fees Act, on the allegation that the memorandum of appeal in each of these cases should be consolidated into one memorandum of appeal and treated as if it was

Judgment.—This is an application made on behalf of the appellants who filed four appeals against the decision of the District Judge in four land acquisition matters relating to the compensation awarded for acquisition of four plots of land. The appellants are the same and the respondent is the Secretary of State in all the cases. Although the lands were in possession of different tenants, they are no parties to these appeals. The application on behalf of the appellants is that all the four appeals may be consolidated and, in effect, the prayer is that the memoranda of appeals in all these cases should be considered as one memorandum of appeal; after having done that, to apply S. 17, Court-fees Act, and to allow them to pay Court-fees on the consolidated value of all the four appeals instead of paying Court-fees for each appeal separately, as they are bound to do under ordinary circumstances. In support of the application, the learned vakil for the petitioners referred to the case of Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secretary of State (1). The last paragraph of the head note to the report apparently supports the contention of the petitioners: but as the learned Government Pleader has drawn our attention to the reasoning in the judgment it seems to us that the learned Judge did not accept the contention of the counsel on behalf of the appellant petitioners in that case that they should be required to pay Court-fees on the consolidated value of all these appeals. At p. 147 the learned Judges make the following observation.

“There seems to be no reason in principle why we should not in these cases make an order consolidating them, so as to enable the appellants to have any benefit to which they may be entitled under S. 17, coupled with the proviso of Art. 1, Sch. 1, to which we have already referred. S. 17 declares that, if there are distinct subjects involved in a plaint or in an appeal, the Court-fee payable was to be calculated on the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints or memorandum of appeal in suits embracing separately each of such subjects would be liable under this Act.

Mr. Donogh on behalf of the appellants contends that the subject-matter of these different references are practically one and the same. We are not prepared to give effect to that contention. The plots are different; they are occupied by different tenants; the references were separate, and no application was made in the Court below for consolidation. The application to the Subordinate Judge was simply for the purpose of treating the cases as similar in their nature, and, therefore, we think that we ought not to treat them as all referring to one subject-matter. So far we are at one with the learned Government Pleader.

These observations clearly support the contention of the Senior Government pleader in the present case. There is no objection to consolidating a number of appeals in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, if the matter for consideration in a number of appeals is the same and the parties are the same. But it is another matter when it is sought to invoke the aid of S. 17, Court-fees Act, on the allegation that the memorandum of appeal in each of these four cases should be consolidated into one memorandum of appeal and treated as if it was one memorandum embracing two or more distinct subjects. That, in our opinion, it is difficult to hold and the learned Judges in the case referred to did not hold it to be so. The learned Judges in the concluding portion of the judgment expressed their order in that appeal in the following terms.

"We, accordingly direct that the appeals be consolidated, and that the appellants do pay Court-fees upon the value of the consolidated appeals under S. 17, Court-fees Act, subject to the limitation under Art. 1, Sch. 1 of the Act, namely, Rs. 3000."

We are unable to follow why the learned Judges referred to S. 17, Court-fees Act, in this connexion. The question as to the maximum amount of Court-fees payable does not arise in the case before us. So far as the judgment goes, the learned Judges were of opinion that S. 17 could not be invoked in aid of the petitioners in such a case as this. We are also of opinion that we are unable to treat the memorandum in each of these appeals as one memorandum for a single appeal. The appeals may be consolidated for the purpose of hearing them but Court-fees must be paid separately for each according to the provisions of the Court-fees Act. The petitioners have paid the proper Court-fees for two of these appeals; with regard to the other two, the deficit Court-fees have not been paid. We allow them time to pay the balance of the Court-fees due on or before Monday, 5th December next. There will be no order as to costs of this hearing.

Mahomedan Law — Pre-emption — Invocation of witnesses is absolutely necessary in the second demand if it has not been done in the first.

In a case of pre-emption under Mahomedan law in order to dispense with the necessity of Talad-i-Ishhad the Talab-i-Mowasibat must be accompanied by the formality that is prescribed under the Mahomedan law as to the invoking of witnesses. If this invocation of witnesses has been done in the first demand no second demand would be necessary, otherwise the second demand is absolutely necessary. 4 B. L. R. A. C. 171 and 8 B. L. R. 455 Ref. [P 137 C 1]

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption. Defendant 1 who is the brother of the plaintiff was the vendor and the other defendants, namely, defendants 2 to 5 the vendees. The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that the second demand, namely, the Talabi-i-ishhad has not been satisfactorily proved. So far as this finding is concerned it is a finding of fact. But then it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that inasmuch as the Talab-i-mowasibat was duly proved and it was accompanied by the requisite formalities and was made in the presence of witnesses, the necessity for a second demand of Talabi-i-ishhad has been dispensed with. Now the precise question as to the circumstances under which the first demand would be sufficient has been considered in a very recent case of this Court namely to which decision one of us was a party and which is about to be reported. It has been held in that case on a consideration of the authorities that in order to dispense with the necessity of Talabi-i-ishhad the Talabi-mowasibat must be accompanied by the formality that is prescribed under the Mahomedan law as to the invoking of witnesses. It has been held in that case that if this invocation of witnesses has been done in the first demand no second demand would be necessary. It has thus been said in that case :

"The right is strictissimi juris and failure to perform the demands in accordance with the requirements of the Mahomedan law would defeat the plaintiff's claim."

The invoking of witnesses, as far as may be gathered from the authorities, is no mere matter of form; it imparts to the demand a solemnity clothed in which the demand becomes not a casual one but on the other hand assumes the nature of a serious transaction. No particular form of words is necessary for the invocation of witnesses, but the claimant in the presence of witnesses must say to the following effect :

"Such a person bought such a property (sufficiently indicating the same) of which I am the Shafi; I have already claimed my right of Shafia and now again claim it, be therefore witness thereof." (Ameer Ali on Mahomedan Law, 4th Edition, Vol. II, p. 72.)

The last word or words to that effect must be said even where the two demands are combined into one. The importance of this invocation as an essential part of the ceremony has been impliedly recognized in several cases amongst which reference may be made to Jadu Singh v. Raj Kumar (1); Ramdular Misser v. Jhumack Lal (2).

Upon the findings of the two Courts below and indeed upon the evidence on the record there is nothing to suggest that this invocation of witnesses accompanied the Talabi-i-mowasibat. Under these circumstances the second demand was absolutely necessary.

The appellant's contention therefore in our opinion fails and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Misc. Appln., Decided on 19—7—1927.

Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 47 and Sch. 2, Part 1 (iii)—Corrupt practice—Connivance of candidate or agent in procuring application material — Connivance involves some degree of knowledge on their part—Section need not be construed strictly.

A candidate and his agent had no reason to believe that there was any imposture at the time when voters came forward to apply for voting papers in the name of persons who were afterwards proved to be dead. When the rival candidate challenged their identity, the candidate merely stood by and the agent identified the voters.

Held : that there was no corrupt practice by either the candidate or his agent, whose connivance in procuring the application is material, and some degree of knowledge of the truth on their part must be proved in order to establish connivance. The section need not be construed strictly. [P 130 C 2]

Judgment. — This is an application made on behalf of Mr. Immanuel Jacob Cohen who was a candidate for election to the Corporation of Calcutta at the last general election for an order that the election of his successful rival, Bipin Behari Sadkhan, as councillor for the non-Mahomedan constituency of ward 13 on 16th March 1927, be declared null and void.

The application is made under Ss. 46, 47 and Sch. 2, Part 1, Sub-S. 3, Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923. S. 43 provides that if the validity of any election is questioned by reason of the commission of any corrupt practice by a candidate or his agent any person enrolled in the electoral roll may at any time within a specified period apply to the High Court. Under S. 47 if the High Court is of opinion that any corrupt practice specified in Part 1, Sch. 2, has been committed the election of the returned candidate shall be void. Sch. 2, Part 1 (iii) provides that the procuring or abetting or attempting to procure by a candidate or his agent or by any other person with the connivance of the candidate or his agent, the application by a person for a voting paper in the name of any other person whether living or dead is a corrupt practice.

In his petition the applicant has made the charges, but for the purpose of the hearing, which the nature of the case requires should be decided upon oral evidence, the charges have been limited to three. The first is that one Lachman Tora whose name appeared as voter No. 1255 on the electoral roll at the time of the election, was dead; that somebody else appeared at the polling both representing himself to be Lachman Tora, and was identified by the agent of the successful candidate as Lachman Tora though Mr. Cohen challenged his identity, while Sadhukhan was present and allowed the imposter so to be identified.

The second charge is with reference to a voter of the name of Jasoda Lal Roy No. 1181. He too, it is charged, had died prior to the date of the election, and it is stated in the petition that with reference to him also the same occurred.

The third charge is that, among others, thirteen specified persons were out of Calcutta but that they were personated and the polling agent of the successful candidate identified them although the identity of each was challenged by Mr. Cohen. Though thirteen names are given, this item of charge has been limited at the hearing to the case of Sadhu Charan Pal, Voter No. 1156, the second on the list, who, Mr. Cohen says, was very well known to him for a long time and was out of Calcutta on the day in question.

In answer a number of affidavits have been filed by Bipin Behary Sadhukhan and by others to whom the third of these charges relate. As regards Sadhu Charan Pal the affidavit is that of Radhanath Sett, his nephew, who asserts that his uncle was in Calcutta on the day of the election.

The parties have been cross-examined on their affidavits and in canvassing voters their procedure was much the same, but with different results. Mr. Cohen says that before the election he went round to a large number of the electors canvassing their votes in the manner which is usual in contested elections, and on calling at the shops where these two persons Lachman Tora and Jasoda Lal Roy were supposed to carry on business he was informed that they were dead. In the list which he had with him he made a note that they were dead, and accordingly prepared himself on the day of the election to challenge any votes that it might be attempted to record on their behalf.

Sadhukhan says that he was a member of the last previously elected body of Municipal Commissioners, and as such he was one of the Market Committee. It was his duty frequently to make tours of the Municipal market and in that capacity he became well acquainted with this individual by sight but not by name, who, when he enquired of him with special reference to this election, announced that his name was Lachman Tora.

The evidence with regard to Jasoda Lal Roy is much the same except that Sadhukhan does not say that he knew the man by sight before hand.

Consequently we have it that on one side on enquiry at the voter's places of business one candidate was told that they were dead while the other candidate was given to believe that they were alive and would vote in his favour. I may say at once that I see no reason to doubt either of these two stories. There is nothing on the record to show, or from which it can be inferred, that prior to the date of the actual election anybody communicated either to Sadhukhan or to his agent that the voters in question were dead. That they both in fact were dead at the time of the election is common ground. Subsequently Sadhukhan made enquiries and ascertained this, but that does not affect the matter.

On the day of the election at the polling booth where these persons were required to vote, two persons came and asked for voting papers in the name of Lachman Tora and Jasoda Lal Roy respectively. According to the evidence Mr. Cohen challenged them. They were identified by Sadhukhan's agent N. K. Dutt. It is of no consequence whether Sadhukhan also participated in the identification or not, in any case he was present and saw what happened. Mr. Cohen spoke up and on each occasion when the application of a voting paper was made informed the presiding officer that the two alleged voters were dead. There lies before me with regard to the votes, of these persons a printed form headed 'list of challenged votes.' It contains the name of the voter and the name of the identifier. Then follows the order of the presiding officer in the words 'questioned and allowed' signed J. B. Ganguli, who was the presiding officer on the day in question. At the foot is a printed form in the following terms :

"I do hereby declare and undertake to prove the person applying for ballot paper under electoral roll serial no. has committed the offence of personation."

This is signed in each case by Mr. Cohen himself and the Fenwick Bazar polling station, Booth No. 3 is specified.

Mr. Cohen said that the presiding officer simply enquired of the alleged voter what his name was. But as Sadhukhan would be more interested in giving the fullest possible account of what occurred I questioned him myself and he said that what happened was that the presiding officer asked of each of these persons who they were. They gave their name as being those of the alleged voters. The presiding officer pointed out to them that Mr. Cohen challenged them and cautioned them that he said that the persons whom they professed to be were dead. They re-asserted that they were the persons whom they professed to be. The presiding officer warned them of the risks they ran if they did not tell the truth. They repeated their assertions and they were allowed to vote.

As regards Sadhu Charan Pal nothing need be said for there is nothing in any way to connect Sadhukhan with the alleged impersonation other than the formal identification by his agent. It may be that this case could have been carried further but on the evidence I cannot hold that A. K. Dutt knew that the voter was not Sadhu Charan Pal even should I hold that Radhanath Sett is not to be believed.

The question is whether on the evidence there has been a corrupt practice by Mr. Sadhukhan or by his agent. This depends upon the meaning of the section which defines the offence of personation. The section is somewhat difficult to construe. There must be an application by some person for the voting paper. That is the basis from which the rest proceeds. It is corrupt practice if that application is made in the name of a dead person and if the application is procured or abetted or attempted to be procured by a candidate or his agent or by any other person with the connivance of the candidate or his agent. If the words

"by any other person with the connivance of a candidate"

refer to the impostor himself, then the words, applying them to this case, refer to an application by an impostor, attempted to be procured by the impostor with the connivance of the candidate or his agent, which is not a very intelligible solution of the meaning of the section. In that view it is argued that I am not concerned with the word connivance. I do not think it is necessary strictly to construe the section and it may be assumed that connivance of the candidate or his agent is material. Connivance in my judgment necessarily involves some degree of knowledge on the part of the candidate or his agent. The meaning of the word connivance according to Murray's Oxford Dictionary is

"the action of winking at, overlooking or ignoring an offence, fault etc. often implying secret sympathy or approval, tacit permission or sanction; encouragement by forbearing to condemn."

All these meanings in my opinion involve in some degree at least knowledge on the part of the person guilty of connivance. It has been argued—that even if Sadhukhan or his agent had reason to believe that there was no imposture at the time when the voters came forward, he nevertheless by standing by, and, in the case of the agent, by identifying the voters when Mr. Cohen had challenged them, connived at the imposture. I cannot take that view for that would involve that their belief should change upon Mr. Cohen challenging the identity of the voters. It is, I agree, a suspicious circumstance that N. K. Dutt, the agent, has made no affidavit in this case. But nevertheless taking the view that I have expressed, in order to bring Sadhukhan or his agent within the section, I must come to a finding that either he or his agent knew of the imposture or at least had reason to believe that there was imposture. It is therefore immaterial that N. K. Dutt has made no affidavit, for there is no evidence upon which I could find that as a fact, or from which I should be justified in drawing such an inference. The application therefore must fail.

Before I part with the case, I desire to make some observations, both generally and as affecting the question of costs. Certain very definite facts have emerged. It has been established, first, that there were dead men on the register of voters, secondly, that there were impostors at the municipal election, and that such impostors voted as representing the dead men whose names were on the register. Thirdly it emerges from the evidence that the enquiry by the presiding officer was of the most perfunctory nature. That this was any thing more than a brief interrogation is not the case, though there was a statement by a responsible person, namely, Mr. Cohen that this voter himself was dead—a statement which he further more supported by signing at the foot of the list of challenged votes that he undertook to prove that the person applying for the ballot paper had committed the offence of personation. Further though the list of challenged votes contains a printed form at foot, which suggests from the mere fact of its existence in print that the offence is by no means a rare one, and though the presiding officer warned these persons that if they were not telling the truth they would be punished, so far as I have heard in the course of this case nothing further has occurred. These things have undoubtedly been established in the course of this case. It would be for the present purpose but unprofitable speculation to enquire to what extent this prevails in municipal elections in Calcutta. But on the evidence before me there is nothing to show that any serious attempt is made to prevent it. Whether any and what proceedings can be taken against impostures it is not my duty to enquire, nor is it my duty to say whether these abuses are due to defects in the law or to defects in the conduct of the municipal election. But so far as the applicant has made it clear that such impostures can and do take place, and can, it would appear, be achieved with comparative ease, he has in my opinion rendered a considerable service to the public. This is a matter which I propose to take into consideration on the question of costs. In his evidence he has been moderate in his statement of facts, he has confined himself to such facts as came to his knowledge, and made no attempt to stress them for the purpose of pressing his case. His error has been in taking a mistaken view as to the knowledge of his successful rival.

Having regard to these matters and having regard to the public service which the applicant has undoubtedly, in my opinion, performed by bringing these abuses to light, in my opinion and judgment he should not be mulcted in the costs of this application, and though it must fail I make no order as to costs.

Appeal No. 397 of 1927, Decided on 1st June 1928, from appellate order of Offg. Sub-Judge, Barisal, D/- 16th May 1927.

Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 66 (3) — Decree directing to pay within specified time — Extension of time is not one under S. 66 (3), Ben. Ten. Act — No appeal lies from such order—Only revision can set it right—Civil P. C., Ss. 47 and 115.

When a decree is drawn up directing the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount within a specified time, the extension of time would not be an order under S. 66 (3), Ben. Ten. Act. It is an order varying the terms of the decree which the Court has no jurisdiction to vary.

Where the Court varies the terms of a decree by extending time which he has no jurisdiction to do, there is no appeal from that order but it can only be set right by an application for revision: 26 Cal. 639, Dist. [P 141 C 1]

Jitendra Nath Sanyal—for Appellant.

Gunada Charan Sen and Prasanna Bhusan Gupta—for Respondents.

B. B. Ghose, J.—This is a case arising out of an order passed by the Munsif under S. 66 (3), Ben. Ten. Act. A decree was made in a suit brought by the respondents for rent and ejectment of an under-raiyat. Under sub-S. (2), S. 66 of the Act a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs specifying the amount of the decree and the interest due. Under the second part of that sub-section it seems to me that it is not necessary to specify anything with reference to the execution of the decree, because the law provides that the decree should not be executed if the amount of the decree and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within 15 days or on the re-opening day, if the Court is closed on the fifteenth day. Under sub-S. (3) the Court may for special reasons extend the period of 15 days. The Munsif extended the time. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he held that the time was wrongly extended and he set aside the order of the lower Court extending the time. From that order the present appeal is preferred by the judgment-debtor.

The first objection taken is that there is no appeal against the order of the Munsif to the lower appellate Court. It is argued on behalf of the respondents relying upon the observations of the learned Judges in the case of Bodh Narain v. Mahomed Moosa (1), that there would be an appeal, as the order fell within the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. The decree in the present case stated the amount due to the plaintiffs and it further ordered that the judgment-debtor do pay the specified amount within 15 days and on failure to do that he would be liable to be ejected. As I read the provisions of sub-S. (2), S. 66, it does not contemplate the decree to be drawn up in that form. The decree would be an ordinary decree in ejectment stating the arrears of rent. But sub-S. (2), S. 66, prohibits the decree-holder from executing the decree if the amount is paid within the specified date. If the decree is properly drawn up and if the period within which the decree-holder is prohibited under the law from executing the decree is extended by sub-S. (3), S. 66, then I can understand very well that the order falls within S. 47, Civil P. C., because that would be an order relating to the execution of the decree, and then there would be an appeal from such an order. But when the decree is drawn up as in this case directing the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount within a specified time, the extension of the time would not be an order under sub-S. (3), S. 66 extending the time specified within which the decree-holder was prohibited from executing the decree. It is an order varying the terms of the decree. It seems to me at least doubtful whether the Court had any jurisdiction to vary the decree in that way.

The learned advocate for the respondents, however, points out that in the case above cited, reported as Bodh Narain v. Mahomed Moosa (1), the decree was apparently drawn up in the same terms as in this case, as is shown from the facts stated at the top of p. 640 (of 26 Cal.) of the report, and it is argued that in that case it was held by the learned Judges that the matter fell within S. 242 of the Code of 1882 (now S. 47). With some diffidence I think that there is some fallacy in the argument. If the Munsif had no jurisdiction to extend the time as I think he had not, then there would be no appeal to the Subordinate Judge from that order and it can only be set right by an application for revision. But I may assume that there was an appeal. Assuming that to be so and although the defendant judgment-debtor does not seem to have acted with promptitude in this matter it seems to me that no sufficient ground has been made out for interfering with the order of the Munsif.

I would set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif. I understand that the amount of Rs. 15 odd has been deposited by the judgment-debtor. Having regard to the facts of this case the judgment-debtor is not entitled to any costs in any of the Courts.

Civil Rule No. 256 of 1927, Decided on 22nd June 1928.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, Ss. 105 (3) and 105-A—Application under S. 105 raising question regarding non-mokarari character of tenancy—Government notification under S. 105 (3) requiring ad valorem Court-fee stamp to be paid under Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, if question under S. 105-A be raised—Issue regarding non-mokarari right of tenancy is one under S. 105-A and ad valorem Court-fee is chargeable—S. 7 (4) of Court-fees Act is not applicable—Notification increasing Court-fee is not ultra vires as it incorporates only Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, and no other provision.

An application was made under S. 105 for settlement of fair and equitable rent and for a declaration that the rents of the assessed lands were liable to be enhanced and that the tenants were not mokararidars as recorded in the finally published record of rights. The application was treated as a plaint and the petitioners valued the claim for declaration at Rs. 5. Government notification under S. 105 (3), provided that if during the time of the hearing of application an issue is raised under S. 105-A, an additional stamp to the amount of an ad valorem fee chargeable under Art. 1, Sch. 1 Court fees Act would be payable.

Order.—The question raised by this rule relates to the amount of Court-fees which is payable on an application under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, for settlement of fair and equitable rent and for a declaration that the rents of the assessed lands were liable to be enhanced and that the tenants are not mokararidars as recorded in the finally published Record-of-Rights. The said application was treated as a plaint and the petitioners before me valued the claim for declaration at Rs. 5 and the claim for enhancement of rent from Rs. 57-15-6 to 123-9 per year bore a stamp of annas twelve.

The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the application claiming enhancement bore the proper Court-fee but in regard to the declaration that the tenancy was not a mokarari one he demanded ad valorem Court-fee on the value of the subject matter in dispute. The value of the subject matter in dispute was directed to be ascertained by the Head Quarters Assistant Settlement Officer of the settlement after hearing the petitioners. This was the order which was made on the 26th October 1926. A review of that order was applied for and on 10th February 1927 the review was rejected, and the Settlement Officer directed that unless the deficit Court-fee was paid within a certain time the application would be dismissed. This rule was issued on the opposite parties and the Senior Government Pleader of the High Court to show cause why the order of 26th October 1926 should not be set aside and the Court-fee already paid be deemed sufficient. I have heard the learned advocates for the petitioner and the Senior Government Pleader who showed cause against the rule.

The question turns on the construction to be put on S. 105, Cl. (3), Ben. Ten. Act, and on the notification of Government made under this Section No. 6954 dated 21st July 1923 published in the Calcutta Gazette and which is quoted below: The notification is as follows:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by S. 105, Sub-S. (3), Ben. Ten. Act, 1885 (8 of 1885), as amended by the Devolution Act, 1928 (38 of 1920, and in modification of the Government of India's notification No. 2254-F dated 8th August, 1918 published in the Gazette of India of 10th idem and republished at p. 465 part IA of the Calcutta Gazette of 14th idem, the Governor-in-Council is pleased to direct that an application made under the said section for a settlement of rent during the preparation of a Record-of-Rights under Chap. 10, Ben. Ten. Act, shall bear, (a) a stamp of 12 annas for each tenant making or joining or joined in an application, and, (b) if at any time during the hearing of the application, an issue is raised by the applicant under S. 105-A of the said Act, in addition a stamp to the amount of an ad valorem fee chargeable under Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act 1870 (7 of 1870), as amended by the Bengal Court-fees (amendment) Act, 1922 (4 of 1922) subject to a maximum of Rs. 20."

Here the issue with regard to the declaration of the non-mokarari character of the tenancy is raised by the petitioners under S. 105-A, Ben. Ten. Act, and according to the notification which I have quoted above it seems to me clear that a stamp to the amount of an ad valorem fee chargeable under Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act 1870 as amended by the Bengal Court-fees Amendment Act (No. 4 of 1922) subject to a maximum of Rs. 20 is payable. Art. 1, Sch. 1, of Court-fees Act enacts that the Court-fee payable on a plaint presented to any civil or revenue Court should bear an ad valorem fee according to the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute. In support of the rule the learned advocate for the petitioners has argued that the declaratory relief sought, and the consequential relief of enhancement prayed for in the application under S. 105-105-A bring the case within S. 7 (iv) C of Court-Fees Act and consequently the ad valorem Court-fee was payable on the amount at which the relief sought was valued in the application under S. 105-A which in this case amounts to Rs. 5. I do not think S. 7 (iv) C of Court-Fees Act can have any possible application to the present case. The Court fees have to be paid according to the notification under S. 105 (3) which has been quoted above in extenso. The Court-fee payable is the ad valorem fee on the value of the subject matter of dispute. In the course of the argument a suggestion was made that the notification was ultra vires as it contravened the provisions of S. 35, Court-fees Act which gave authority to reduce the fees mentioned in the Act and it is said that as the effect of the notification is not to reduce or remit the Court-fees but to increase it, the notification is ultra vires. This argument, however, was not seriously pressed. There is also no substance in it as the Court-fees in respect of S. 105 proceedings have to be determined by S. 105 (3), Ben. Ten. Act and the notification under the said section. The notification incorporates by reference only Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act and no other provisions of the said Act.

It is argued for the petitioners that it could not have been the intention of the legislature that an application under S. 105-A would bear a higher Court-fee than a plaint in a suit for same relief in the civil Court. But the intention of the legislature can only be gathered from the plain words of the notification under S. 105 (3) and it is not permissible to a Court while construing the plain words of a statute or a statutory rule to speculate whether the intention of the legislature was to impose a higher Court-fee than that provided for by the Court-fees Act in suits where similar reliefs are asked for in the civil Courts. In this connexion the following remarks of Maxwell in his book on the Interpretation of Statutes seem very apposite: see p. 94 Sixth Edition (1920).

"In a word then it is to be taken as a fundamental principle, standing as it were on the threshold of the whole subject of interpretation, that the plain intention of the legislature, as expressed by the language employed is invariably to be accepted and carried into effect, whatever may be the opinion of the judicial interpreter of its wisdom or justice. If the language admits of no doubt or secondary meaning it is to be obeyed."

The notification is clear and the Court-fee payable is the ad valorem fee on the subject-matter of dispute and the enquiry as to what the subject matter of dispute is, is still pending. This Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff sued for refund of certain gold and silver kept in the custody of the defendant or in lieu of the price thereof. His case was that he handed over two tolas of gold and some silver ornaments to the defendant in 1923 for making some ornaments but the defendant never made the ornaments and refused to return the gold and silver. The defendant pleaded among other things limitation and denied receipt of these ornaments from the present plaintiff. The learned Small Cause Court Judge found as a matter of fact that the plaintiff did make over the gold and silver to the defendant but the defendant did not make the ornaments and did not carry out his share of the contract. He held further that Art. 145, Lim. Act, applied to the case.

A Rule has been obtained on behalf of the defendant and one point is whether Art. 145, Lim. Act, applies or whether there should be a shorter period of limitation under Arts. 49 or 115. It is argued that the handing over of the ornaments for making into other jewellery is not deposit at all. On the other hand I am bound by the authorities of this Court and it is perfectly clear that Art. 145 does not merely apply even when property is not recovered in species. See the case of Kristo Kamini Dassi v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1). An exactly similar case to this appears to be also the case of Gangahari Chakravarti v. Nabin Chandra Banikya (2), where it was held that the case was one under Art. 145 of the Schedule. It is argued, however, that a time is fixed within which the new jewellery was to be delivered and that after that time expired the defendant ceased to be depository and became a person in wrongful possession and so Art. 145 will not apply. In this connexion I would only refer to the case of Promotha Nath Mullick v. Prodyumno Kumar Mullick (3), where the learned Judge points out that the mere fact of possession by the depository after demand becoming wrongful does not take the case out of Art. 145.

In this view, I hold that the proper Article under the Limitation Act has been applied and the suit is in time. The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs, hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Appeal No. 31 of 1927, Decided on 7th July 1928.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 103—Scope—Presy. Towns Insol. Act S. 34 (1) B.

A man who is adjudicated insolvent and whose property vests in the Official Assignee or receiver, need not be sent to jail in execution of a decree against him in which he has already furnished security for his appearance, although he might not have disclosed his books or might have been refused the protection order. For his not disclosing his books he can be dealt with under Insolvency Act.

K. P. Khaitan—for Appellant.S. M. Bose—for Respondents.

Facts.—There was a decree in December 1923 against one Lakshmi Narain and an order for arrest was passed in September 1925. He was adjudicated insolvent on a creditor's petition in January 1926. In March 1926 he was brought under arrest under the order made in September 1925 and on that occasion it was ordered that he should be released on furnishing security for his appearance. In June following he filed his schedule but he was unsuccessful after that in getting protection order. Another application on behalf of the decree-holder was made for the committal of Lakshmi Narain to prison. The allegation was that he had not produced his books in the insolvency proceedings. It was ordered that in these circumstances no further steps in execution in the way asked could be taken and against this order, the decree-holder appealed.

Rankin, C. J.—In my opinion there is no sufficient reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge. I would point out that in the circumstances such as the present one the law of India is extremely illogical and the position of the Court would appear to be very embarrassing. Here is a man who so long ago as 26th January of last year was adjudicated an insolvent and so far as we know all his properties would vest either in the Official Assignee or in the receiver who would be appointed by the Court. It is said that he has not disclosed his books and he has been refused the protection order. Nevertheless the object of sending a man to jail for non-payment of debts if he is under an obligation to hand over all his assets to the Court of insolvency does not appear to me very convincing; still less does it appear to be consistent with the principle that this should be done by one creditor while the assets are supposed to have been impounded on behalf of all creditors. There can be no doubt that the position in the circumstances of this case is very difficult but speaking for myself I am not at all satisfied that the learned Judge in leaving these various complaints to be dealt with in the insolvency jurisdiction did not take a wise course. In the circumstances I would refuse to interfere in this appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mitter, J.—I agree.

Appeal No. 1061 of 1926, Decided on 17th July 1928, from appellate decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, Sylhet, D/- 3rd November 1925.

Redistribution of territories does not by itself make an Act inapplicable in a place in which it was already in force. [P 146 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Will—Construction—Son created malik with power to gift or sell—Will providing further that if son died issue-less in testator's widow's lifetime, testator's nephews to get property—Son dying issueless in widow's lifetime—Son's interest if absolute, gift over was void as it was opposed to rule of succession under Hindu Law—Son's interest if not absolute even then gift over is void since contingency contemplated did not happen in his lifetime—Succession Act (1925), S. 124.

A testator by his will constituted his adopted son as malik of his property and provided that he would be entitled to the same in absolute right with powers of gift and sale. The will then stated that in case the son would die without leaving any other heirs in the lifetime of the testator's widow, the property would go to certain of the testator's nephews—The son died without leaving issue or without having disposed of the property by gift or sale in the lifetime of the testator's widow.

Held: that whether the interest created by the will in favour of the adopted son be taken to be absolute or not, in either case the gift over in favour of the nephews was void and inoperative. If it were intended by the testator that in case the adopted son, who would take an absolute interest, failed to dispose of the property and died issueless within the lifetime of the widow, the property should go to the nephews, the provision as to gift over is void as formulating a law of succession unknown to Hindu Law. If, however, the interest in favour of the son was not intended to be absolute, even then the gift over was inoperative for the will clearly showed that the intention of the testator was that the distribution of the funds bequeathed was to take place on his death. For the bequest to the nephews to take effect, the contemplated contingency of the son's dying issueless should have taken place before the testator's death: *Edwards v. Judgment.—Kali Kishore Roy, Mathur Chandra Roy and Mukunda Chandra Roy were three brothers, each of them having a  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in their joint family properties. Kali Kishore died leaving five sons, namely the defendants 1 to 4 and one Rama Kanta Roy now deceased. Mathur Chandra then died leaving a son the defendant 5. Mukunda thereafter died leaving a widow, the plaintiff Annapurna and a female child then in arms.

Mukunda left a will. The preamble to the will recited that Kali Kishore in his lifetime had given permission to him to adopt as his son Kali Kishore's son Rama Kanta and he gave permission to his wife Annapurna to adopt after his death the said Rama Kanta as his son. The will then provided:

"Both of them (meaning Annapurna and Rama Kanta), do enjoy as my heirs and successors according to the terms and conditions of the achalpatra (meaning the will) as executed by me and as laid down in the paragraphs following, none of them shall be entitled to violate the same."

In para. 1 of the will it was provided that taking his  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share as 16 annas Rama Kanta, on his death, would as "malik" get 12 annas, thereof and the other four sons of Kali Kishore would get the remaining 4 annas.

It is stated:

"On my death the said Sreemans (all the five sons of Kali Kishore had been described as Sreemans before) shall give and take their respective shares being entitled to the same in absolute right with powers of gift and sale according to the shares mentioned above."

In para. 2 it was enjoined that the adopted son Rama Kanta would have to maintain Annapurna out of his own share. Mathura Chandra evidently was alive at the date of the will and it was provided that the adopted son would perform the obsequies of the testator (para. 2) and give in marriage his daughter who was an infant (para. 3) according to the advice of Mathur Chandra.

Paragraph 4 expressed a hope that the testator himself would adopt the son, if possible, in his lifetime and it provided that so long as the said adopted son Rama Kanta or the other sons of Kali Kishore did not attain majority, Mathur

Chandra will act as manager on their behalf with full powers and his acts would be binding on the minors on their attaining majority.

Paragraph 5 ran thus:

"God forbid, if the said adopted son die during the lifetime of my wife without leaving any other heirs, then 11 annas out of the 12 annas moveable and immovable properties of my adopted son left by me as mentioned in the achalpatra shall go to my nephews (meaning the three sons of Kali Kishore and one of Mathur Chandra) in equal shares, and my wife the said Annapurna Dasi shall be entitled to a life-estate in respect of one anna share out of the 16 annas of the moveable and immovable properties left by me."

Paragraph 6 provided that if there was difference or disagreement between the widow and the adopted son the widow shall have

"power to enjoy, appropriate to herself, give away or sell one anna out of the 12 annas of the adopted son in lieu of her maintenance."

It has been found by both the Courts below that the adoption of Rama Kanta was made during the lifetime of Kali Kishore and Mukund by the formal giving and taking of the boy. Rama Kanta died in 1313 without any issue.

Certain properties having been sold for arrears of revenue there arose a dispute as regards the surplus sale-proceeds that were in desposit in the Collectorate. The plaintiff claimed that Rama Kanta had 12 annas out of the  $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Mukunda in joint properties, that is to say, an  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the said properties, and that Rama Kanta had also an  $\frac{1}{5}$ th share in the properties as a natural son of Kali Kishore, and that she as Rama Kanta's adoptive mother was entitled to both the said shares and she asked for certain reliefs on that footing. The Munsiff gave her a decree on the footing of her having a 4 annas share, as having inherited the same from Rama Kanta. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, has affirmed that decision. The defendants have then appealed to this Court.

The controversy in the appeal centres round the question whether as contemplated in and provided for by para. 5 of the will Rama Kanta having died without any issue, the defendants are entitled to an 11 annas share out of Rama Kanta's 12 annas share. There was a minor contention urged on behalf of the appellants to the effect that the will relates to a place in the District of Sylhet which, though it was included in the Bengal Presidency in 1870 when the Hindu

Wills Act was passed, was transferred to the province of Assam before 1883 when the will was executed, and that therefore the Act will not apply to the will. This argument has no substance as the redistribution of the territories would not, by itself, make the Act inapplicable to a place in which it was already in force, vide S. 58, Government of India Act 24 and 25 Vic C. 67, S. 47.

An elaborate and learned argument has been presented before us based on S. 111 (now S. 124), Succession Act. Before dealing with it it is necessary to construe the will in order to see what was the interest that was bequeathed to Rama Kanta. The will constituted the adopted son malik of a 12 annas share on the death of the testator, entitled thereto in absolute right with powers of gift and sale (para. 1). The said 12 annas share was described as the share of Rama Kanta out of which on the happening of a contingency (namely his death without issue during Annapurna's lifetime) 11 annas would go to the defendants in equal shares and the remaining 1 anna to Annapurna as a life-estate (para. 5); or in the happening of another contingency during the lifetime of Rama Kanta (namely a difference or disagreement between Annapurna and (Rama Kanta) Annapurna would get an one anna share in lieu of her maintenance (para. 6). Leaving aside the one anna share which was to be dealt with in the event of a difference or disagreement between Rama Kanta and Annapurna under para. 6, or which would go to Annapurna as a life-estate in the event of Rama Kanta's death without issue during the lifetime of Annapurna under para. 5, the position seems to be that there is an apparent repugnancy, because para. 1 gives an absolute estate to Rama Kanta while para. 5 purports to dispose of it again. The rule of construction in such a case has been stated thus in Jarman on Wills, 6th edition, Vol. 1 pp. 565-566.

Mr. Jarman states the general rule thus:

"Doubt is sometimes cast upon the intention of the testator by the repugnancy or contradiction between the several parts of his will, though each part taken separately, is sufficiently definite and intelligible. In such cases the context (which is so often successfully resorted to for the purpose of throwing light on a doubtful passage) becomes itself the source of obscurity; and unless some principle of construction can be found authorising the adoption of one, and the rejection of the other of the contrariant parts, both are necessarily void, each having the effect of neutralising and frustrating the other. With a view to prevent this most undesirable result, it has become an established rule in the construction of wills that where two clauses of gift are irreconcilable so that they cannot possibly stand together, the clause or gift which is posterior in local position shall prevail, the subsequent words being considered to denote a subsequent intention. Hence it is obvious that a will can seldom be absolutely void by mere repugnancy . . . . It must be borne in mind, however, that the rule only applies where the latter gift shows with reasonable certainty that the testator did not mean the prior gift to take effect according to its terms. The simplest example of the general rule is where a gift to A apparently absolute, is cut down to a life-estate by a subsequent direction that on A's death the property is to go to B. There are numerous authorities to this effect. But the subsequent direction must be unambiguous. And where there is an absolute gift of property to A, with a gift to B, in the event of A dying without having disposed of it, or a gift to B of what remains at A's death the question of the effect of the words is often a difficult one, and the authorities, as might be expected, are not wholly consistent."

The question, therefore, is a pure question of construction, and treating it as such one has to read the whole will together and say whether the testator intended that Rama Kanta would not, merely because he might die issueless and within the lifetime of Annapurna, be competent to deal with the 11 annas share though he was constituted malik in respect of it with power of gift and sale from the time of testator's death. It is difficult to gather such an intention from the words of the will, or in other words, it cannot be said that the directions are at all unambiguous as showing that the absolute interest created in Rama Kanta by the first paragraph of the will was in any way cut down by the gift over provided for in paragraph 5. If this view is correct, then even if the testator meant that in the event of Rama Kanta, who would take an absolute interest, failing to dispose of it or part of it and dying issueless and within the lifetime of Annapurna, the 12 annas should be divided between Annapurna and the nephews the provision as to gift over is void as formulating a law of succession unknown to Hindu Law.

If, however, no absolute interest was created in Rama Kanta, the question would arise whether in view of S. 124, Succession Act, the gift over in favour of the defendants is void. The appellants have argued that it is a contingent bequest which should take effect and that S. 124 will not affect it, while the respondent argues to the contrary. The section embodies what is known as Rule 4 in Edwards v. Edwards (1), and was enunciated by Sir John Romilly in these words :

"Where there is an absolute gift to vest in possession at a future time, and a gift over in case the legatee should die without issue living at his decease, this prima facie is to be taken to mean if he should die without issue before he is entitled to call for delivery as it would be very inconvenient that after delivery the subject of gift should be liable to go over."

This rule has been authoritatively modified by the House of Lords in the two cases of O'Mahoney v. Burdett (2) and Ingram v. Souttan (3). In the former case Lord Hatherley said :

"When the Court has found upon the face of the will a positive direction to pay over the personalty to the legatee, or to make a distribution among several legatees at a given time, the period of distribution being fixed at which, as, it appears from the face of the will the whole estate was intended to be entirely disposed of and divided, and to pass from the hands of the executors the Courts have laid hold of that circumstance to say 'we hold this defeasance to be before that period of distribution arrives,' holding it to be an unreasonable construction of the testator's will to say that he directed on the one hand that the money shall be absolutely paid and divided and distributed, and put into the hands of those, who having it in their hands, will of course share it without further trust, and on the other hand that a subsequent event namely a certain person's dying childless after that distribution has taken place, should divest the properties, that is to say, make it necessary for the executor to take steps to get back again, and recall that money which he had paid in order to hand it over to those who took under the executing devise . . . the period to which the executing devise will be referred will be the period of the death of the first taker unless there are other circumstances and directions in the will which are inconsistent with that disposition."

Whatever consequences might follow from the application of the rule in Edwards v. Edwards (1), as modified by the House of Lords cases referred to above in cases to which the Hindu Wills Act and consequently the Indian Succession Act do not apply, in cases to which S. 124, Succession Act does apply, that section will have to be given its full effect. The Judicial Committee in the case of

Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (4) have said :

"Section 111 embodies the rule enunciated in Edwards v. Edwards (1). The rule of construction laid down in that case has been considerably modified by later English decisions. The Indian Act has given it statutory force. Even in India as regards Hindus its application is confined to special tracts. . . . Their Lordships think that it should be applied only to cases coming strictly within its scope."

The question in these cases is to ascertain when the fund bequeathed is payable or distributable. That being ascertained, in a case where a legacy is given if a specified uncertain event shall happen and no time is mentioned in the will for the occurrence of that event the legacy cannot take effect. Here the uncertain event for the happening of which no time is mentioned is the death of Rama Kanta during the lifetime of Annapurna and if the bequest is to take effect it should happen before the period of distribution. Reading the will it seems to be perfectly clear that the intention of the testator was that the distribution was to take place on his death. For the bequest to the defendants to take effect the contemplated contingency should have taken place before the testator's death.

It, however, remains to consider a few decisions to which our attention has been drawn on behalf of the appellants and all of which in our opinion are very different from the present case. In Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (4), the wife was appointed sole executrix under the will, she was given authority to adopt five sons in succession and it was provided :

"If my said wife dies without adopting a son, or if such adopted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue in such case my estate after the death of my wife shall pass to the sons of my sister Binodini Dasi who may be living at the time of my death."

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that on the death of the testator, the widow, who had obtained possession as executrix was not divested by the adoption of the son, and the period of distribution having been distinctly fixed by the will at the death of the widow and the adopted son having died before the widow's death which was the contingency contemplated, the gift in favour of the nephews was not affected by S. 111 and took effect. In the case of Durga Pershad v. Raghunandan Lal (5) the testator had made his minor son the malik of the properties after his death and directed that he should succeed to and enter upon possession and also gave directions as to how the management was to be conducted during such minority, the mother of the minor and on her death some other person to act as his guardian, and finally directed :

"If after my death the said minor son dies the mother of the said son shall in his stead become the malik in possession and occupation when like myself the said Musammatt shall acquire all the proprietary powers and all kinds of properties moveable and immovable, and after the death of the widow the property was to go to the testator's two daughters in equal shares."

The mother died before the minor son and the question arose as to whether the gift over was valid. It was held relying upon S. 116, Succession Act, that the gift over should take effect on the failure of the prior bequest in favour of the widow although the failure may not have occurred in the manner contemplated by the testator, that is to say, though the widow died not after but before the adopted son. There is a reference to S. 111 in the judgment in that case but it is by no means clear what it exactly means. In any case the minor was not to acquire full proprietary rights until at least he attained majority and the period of distribution contemplated by the will was, at the earliest the point of time when the minor would be a major.

It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that in the present case also the testator had given directions in para. 4 of the will for the management of the properties during the minority of Rama Kanta and of the defendants but such directions appear to have been given not in derogation of the absolute right that was conferred by para. 1 and was to take effect immediately on the testator's death. The decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Chunilal Parvati Shankar v. Bai Samrath (6) need not be discussed as it was not a decision with reference to S. 111, Succession Act, but in spite of it, the said Act not applying to the will in question in the case. So is the decision in Bai

Dhanlaxmi v. Hariprasad Uttamram (7) though one proposition that emerges from it may be usefully referred to, namely that a Hindu may create a life-estate or successive life-estates, but a series of absolute estate defeasible in succession on the happening of an uncertain event cannot be considered as a succession of life-estates; it can only be considered as an attempt to create an estate of inheritance which is not recognized by Hindu Law. From whatever point of view may the will be looked at, the gift over, in our opinion, cannot be regarded as operative and the appellant's arguments cannot possibly succeed. The appeal accordingly is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The following genealogy will serve to explain the relationship amongst the parties to this litigation: (Please see p. 150 for genealogy.)

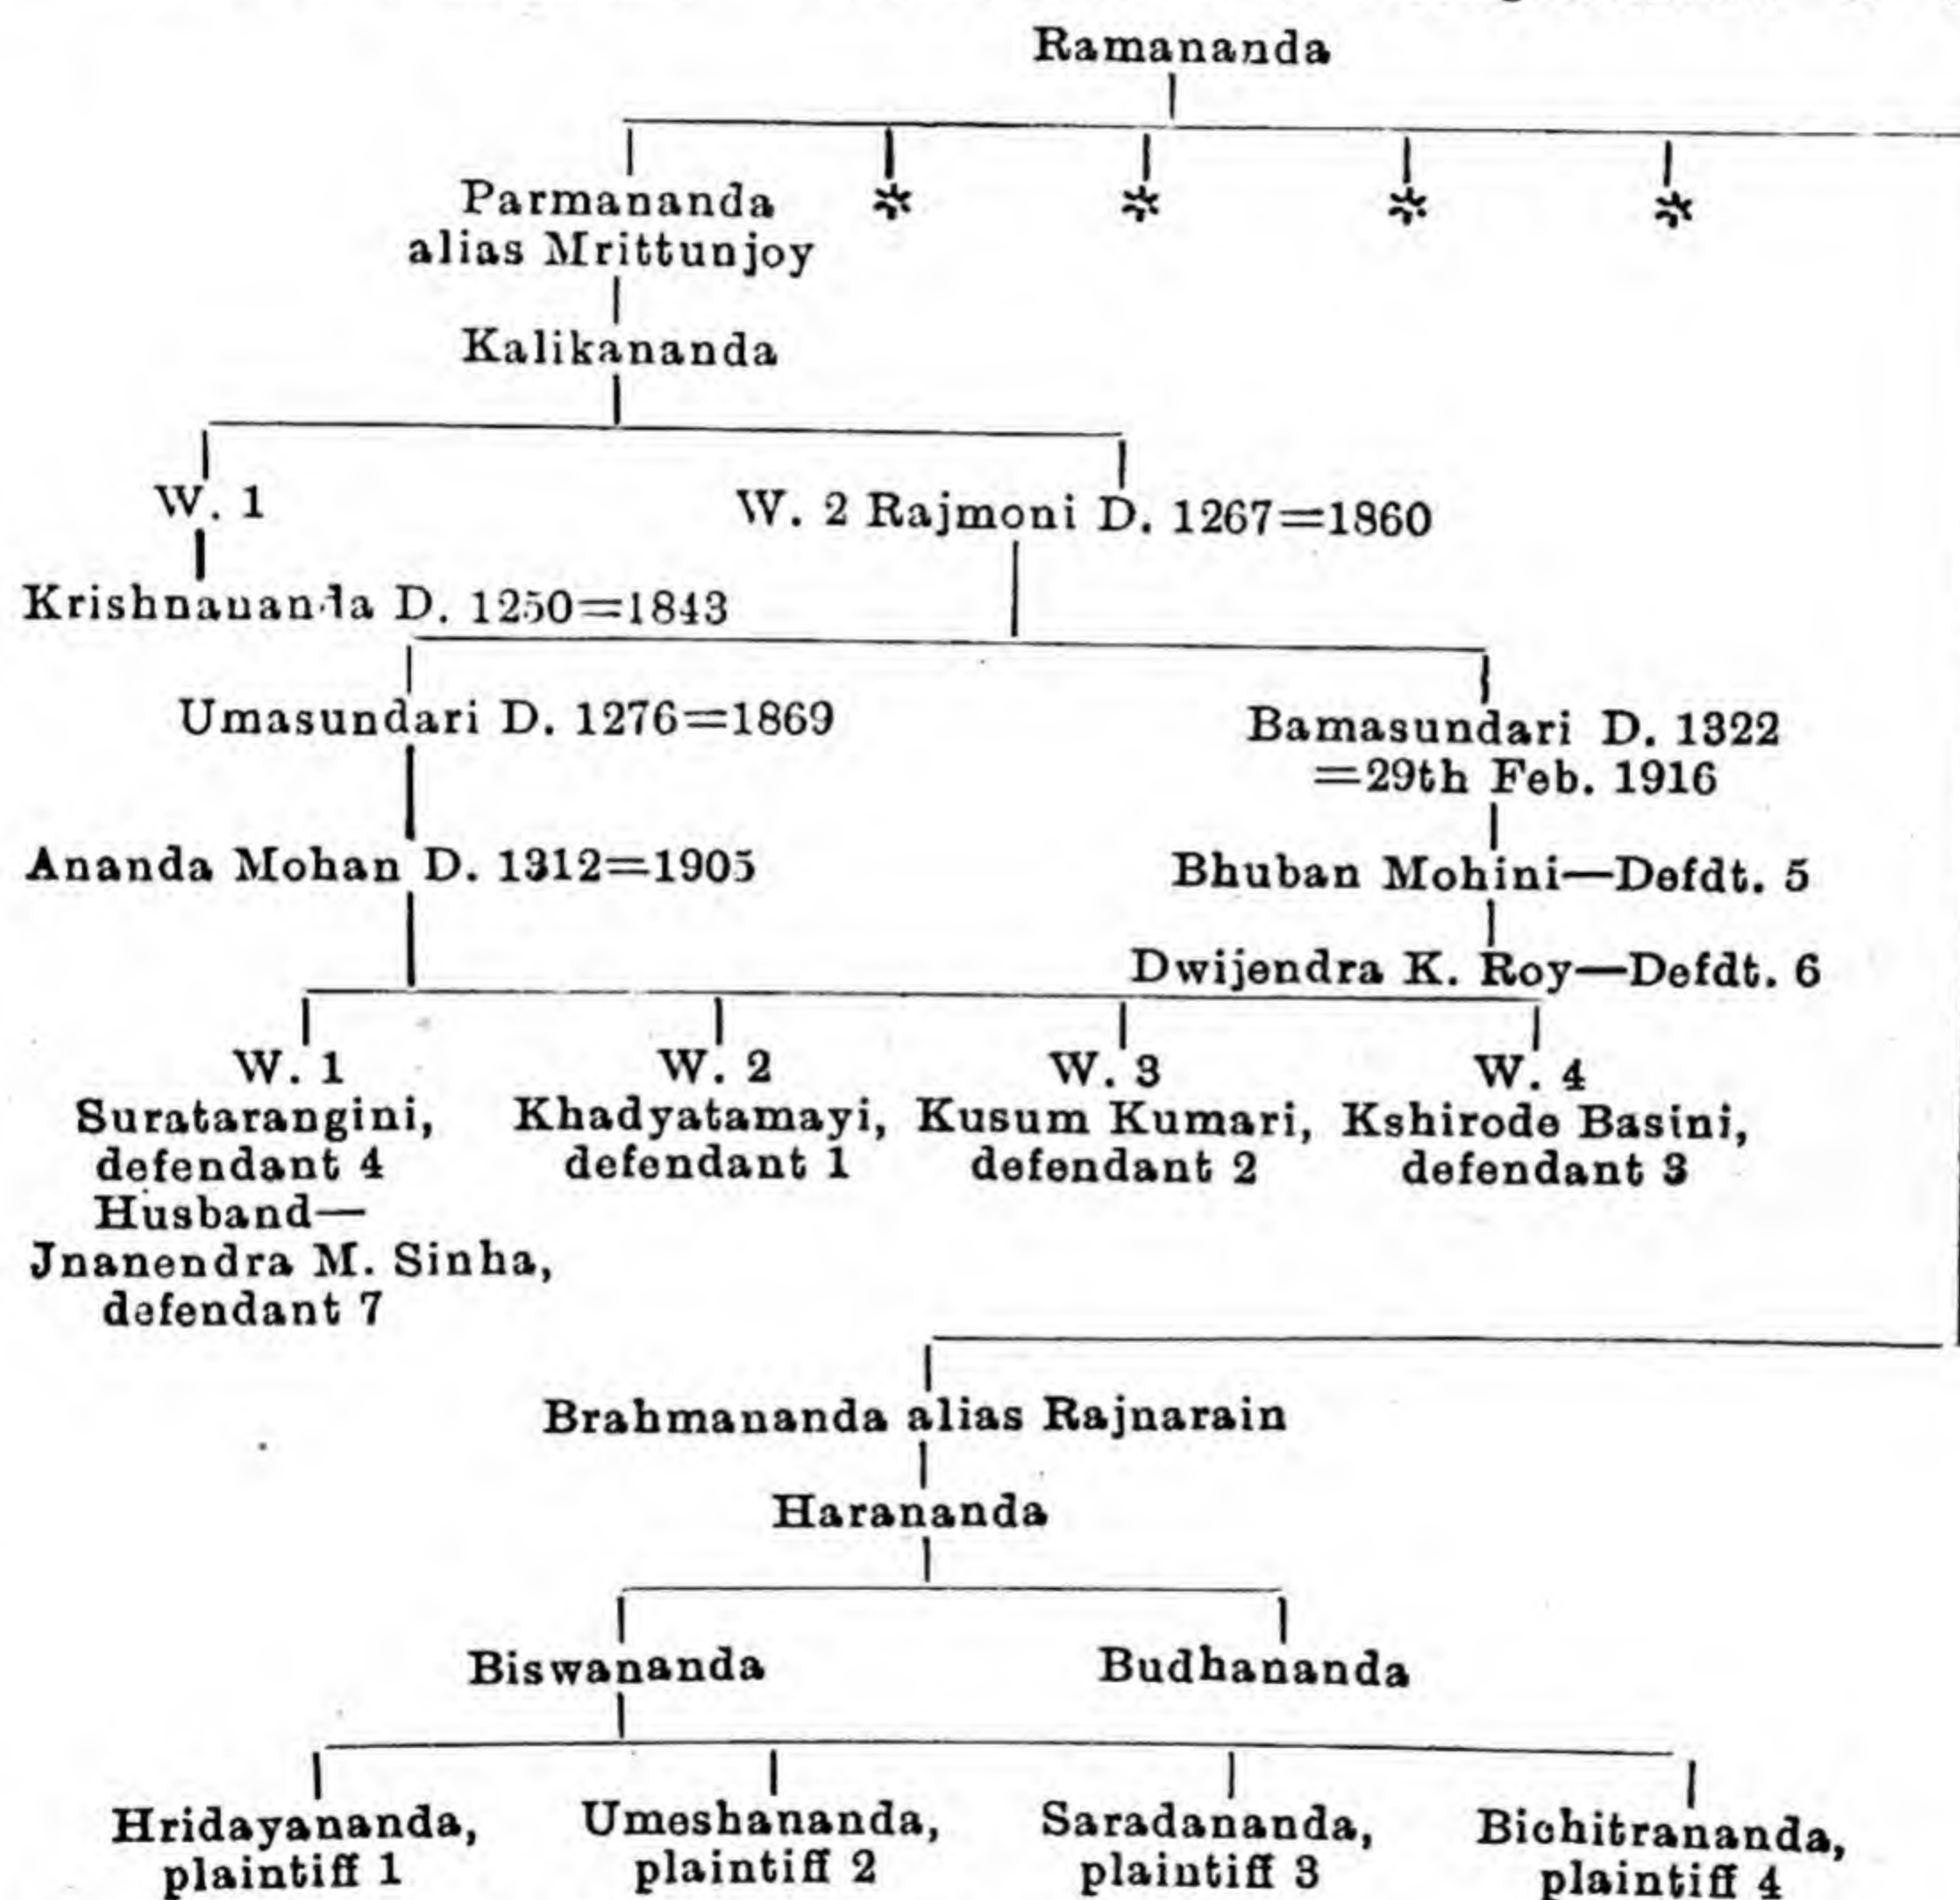

One Ramananda Bhattacharjya was the original owner of an 8-annas share in certain properties which is the share involved in the present suit. He left six sons of whom two were Paramananda alias Mrittunjoy and Brahmananda alias Rajnarain. Paramananda left a son Kalikananda. Kalikananda had two wives by the first of whom he had a son Krishnananda, who died in 1250 B.S. (=1843). By his second wife Rajmoni, Kalikananda had two daughters, Uma Sundari and Bama Sundari. Rajmoni died in 1267 B.S. (=1860). Uma Sundari died in 1276 B.C. (=1869) leaving a son Ananda Mohan who died in 1312 B.S. (=1905). Deendants 1 to 3 are three of the widows of Ananda Mohan. Defendant 4 is a daughter of Ananda Mohan by another widow who is dead, and the husband of defendant 4 is defendant 7. Bama Sundari died in 1322 B. S. (1916) leaving a daughter who is defendant 5, and the daughter of the latter is defendant 6. Brahmananda's son was Harananda who left two sons, Biswananda and Bodhananda. The plaintiffs who are four in number are the sons of Biswananda.

The following facts have been found, and are not now disputed: The 8-annas

This suit ended in a compromise, and a decree based thereon, by which Uma Sundari and Bama Sundari relinquished their right to a 10 gandas share in favour of Bodhananda and Biswananda, the latter of whom, however, was not a plaintiff to the suit though he was a party defendant therein, and they retained the remaining 3-annas 10 gandas share of which they were in possession. In 1865 Uma Sundari's son Ananda Mohan instituted a suit against Biswananda and Bodhananda to set aside the aforesaid compromise and the relinquishment of the 10 gandas share of Ramananda descended in halves to Krishnananda on the one hand and Harananda on the other, and on Harananda's death his 4-annas share was inherited by his sons Biswananda and Bodhananda. Since Krishnananda's death in 1843 his 4-annas share in the properties remained in the possession of Rajmoni till her death in 1860. In 1862, after Rajmoni's death, Bodhananda instituted a suit against Rajmoni's daughters Uma Sundari and Bama Sundari for recovery of possession of the said 4-annas share.

share. There was a compromise out of Court in that suit by which the relinquishment of the 10 gandas share was confirmed.

In 1918, that is to say about 18 months after the death of Bama Sundari, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit alleging that Rajmoni having been in adverse possession in respect of the said 4-annas share from 1250 B. S. (=1843), i. e., the death of her stepson Krishnananda down to her death in 1267 B. S. (=1860)—adversely to their grand-father Harananda, and after Harananda's death to their father and uncle Biswananda and Bodhananda — had acquired an absolute interest therein as her ajautuka stridhan and the plaintiffs as the nearest reversioners on the death of Rajmoni's daughters Uma Sundari and Bama Sundari are entitled to the 3 annas 10 gandas which they were in possession. They prayed for declaration of title and recovery of possession of that share.

The defendant's case, on the merits, was that the 4 annas-share which Rajmoni possessed in her life time did not belong to her stepson Krishnananda alone, but also to Ratanmani and Gangamani the widows of two of the other sons of Ramananda, and that she possessed the said share with the permission of Harananda and, after Harananda's death, of Biswananda and Bodhananda and further that her possession did not extend for the statutory period necessary to confer title on her.

Two of the properties in suit namely Nos. 14 and 15 were given up in the course of the suit for reasons which do not concern us. The Munsif decreed the suit in respect of the remaining properties declaring the plaintiff's title to 3 annas therein and giving them possession thereof. The Subordinate Judge has on an appeal by the defendants reduced that decree by a moiety. From the decision of the Subordinate Judge two appeals have been preferred. S. A. No. 404 of 1926 has been preferred by defendants 1, 2, 5 and 8. S. A. No. 496 of 1926 has been preferred by plaintiffs 1, 2, 3.

The findings of the lower appellate Court on the merits are: that Rajmoni was in adverse possession from 1250 B.S. (=1843) to 1267 B. S. (=1860), that is to say for nearly 17 years; that the plea that she was in possession on behalf of Ratanmani and Gangamani and that such possession was with the permission of Harananda, and after him, of Biswananda and Bodhananda, was not true; that there is nothing to indicate that she was in possession of a limited interest and not of a full and absolute interest; that the adverse possession began when Harananda was alive but was suspended by reason of Harananda's death and his sons Biswananda and Bodhananda being minors, that it recommenced when they attained majority, and that on calculation such adverse possession was for a period of 12 years or more as regards the share of Biswananda but not as regards the share of Bodhananda. On these findings the learned Additional District Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree in respect of a half of 3 annas 10 gandas share.

The defendants who are the appellants in S. A. No. 404 of 1926 contend: first that the compromise in the suit of 1862 represents a bona fide family arrangement and the plaintiffs are not competent to go behind it; second, that under the law of limitation as contained in the regulations then in force the possession of Rajmoni cannot be regarded as adverse which could ever ripen into title; third, that the findings of the Subordinate Judge as regards the period over which Rajmoni's possession extended as against Biswananda are mere surmises and are not based on any real materials; and fourth, that in any case Rajmoni's possession was only that in respect of a limited interest and consequently she never acquired any share as ajautuka stridhan to which the plaintiffs can possibly succeed.

The plaintiffs who are the appellants in S. A. No. 496 of 1926, contend that Rajmoni acquired a title by adverse possession both against Biswananda and Bodhananda as at the date of Rajmoni's death a suit instituted by them would be governed by Act 14 of 1859 and under S.11 of that Act time which had begun to run against Harananda would not cease to run by reason of his death but would continue to run against Biswananda and Bodhananda even during their minority. It will be convenient to deal with the contentions of the appellants in S. A. No. 404 of 1926 in their order and to deal with the contention of the appellants in S. A. No. 496 of 1926 along with the second of the contentions in the former appeal.

As regards the first of these contentions, it cannot be disputed that a partition or a settlement of a disputed or doubtful claim is a valid and binding arrangement between the parties thereto and the parties themselves or those that claim under or through them are not permitted to deny, ignore or resile therefrom. On equitable principles such partition or settlement is also binding on persons, who, though they may not have been either parties thereto or have derived their interest from such parties, have acted upon it or have derived some benefit from it. The principles governing such cases have been explained in a long series of decisions of the Judicial Committee: Rajender Narain v. Bijoy Gobind (1); Hetnarain v. Modenarain (2); Gajapathi Radhika v. Gajapathi Nilamani (3); Mantappa v. Baswantrao (4); Greender Chunder v. Troylukho Nath (5); Muhammad Imam Ali v. Hossein Khan (6); Khuni Lal v. Gobinda Krishna (7). There are numerous cases in which Courts in this country have or have not applied these principles and no useful purpose would be served by discussing them here as the facts of none of those cases are identical with the facts that we have to deal with.

On examining the principles it appears that the circumstance that Uma Sundari and Bama Sundari were limited owners at the time would not make the settlement any the less binding if the other requisites of validity of the settlement are present. One of the requisites to call this equitable doctrine into play is that the parties should have been parties to the settlement or should claim under or through such parties or should have acted on it or derived some benefit under it; but here the plaintiffs cannot be treated as coming under any of these categories at all as they are not claiming under their father or uncle but as reversionary heirs to Rajmoni and the 10 gandas share that they are in possession of, they say are entitled to, as such reversionary heirs. Then, as pointed out by Turner, L. J. in Lucy's case (8) the parties should bona fide consider that there is a question to be decided between them, for no compromise would be good if it ultimately turned out that there was no doubt upon the point which was made the subject of the compromise. This involves that there should have been a full disclosure of the facts; but in the present case it does not appear that the question whether Rajmoni had or had not acquired the share as her ajautuka stridhan by adverse possession was at all raised, and if it is now found that she did, that would, in our opinion, affect the bona fide of the settlement. Moreover even if this question was raised, the settlement would be regarded as ultra vires of the parties because Biswananda and Bodhananda would not have any subsisting rights at the time and would offend against the dictum of Lord Westbury in Dixon v. Evans (9), that it should be an honest settlement of an existing dispute which must not be manifestly ultra vires of the parties to settle. For these reasons we are of opinion that the first contention of the appellant cannot be allowed to prevail.

In support of the second contention that adverse possession could not confer any title on Rajmoni reference has been made to Reg. 3 of 1793, S. 14 and Reg. 2 of 1805, S. 3, Cls. 1, 2 and 4, and it has been contended that the limitation of 12 years fixed by the former provisions was declared by the latter as not being applicable to private claims of right to immovable property if the person in possession shall have acquired possession by violence or fraud or by any other unjust or dishonest means whatever. It has been argued that upon the findings of the Subordinate Judge Rajmoni's possession was of this character and that therefore a suit by Biswananda or Bodhananda for recovery of possession would not be barred by the 12 years' rule. It has also been contended that under the Regulations so long as they were in force it was the remedy that would be barred by lapse of time; and that as the Limitation Act 14 of 1859 did not come into force till the 1st January 1862, by the combined operation of S. 18 of that Act and S. 1 of Act 11 of 1861, on the death of Rajmoni in 1860, the remedy of Biswananda and Bodhananda would not have been barred. Against all this the plaintiffs have contended (and that is also their substantive contention as appellants in S. A. No. 496 of 1926) that at the time of Rajmoni's death in 1860, it was Act 14 of 1859, that was in force, and as time had already begun to run against Harananda, it should, under S. 11 of the Act, be regarded as having continued to run notwithstanding Harananda's death.

Now Reg. 2 of 1805 makes a distinction between bona fide and mala fide possession—a distinction borrowed from the Roman law and the prevailing law of Continental Europe as well as to some extent of America and possibly also from the Hindu law. In dealing with this matter it is necessary to bear in mind the difference between possession founded on title, and possession founded on a claim of title. Possession to be adverse must be founded on a claim of title because possession without a claim of title would in law be treated as the possession of the true owner and not as adverse to him. What is meant by the terms used namely :

“possession acquired by violence, fraud or by any other unjust or dishonest means or that the property claimed had been so acquired by any other person from whom the actual occupant derived his title and was not subsequently held for 12 years under a fair title believed to convey a right to possession and property” is sufficiently explained by the preamble to that Regulation. Under the Regulation so far as the original acquisition of the possession is concerned it is necessary in order to take it out of the 12 year's rule that the acquisition should have been “by violence, fraud or any other unjust or dishonest means whatever.” The intention of the legislature was to look to the means by which the acquisition took place and not the merits of the acquisition itself. Rajmoni may not have had a title,—indeed no trespasser will have any,—but if she acquired possession by adopting any of the methods contemplated by the expression aforesaid, the case will be excepted from the rule. The findings of the Subordinate Judge go nowhere near such a position. In our opinion, the 12 year rule would apply and it will of course be open to show that any body who was entitled to sue had been precluded from obtaining redress either from minority or other good and sufficient cause: S. 14, Reg. 3 of 1793. As regards the applicability of Act 14 of 1859 we are not inclined to accept the plaintiff's contention that its provisions could have any bearing upon the present case. The question is what were the rights of Biswananda and Bodhananda at the time when Rajmoni died in 1860. Now in 1860, the position was that if a suit instituted within 2 years from 5th May 1859, it would have to be tried and determined as if the Act had not been passed : vide S. 18 of Act 14 of 1859 and consequently it would have to be tried and determined upon the Regulations. Before the two years elapsed and on 1st May 1861, was passed Act 11 of 1861 which suspended the operation of Act 14 of 1859 till 1st January 1862. Consequently Biswananda or Bodhananda's remedy, as at Rajmoni's death in 1860, was not affected by Act 14 of 1859. In support of the contention that it is Act 14 of 1859 that should govern the question, we have been referred to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Falima-zulnissa Begum v. Sundar Das (10) and the passage in the decision which runs in these words :

“According to the terms of this law (meaning Act 14 of 1859) suits by the mortgagors of 1788 were barred on 17th October 1848 unless in the meantime the required acknowledgment was given. The right to sue was kept alive till 1862 ; but as they did not sue, the Act remains unqualified by that proviso.”

The question that arose in that case was, in our opinion, entirely different from the question before us. The suit in that case was by mortgagors to recover the mortgaged property. Their Lordships pointed out that the earliest law which placed a limit of time upon such suits was Act 14 of 1859 which remained in force till repealed by Act 9 of 1871. Act 14 of 1859, S. 1, Cl. 15, gave 60 years to the mortgagor to institute a suit for recovery of possession from the time of the mortgage unless there was acknowledgment, in which case it would be 60 years from such acknowledgment. Their Lordships pointed out that by S. 18 of the Act of 1859 coupled with Act 11 of 1861, suits instituted before January 1862 were to be determined as if the Act had not been passed. Act 9 of 1871 provided the same limits of time for suits of this kind and it added a provision (S. 29) which laid down that at the expiration of the period thereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any land, his right to such land shall be extinguished. In this connexion their Lordships made the observations quoted above and further observed that the period limited by the Act of 1871 was 17th October 1848, and the title of the mortgagors was extinguished on that day unless they could show a previous acknowledgment.

ment in writing. The reason why their Lordships said that the right to sue was kept alive till 1862 was because there was no law prior to Act 14 of 1859 which had barred that right. In the present case the whole question is, had Biswananda or Bodhananda or both of them the right to sue in 1860 at the time when Rajmoni died, and it is a different question altogether as the Regulations which were then in force had provided for a suit of that character and would govern that right. The question whether the Regulations merely barred the remedy or also extinguished the primary right itself is a vexed question but as regards possession and dispossession of immovable property in the absence of any statutory provision fixing a longer period of prescription, the law of limitation is practically a law of prescription. That Regn. 3 of 1793 read with Regn. 2 of 1805 has been always understood as meaning that adverse possession for the prescribed period not merely bars the remedy but gives title was said by Peel, C. J., in Shib Chunder v. Sib Kissen Bannerji (11), and the limitation Regulations and Act 14 of 1859 have been understood and interpreted in that way in a large number of authoritative decisions, (e. g. Golam Rusool v. Mt. Mughlo (12) Gunga Gobind Mundal v. The Collector of 24 Parganas (13); Raja Barada Kant Roy v. Pran Krishna (14), Ram Lochan Chakravarti v. Ram Soonder Chakravarti (15), Gossain Dass Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (16). The contention of either of the parties noted above, in our opinion, cannot be allowed to prevail. The view taken by the Courts below in our opinion, is right.

The third contention which is to the effect that the findings of the Additional District Judge as regards the period over which Rajmoni's adverse possession extended as against Biswananda are mere surmises and are not based on any real materials. The Additional District Judge was right in finding that Harananda died about the year 1254. Taking the date as fairly against both the parties as possible, Rajmoni should be taken to have completed only four years of adverse possession by the time that Harananda died. The question, therefore, is whether Biswananda or Bodhananda or both were majors for at least a period of eight years at the time when Rajmoni died in 1267 B. S. (1860). As regards Bodhananda having remained a minor till long after Rajmoni's death the finding is clear and the evidence sufficient. But as regards the year in which Biswananda attained majority, the Additional District Judge has put it down as 1256 B. S. or soon after. This finding, in our opinion is not based on any accurate process of reasoning but is more or less a piece of unwarranted surmise. The only materials to which he has referred as safe guides are, on the one hand an am-mukhtearnama (Ex. 12) dated 13th Jaista 1256 B. S. which describes Biswananda as a minor and certain documents (Exs. 18, 20 and 21) dated 1255 B. S. which also show him as a minor, and on the other hand a chitta (Ex 13) of 1262 B. S. which is said to show Biswananda as a major and a registered kabuliati dated 29th Chaitra 1263 B. S. which also shows him as such. From these data he has come to the conclusion that Biswananda attained majority "soon after the year 1256." We are unable to follow how that conclusion is arrived at. It is true that the defendants in their written statement did not specifically put the plaintiffs to the proof of the approximate date of Biswananda's attaining majority, and the plaintiffs may justly complain that they were misled by the nature of the defence that was set up as regards the character of Rajmoni's possession; but after all it is the plaintiffs who have undertaken in this suit to prove that Rajmoni's adverse possession extended against proper persons and for the statutory period. It is clear that the parties should be allowed to give further evidence on this matter should they desire to do so, but the finding of the Additional District Judge so far as this matter is concerned cannot possibly be allowed to stand.

The last contention is to the effect that in any view Rajmoni's adverse possession should be taken to be that in respect of a limited interest. The Additional District Judge has gone very fully into this matter and so also the trial Court and they have unhesitatingly come to the definite conclusion upon proper and sufficient materials that her possession was in its character that of a malik and absolute owner. This contention therefore should be overruled.

The result is that S. A. No. 496 of 1926 should be dismissed, and S. A. No. 404 of 1926 should be allowed and the case sent down to the lower appellate Court with directions to rehear the appeal after allowing the parties to bring such further materials on the record as they may desire to do, on the only question that now remains to be retried, namely as regards the date when Biswananda attained majority. If the Court comes to the conclusion that Rajmoni lived for at least eight years after that date, the decree of the lower appellate Court will stand, and that decree will be affirmed with costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court and if it holds otherwise, the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

* Limitation Act, S. 19—Acknowledgment signed by one director only in the ordinary conduct of the business is sufficient.

Judgment.—This is a case in which a company was registered under the Indian Companies Act and it appears that the plaintiff supplied certain goods to the company. Certain sums became due from the company and the company found it inconvenient to pay in full. Accordingly what happened was that the plaintiff got the bill made out showing how the accounts stood. Certain payments had been made and certain sums were due on a given date, namely 23rd

August 1924. There was a debt which was at one time Rs. 372 which had been reduced to Rs. 35-12-0 and there was another, namely, a sum of Rs. 48 of which nothing was paid at all. The document sets out this sum of Rs. 83-12-0 described in this way: "The above amount Rs. 83-12-0 Eighty three and annas twelve stands as nett dues this day." Below this there is a one anna stamp upon which the date is put 25th August 1924. By the side of this stamp it is written "Correct." Then in a rubber stamp the words "The Coral Engineering Works Ltd." and "director" appear and between these two lines of the rubber stamp comes the signature of a gentleman Mr. S. C. Aich who is admittedly one of the three directors of the company. When the plaintiff brings his suit against the company and produces this document it is contended and successfully contended that this is not a sufficient acknowledgment within S. 19, Lim. Act, because Mr. S. C. Aich was only one of the three directors and had not got the authority of the other two directors to do anything in the matter. There was evidence on the part of the plaintiff that this Mr. S. C. Aich was the man who had made payments on behalf of the company and had given orders and had received money on behalf of the company and although the company's rubber stamp with room for the name of one director only had been employed, the defendants succeeded. The directors and the Judge seem to have got confused between the company's seal and an ordinary rubber stamp.

The present question has nothing to do with the seal of the company. Apart altogether from things which require a formal resolution of a Board of Directors most companies who conduct business have to employ one of their directors as manager to do the ordinary acts necessary in the conduct of the business. No one can conduct business by having everything signed by three directors. There is ample evidence that in the course of business carried on, this company could not manage to pay the money which was to have been paid and got time by acknowledging that the amount was due.

In my judgment the Rule must be made absolute and judgment must be entered for the full amount of the claim.

The word "land" as used in S. 105 may include a share of a cosharer landlord and may therefore include a share of a tenant in a holding. Suhrawardy, J.—These five appeals arise out of suits for recovery of rent. They have been decreed by the lower appellate Court at the admitted rate. The plaintiff claims that he is entitled to enhanced rent as fixed by the Settlement Officer under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act. It appears that the plaintiff had several cosharers in the mehal. There were batwara proceedings and certain lands were allotted to the plaintiff in his Saham. After the publication of the Record-of-Rights he applied for settlement of fair and equitable rent under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act on the grounds which are covered by S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act. These applications were fought by the defendants and partially allowed. The plaintiff in these suits now claims rent as fixed by the Settlement Officer. The defence with which we are now concerned is that the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to try the matter under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act and, therefore, his decree is a nullity and cannot have legal effect. This objection is based upon the ground that the settlement khatians show that they include several plots and with reference to one plot in some of them the defendants' interest in the holding as a raiyat is noted as fractional, the plots in occupation of the defendants together with the share in one plot did not constitute a holding within the meaning of S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act and accordingly the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to enhance the rent of the lands in the occupation of the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge has given effect to this contention and held that the word 'land' used in S. 105 does not mean and include a parcel or undivided share of a tenancy and hence the Settlement Officer had no jurisdiction to enhance the rent under S. 105 and his decision is ultra vires and inoperative.

The question raised is a serious one as it is directed to nullify the effect of the solemn act of a Court of justice. We have therefore carefully looked into the matter and the law as it at present stands and we are unable to say that the decree of the revenue officer was without jurisdiction and ultra vires. The meaning of the term 'land' came up for consideration in the case of Safaruddi v. A. K. Fazal Huq (1). The case was tried by D. Chatterjee, J. sitting singly and his decision was affirmed by a Bench consisting of Jenkins, C. J., and N. R. Chatterjee, J. The report of the case as it appears in the Calcutta Law Journal leads one to suppose that there was a division between the cosharers of the land and the tenants; had executed separate kabuliats in favour of the cosharers. If that were so, the decision would be in consonance with the decisions of case under S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act. But we have looked into the record of the case and find that as a matter of fact there was no division of the land but the tenants executed kabuliats in favour of different cosharers in respect of their share in the holding. The learned Judge there considered as to what meaning should be attached to the word 'land' in S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act and the observation made by him on this point may be quoted here with advantage :

"The next question that arises is whether the share of the land covered by each kabuliati can be said to be the land held by the tenant. It has been held in respect of holdings that a share of an undivided holding cannot be called a holding : see Hurry Churn v. Raja Runjit Singh (2). The word 'holding' does not occur in S. 105. The word occurring there is 'land held by the tenant.' The word 'land' has not been defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act. I do not see any reason why the share of the land held under particular landlord should not come within the purview of the word 'land' used in the section. In this view of the case I think that S. 188, Ben. Ten. Act is no bar to the maintenance of this application."

In that case the objection was that one of the landlords who wanted to enhance the rent under S. 52, Ben. Ten. Act could not apply for settlement of fair rent. In the Letters Patent appeal Jenkins, C. J. remarked:

"This case has been decided favourably to the plaintiffs by Digambar Chatterjee, J. on the footing that there were separate tenancies and we think that if there were separate tenancies then in the circumstances of this case there was a compliance with the provisions of S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act."

This case, so far as I know, has not been dissented from subsequently and it carries with it high authority of three learned Judges of this Court. The result of the decision is that though the land in occupation of the tenant may not be an entire holding, it may form the subject of proceedings under S. 105. The result may appear to be incongruous if not quite absurd because under the law as it stands at present an application under S. 30, Ben. Ten. Act, by a cosharer landlord is not competent ; but if he applies under S. 105 for enhancement of rent under S. 30 he gets the right to do so, even if his claim refers to a share of a holding. There are cases which lay down that where a tenant executes a separate kabuliati in favour of a cosharer landlord proceedings against him for enhancement of rent are maintainable: Panchanan v. Raj Kumar (3) and Go-binda v. Hamidulla (4). But it is not necessary to go so far as we have got direct authority on the point that the word 'land' as used in S. 105 may include a share of a cosharer landlord and may therefore include the share of a tenant in a holding.

the revenue officer being without jurisdiction and ultra vires may be looked at from a different point of view. Under S. 81, Estates Partition Act, the Deputy Collector has the right to split up a holding which accordingly forms a separate tenancy under a particular landlord. The mere fact that in one of the plots the tenant has been given a share does not take away the effect of S. 81, Partition Act. I must note here that in the proceedings before the Settlement Officer which were contested no objection was taken on this ground. It was virtually admitted that the plaintiff was competent to ask for enhancement under the law. It does not therefore lie in the mouth of the defendants to turn round now and say that the decision of the Settlement Officer was without jurisdiction in view of certain decisions of this Court which held that proceedings under S. 30 for enhancement of rent must relate to an entire tenancy. The law as understood by the Settlement Officer was laid down in the case reported in Safaruddi v. Fazal Huq (1). If there has been any subsequent divergence from that view and even if the latter view is correct, an error of law is not a ground for setting aside a previous decree as passed without jurisdiction or for a declaration that it must never operate as res judicata. In view of the observations made above I am of opinion that these appeals must succeed; the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suits decreed with costs both here and in the Courts below. In Appeals Nos. 1379 and 1380 of 1926 the respondents have not appeared. I accordingly make no order for costs in this Court in these cases but the plaintiff will be entitled to his costs in the Courts below.

Appeal No. 2206 of 1926, Decided on 24th August 1928, from appellate decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, Zilla Pabna, D/- 2nd July 1926.

Bengal Tenancy Act, Sch. (3), Art. (3)—Widow selling her widow's estate in occupancy holding to landlord — Suit by reversioner to recover possession will not be governed by Art. 3, Sch. 3.

A widow sold to the landlord the occupancy holding which she possessed as her widow's estate. Just six years after widow's death her reversioner brought a suit for possession of the holding.

Held: that although the landlord remained in possession after widow's death, it could not be said that there was any dispossession by the landlord so as to apply two years' rule of limitation contained in Art. 3, Sch. 3.

Radha Benode Pal and Jitendra Mohan Banerjee—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is by the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of certain lands as belonging to an occupancy holding. The land had belonged to two brothers, Kashinath and Shibnath, and the plaintiff is Shibnath's reversionary heir. It is found by the learned Courts below that Shibnath had predeceased his brother Kashinath and, therefore, the plaintiff was only entitled to recover a half share of the tenancy. The property in suit had been sold by Shibnath's widow, Tushta Bewa, to the defendants, who are some of the cosharer landlords. Tushta died in Chaitra 1324, and the suit was instituted just after six years after her death.

The question which is raised before us is the question of limitation. The defendants, who are the appellants before us, contend that the special rule of limitation contained in Art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act applies, and that the period of limitation for the suit is two years from Tushta's death. Art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, declares the period of limitation in suits by a raiyat or under-raiyat, where dispossession is by the landlord. The defendants are certainly landlords, but the question is whether there was any dispossession. The defendants contend that by their retention of possession after Tushta's death they dispossessed the plaintiff. This contention is not sound. In order that there should be dispossession, there should first have been possession. Had the plaintiff had possession at any time prior to the sale by Tushta or prior to the occupation of the land by the defendants, then the defendants might have dispossessed the plaintiff; but where, as in the present case, the plaintiff had never been in possession and he had never had the right to possess, the fact that the defendants had continued in possession after Tushta's death does not amount to dispossession during Tushta's life time; the defendants were entitled to possess the land, because it was open to Tushta to part with her widow's interest in the property. The defendants' right expired at the time of Tushta's death. But that in itself will not constitute their continuance of possession into an act of dispossession, for the purpose of the rule of limitation laid down in the article referred to above. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil P. C., S. 151 — Court cannot invoke S. 151 to restore dismissed suit.

C. C. Ghose, J.—In this case which was a suit for recovery of mesne-profits, an order was made by the learned Subordinate Judge on 9th July 1925 by which he directed that the suit should stand dismissed "for the present without adjudication." Thereafter, there was an application under O. 47, R. 1 and S. 151, Civil P. C. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., had no application but that the suit which had been dismissed on 9th July 1925 could be restored under the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. It is against that order that the present rule has been obtained. Now, if as a matter of fact the suit had not come to a termination by reason of the order of 9th July 1925, then no application was entertainable under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. But the application under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., was entertained and disposed of on its merits, the learned Subordinate Judge coming to the conclusion that, on the facts. O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., did not apply. He, however, made a mistake in invoking in aid the provision of S. 151, Civil P. C. It is quite clear that S. 151, Civil P. C., cannot be invoked for the purpose of restoring to the file a suit which has been dismissed. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge in invoking in aid the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C., for the purpose of restoring the suit which had been dismissed on 9th July 1925 exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in him by law. It follows, therefore, that the order of the Subordinate Judge restoring the suit under S. 151, Civil P. C., must be set aside. The rule is accordingly made absolute with costs hearing fee one gold mohur.

Civil Rule No. 1612 of 1927, Decided on 20th March 1928, from order of 2nd Munsiff, Sealdah, D/- 1st December 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 115—Interlocutory order—Suit wrongly tried by Court having no jurisdiction—High Court can interfere.

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with interlocutory orders unless it is apparent that such an interference is called for in the interests of justice, but each case must depend upon its own facts, and so where the lower Court decided wrongly the question of jurisdiction and on such wrong decision gave itself jurisdiction the High Court will interfere.

Order.—In this case, the plaintiff sued to enforce specific performance of a contract to execute a conveyance in respect of the free-hold of the property mentioned in the plaint. Such a suit was and is a suit for enforcement of a contract for an interest in immovable property. There cannot be any doubt that such a suit must be brought in a forum within whose jurisdiction the property in question is situate. Ex consesio, the Sealdah Court has no jurisdiction, in this view of the matter, to try a suit for specific performance of a contract for a conveyance of the free-hold in a property which is situate outside the jurisdiction of that Court. It follows, therefore, that the Sealdah Court by deciding that it has jurisdiction cannot give itself jurisdiction to try the suit. It further follows that there has been an exercise of jurisdiction by the Sealdah Court where it has no such jurisdiction. The question then arises whether this Court should interfere in the matter. It is argued by Dr. Basak who appears for the plaintiff-opposite party that what has been decided is only with respect to an issue which arises in the suit, that is, with respect to a portion or part of the case itself, and that, that being so, this Court will not interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C. with an interlocutory order of this description. No doubt, in the abstract, it is well-settled that this Court will not ordinarily interfere with interlocutory orders unless it is apparent that such an interference is called for in the interests of justice. But each case must depend upon its own facts and it would be extraordinary if, in a case of this description and on the facts referred to above, it was held that this Court was powerless under S. 115, Civil P. C. to set the Court, which decided wrongly the question of jurisdiction and on such wrong decision gave itself jurisdiction right. In my view, there is abundant authority in support of the contention that this Court will interfere in a case of this description.

The rule is accordingly made absolute with costs. The decision complained of is set aside and the case is sent back to the Court below in order that Court may return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented in the proper Court. The hearing-fee in this Court is assessed at two gold mohurs.

Appeal No. 205 of 1928, Decided on 16th September 1928.

* Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 78—Insolvent acknowledging debt to decree-holder in insolvency proceedings—It is sufficient proof of debt within proviso to S. 78.

Section 49 only specifies a simple mode of proof of the debt but does not exclude any other mode of proof, and where, therefore, the debt to the decree-holder was proved in the insolvency proceedings, according to the statement of the insolvent that a decree had been obtained against him, the debt must be taken to have been proved within the proviso to S. 78. [P 160, C 1]

Abinas Chandra Ghose—for Appellant.
Nasim Ali—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case the question is whether the application for execution is barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have held that the decree-holder is entitled to exclude the time during which the insolvency proceedings were pending, that is between the period of 9th April 1924 when the judgment-debtor was adjudicated an insolvent and the 27th August 1925 when the adjudication was annulled. During the course of the execution of the decree the judgment-debtor applied for being adjudicated an insolvent. He entered in his schedule the decree-holder as the only person who was his creditor, and apparently he stated that the decree-holder had obtained the decree. Upon that the executing Court stayed the execution and it appears that the Court directed the decree-holder to produce a copy of the insolvency proceedings. The decree-holder apparently failed to produce a copy of the insolvency proceeding within the time allowed and the execution case was thereupon struck off. Now the judgment-debtor says that S. 78 does not apply because the debt was provable under the Insolvency Act but was not proved under the Act, and reference is made by his advocate to S. 33, Provincial Insolvency Act, under which he says that the creditor was bound to prove his debt again. Reference has also been made to S. 49 as to the mode of proof of the debt. In this case the insolvent admitted the debt of the creditor decree-holder. S. 49 only specifies a simple mode of proof of the debt, and I agree with the observation of the learned Munsiff in this case which has been affirmed by the learned Judge that S. 49 does not exclude any other mode of proof. In this case the debt to the decree-holder was proved in the insolvency proceedings according to the statement of the insolvent that he had obtained a decree against the insolvent; therefore he was on the facts of this case entitled to exclude the period under S. 78 of the Act. This appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

(c) Criminal trial—Joint trial.

The legality of the joint trial depends upon the accusation and not on the trial: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 107, Rel. on. [P 161 C 2]

Debendra Narayan Bhattacharji and Tarapada Banerji—for Petitioner.

Mritunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Debrata Mukerji—for Opposite Party.

Cuming, J.—The present petitioner Kali Kumar Das was tried jointly with one Rahimuddi on the following charges: first of all that they conspired to commit criminal breach of trust with regard to a certain sum of money about Rs. 2,000 odd and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 408 read with S. 120-B; and secondly that they misappropriated a sum of Rs. 2,000 odd and so committed an offence under S. 403, I. P. C. Against the present petitioner there was also a further charge that he committed criminal breach of trust as a servant with regard to the same sum of money Rs. 2,000 odd. These charges were drawn up on 30th July 1927. On 13th September 1927 the Magistrate added what he has described as alternative charges, namely, three charges against the present petitioner of falsifying the accounts, each of these charges dealt with one specific item in the account and also against the other accused Rahimuddi of abetting the same falsification of accounts.

It is unnecessary to state in detail the facts of the case at length. They are briefly these: The petitioner was a servant of the complainant Nawab Ali who is a jute broker at Poran bazar Chandpore. Rahimuddi was a customer. The case is that by means of falsification of certain books of account they defrauded or attempted to defraud the complainant of the sum of Rs. 2,000 odd.

The first argument that has been put forward by the petitioner is that S. 239, Criminal P. C. does not contemplate what are described as alternative charges being tried together with the original charges. I admit I do not see the force of this contention. S. 239 (d) provides that persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction may be tried together. It is sufficient that the offences were committed in the course of the same transaction. Whether the charge is an alternative one as provided by S. 236 or is a distinct charge is obviously immaterial.

The learned vakil has next argued that the two persons cannot be jointly tried on three substantive charges and one of them Rahimuddi of abetting these three offences. As far as I can see this is also covered by sub-Cl. (d), S. 239. No doubt sub-Cl. (c) does not cover this case, but sub-Cl. (d) most certainly does. Sub-Cl. (d) contemplates all the offences committed by these persons, whether substantive offences or abetment of those offences, being tried together provided they were committed by these persons in the course of the same transaction.

Then the learned vakil has argued that S. 222, sub-Cl. (2) has no application to the present case and that hence the accused was really tried on some 10 or 20 charges of falsification. He contends that S. 234, Criminal P. C. would be a bar to this procedure. But S. 234 refers to offences of the same kind though in other respects entirely distinct from each other and not necessarily forming part of the same transaction. The section which governs the case, however, is S. 235, Criminal P. C. which provides that any number of offences may be tried together if they form part of the same transaction. That is equally clear from the wording of S. 239 (d) which clearly to my mind contemplates that all offences committed in the course of the same transaction may be tried together and that the accused persons concerned in this offence may be jointly tried though they are concerned in different offences. The criterion as to whether they can or cannot be tried together is whether these offences were committed by them in the course of the same transaction. It is no doubt always open to the Court if it appears that the accused persons would be embarrassed by such a joint trial to try the accused persons or even the charges separately. S. 239 is only an enabling section. It does not, however, appear that the petitioner ever suggested that he would be embarrassed by a joint trial with his co-accused Rahimuddi or ever asked for a separate trial.

It was then contended that S. 234 is not applicable when several persons were tried jointly under S. 239, and we were referred to the case of Budhai Sheik v. Emperor (1). I admit that I do not see the applicability of S. 234 to the present case. This is not a question of different offences of the same kind though otherwise nonconnected with each other committed within the space of one year. This is a case of number of offences so connected as to form one transaction which case is dealt with under S. 235, and also under S. 239 (d).

The only question really to be decided is whether all the offences of which these persons have been tried were committed in the course of the same transaction. As contended by the learned vakil for the petitioner and also by the learned vakil who appears for the complainant the legality of the joint trial depends upon the accusation and not on the result of the trial: see the case of Abdul Salem v. Emperor (2). The case for the prosecution in this case was that between certain dates the two accused conspired together to defraud the complainant of a sum of money roughly Rs. 2,000. All the various means that were used to carry out this conspiracy, namely, falsification of accounts and misappropriating various sums during the period all formed part of the same transaction which was a conspiracy to defraud the complainant. All the offences with which the present petitioner and Rahimuddi who was tried jointly with him had been charged and convicted were committed in the course of this one transaction. The rule therefore stands discharged. The petitioner, if on bail, must surrender to serve out the remaining portion of the sentence, Civil Revn. Appln. No. 630 of 1928, Decided on 30th July 1928, from order of 3rd Munsif, Alipur, D/- 20-3-1928.

* (a) Civil P. C., S. 151 — Court cannot set aside in review its order passed without considering certain provision of law.

The procedure to be followed in investigation of claims under the provisions of O. 38, is the same as the procedure to be followed under O. 21, R. 58. So when at the date of attachment a person had no interest in nor was possessed of the properties attached, he cannot proceed under O. 38, R. 10.

Hemendra Chandra Sen — for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This rule must be made absolute. It appears that the opposite party preferred a claim under the provisions of O. 38, Civil P. C., to an attachment of the disputed properties before judgment. On 14th March 1928 that claim was rejected by the Munsif as untimely and on the further ground that the decree-holder's attachment preceded the auction-sale of the opposite party. On 20th March 1928 an application was made by the opposite party before the Munsif under S. 151, Civil P. C., and that application was allowed by the Munsif on the ground that he had rejected the application summarily on 14th March 1928, not taking into consideration the provisions of O. 38, R. 10, Civil P. C. The Munsif really set aside the previous order on the ground that he had passed the previous order on a misconception of the law. That certainly was not a ground which justified him in setting aside the order purported to have been made by way of review under S. 151 of the Code. His order under S. 151 was made without jurisdiction and must be set aside. It is argued however, by the learned advocate for the opposite party that even if the order is made without jurisdiction, this Court is not bound to interfere, seeing that his client had purchased these properties in execution of a decree subsequent to the attachment. There is, however, no force in this contention for if that is his case, he is not a person who can put in a claim under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., or under the provisions of O. 38 of the Code. The procedure to be followed in investigation of claims under the provisions of, O. 38 is the same as the procedure to be followed under O. 21, R. 58 and the subsequent sections of the Code. O. 21, R. 59 of the Code indicates the scope of the enquiry under O. 21, R. 58, and it limits the enquiry to this, that the claimant must show that at the date of attachment he had some interest in or was possessed of the properties attached.

Now on the claimant opposite party's own showing, at the date of attachment he had no interest in or was not possessed of the properties attached for the claimant had only then a decree against the judgment-debtor whose properties were attached. There had been no sale in execution of that decree and consequently it cannot be said that the claimant opposite party had at the date of the attachment any interest in or that he had possession in the properties attached, so, on the claimant's own case he is not a person who can come in under O. 21, R. 58. He may have other remedies. All that order O. 38, R. 10, says is that the rights of such a purchaser as the claimant is, will not be affected by reason of any order of attachment before judgment that might have properly been made. The order made by the Munsif is clearly without jurisdiction and must be set aside. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this rule. I assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit by the plaintiff for declaration of title and confirmation of possession on the ground that he has an occupancy raiyati right in the two jamas mentioned in the schedules ka and kha of the plaint and is not liable to be evicted therefrom. The facts which have led up to this suit are that a suit was brought in 1909 by the defendants for ejectment of the plaintiff from the lands in this suit alleging him to be an under-raiyat and that suit was dismissed. In 1918 the defendants brought a suit against the plaintiff under S. 66, Ben. Ten. Act, alleging that the plaintiff was his korfa tenant, for arrears of rent and in default of payment for ejectment. That suit was decreed ex parte but the plaintiff in this suit appeared at a later stage and deposited a portion of the decretal amount. It appears that he did not deposit the entire amount and, therefore, the defendant took out execution of the decree and obtained formal delivery of possession through Court. The tenant not having vacated the land the defendants brought a suit in 1921 for recovery of possession. This suit was decreed after contest up to the appellate Court. That decree was for khas possession of the lands with mesne profits against the plaintiff. Thereafter in 1924 the plaintiff instituted this suit for declaration of his occupancy right in the land and for confirmation of possession. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit in respect of schedule ka and decreed the suit in respect of schedule kha.

The plaintiff appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge in the appellate Court decreed the suit in respect of both these plots. The defendants have appealed before us but they have confined their appeal only to plot ka. The point taken in appeal is that the lower appellate Court was wrong in not giving effect to the decree passed in their favour in 1918 and 1921. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that the decree passed in 1909 in which the plaintiff was held to be an occupancy raiyat should operate as res judicata and accordingly the subsequent decrees in 1918 and 1921 must be treated as without jurisdiction and nullities. This view is clearly wrong. The plaintiff should have pleaded that the decree of 1909 had operated as res judicata in the suit in 1918. But he omitted to do so; and the result was that the Court passed a decree holding that the plaintiff was an under-raiyat, for that is the effect of the decree which was passed under S. 66, Ben. Ten. Act. In the suit of 1921 which was based upon the suit of 1918 the plaintiff again failed to bring to the notice of the Court the decree of 1909 with the result that the defendant's suit for khas possession and mesne profits was decreed against the plaintiff. The present suit on the face of the decree passed in 1921 is incompetent. Instead of taking the defence which the plaintiff now pleads in his plaint he brings another suit for the purpose of agitating the matters which were involved in the suits of 1918 and 1921. There is no procedure in law which entitles him to do it. The plaintiff cannot be permitted to attack a decree passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction not vitiated by fraud or inoperative in a subsequent suit. The only mode of assailing a decree by a separate suit is to attack it on the ground of fraud for which period of limitation is prescribed in the Limitation Act. On the general law, therefore, the plaintiff is precluded from maintaining this suit. Also on the rule of estoppel by judgment the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he claims.

The position at the worst in this case is that there are two conflicting decrees. By one decree the plaintiff's right as occupancy raiyat was established. By another decree that right was negatived. The point that arises in these circumstances is as to which decree should prevail. The trend of authorities is that the last decree ought to prevail. If finality is not given to the last decree there would be no end of the litigation which it is the object of S. 11, Civil P. C., to secure. The defendants in this suit may again bring a suit and base their claim on the decree of 1918 or 1921. If in such a suit the plaintiff can put forward the decree in this suit operating as res judicata in that it is the last decree between the parties, why should not the same ground be available to the defendants in the present suit? As has been observed by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Seshayya v. Venkatadri Appa Row (1) the effect of not pleading the previous decree in answer to the plaintiff's claim in a suit stands on the same footing as if the defence was raised by the defendant and disallowed by the Court. It cannot be placed on a higher footing on any reasoning based upon common sense or law. The bar of res judicata is one which does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court but is a plea in bar which a party is at liberty to waive. If a party does not put forward his plea of res judicata in a suit he must be taken to have waived it or it must be taken to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack and deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit under Expl. (4), S. 11, Civil P. C. The party omitting to plead res judicata intentionally invites the Court to decide the case on the merits and having failed to secure a decision in his favour he should not be allowed to go behind the last adjudication and ask for the trial of an issue which he could have raised at the previous trial.

The view that the last decision between the parties ought to prevail has been accepted in Mallu Mal v. Jhamman Lall (2); Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (3); and recently in a Madras case reported in Rukmani Ammal v. Narasimha Iyer (4). Apart from the authorities it seems to me on common sense and on application of the accepted principles of law that a party being defeated in a suit should not be allowed to attack the decree in a subsequent suit merely on the ground that he had a very good defence in the previous suit which he had omitted to take. The decree of 1921 was passed by a competent Court with jurisdiction and is not vitiated by fraud as is found by the learned Munsif. There is, therefore, no ground on which the plaintiff can get rid of that decree by a subsequent suit on the ground that there was a previous decision in his favour which was not brought to the notice of the Court in the suits of 1918 and 1921. The fact that the decree in 1909 was not brought to the notice of the Court in 1918 and 1921 does not render the decrees passed by the Courts which were competent to pass them without jurisdiction and nullities as has been held by the learned Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff has slept over his right and he cannot now take advantage of his own remissness. I am quite clear in my mind that as a broad proposition of law when there are two conflicting decrees the last should prevail on the ground that in the eye of law it is binding between the parties and the previous decree should be taken as pleaded in the latter suit and not given effect to, or must henceforth be regarded as dead.

For the above reasons, in my judgment, this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and that of the trial Court restored with costs. As the appellants have abandoned in this case their claim to the land in schedule kha, they will be entitled to proportionate costs in this appeal and of the hearing in the Court of appeal below.

Limitation Act, S. 7—Plaintiffs belonging to joint Hindu family—One being minor—Other plaintiff manager of family and also minor plaintiff's certificated guardian—Elder plaintiff could give valid discharge—No extension of time was available.

Time cannot be extended under S. 7 in a suit for accounts where, although one of the plaintiffs is a minor, the other can give a valid discharge on behalf of both.

Plaintiffs formed a joint Hindu family. One of them was a minor but the other was the manager of the family as well as his certificated guardian.

Held: that the elder plaintiff could give valid discharge in either of his capacities and no time could, therefore, be extended: A.I.R. 1916 P. C. 148 and 6 C. L. J. 383, Dist.

Cammiale, J.—This appeal is by the plaintiffs against the dismissal of their suit in part. The suit was one for accounts in connexion with a business that had belonged to the father of the plaintiffs who died in October 1915. The defendant was the gomastha in charge of the business from time of the father of the plaintiffs. No accounts had been called for from him at any time prior to the beginning of the year 1327 B. S., that is to say, some time in April 1920 when defendant was dismissed. The accounts prayed for are for the whole of the period of the defendant's service. The Courts below found that the claim so far as it relates to the period prior to the death of the plaintiffs' father is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs have appealed. Plaintiff 1 is an adult and the second was a minor even at the time of the hearing of the appeal in the Courts below, and the plaintiffs have sought to take advantage of the provisions of S. 7, Lim. Act in order to obtain extension of time for their suit. Both the learned Courts below have held that as plaintiffs 1 and 2 were members of a joint Hindu family of which plaintiff 1 was the karta, no extension of time could be availed of under the provisions of S. 7 because plaintiff 1 had authority to give a discharge not only for himself but also for plaintiff 2.

The appellants relied on a passage at the end of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nobin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (1) where their Lordships say that "as two of the appellants were minors and could not give a discharge the suit was maintainable by them."

Obviously if there was no one capable of giving a discharge, S. 7, Lim. Act would give the appellant-plaintiff who was a minor a right to extension of time.

Reliance is also placed on the decision of this Court in the case of Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad (2). That was also a suit for accounts. In that suit also there were two plaintiffs one of whom was a minor; but the elder of the two plaintiffs was not the karta of the family; and it was held, that the elder plaintiff could not give a discharge to the defendant not only because he was not the karta of the family but also because a certificated guardian had been appointed to have charge of the person and properties of the minor plaintiff. In that case the fact that there was a certificated guardian who was capable of giving a discharge was not pressed and was not considered. In the present case the elder plaintiff held two positions in which he had the right to give a discharge on behalf of the minor plaintiff. He not only was the karta of the family but also was the certificated guardian. In both these capacities he could have given a discharge to the defendant, and, therefore, the Courts below were right in the view they have taken of the suit. The appeal, accordingly, fails and is dismissed with costs.

A person executed a patni talukdari patta of his taluk in favour of his daughter. She and her sons born of her womb and sons born of their loins in succession and the daughters of her womb were to continue to possess the same and were to be malik in possession by right of miras talukdari. But except for these her other heirs such as her daughters' descendants or her husband were to have no right to it.

Held : that the donor in this case desired to grant an estate of inheritance but directed that the succession should take place in a specified manner. It was not limited to what should happen at her death but gave directions for an indefinite period of time or, in other words, he intended to alter the rule of succession. B. B. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fifth Court, Decca, dated 7th June 1926 dismissing their suit. The suit was for recovery of possession of a taluk on the allegation that the plaintiffs were the heirs under the Hindu Law of Raja Kali Narayan Roy who was the original owner of the property. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that the Raja granted a sub-lease of the taluk to his daughter Kripamoyee Devi on certain conditions. The Raja died in 1878, Kripamoyee died on 27th April 1920, without leaving any issue. Under the terms of the lease, Kripamoyee got only a life-interest and on her death without issue, the leasehold interest lapsed and the property has reverted to the estate of Kali Narayan and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of it as his heirs. The defendants claim the property under a will said to have been executed by Kripamoyee and they allege that Kripamoyee had an absolute interest in the property in question and the provisions in the lease on which the plaintiffs purport to base their claim are void. They also raised other questions in defence which it is not necessary to relate now. It is admitted that the plaintiffs can succeed only if after the death of Kripamoyee, the disputed leasehold property reverted to and became part of the estate left by Raja Kali Narayan. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, took up that question only for decision first and decided it against the plaintiffs. If the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge is right then the suit will stand dismissed, otherwise the case must be remitted for decision of the other questions raised in the suit.

The question in controversy depends entirely upon the true construction of the patta granted to Kripamoyee and the validity or otherwise of certain provisions contained in it. There were three documents executed by Kali Narayan in her favour. They are more or less on the same terms. It will be sufficient to take into consideration the last of them dated 5th March 1877. The deed is described as a miras talukdari patta. The relevant portion of it runs thus :

"I give you patni talukdari patta in respect of my purchased taluk . . . . . total annual sadar jama being fixed at Rs. 4,840, without any selami on account of my affection for you. You and your sons born of your womb and sons born of their loins in succession, and the daughters born of your womb, shall continue to possess (the same) . . . . . being malak in possession by right of miras talukdari in all the lands and the jamas relating to the whole taluk written in the patta by cutting and filling up, by making homestead and orchards, and by being entitled to the right of transfer by sale and gift. Excepting the above, the descendants of your daughters, and the adopted sons, etc., in your family, your husband or his wife or the descendants born of her womb or your daughter's husband, etc., or any other heir of any kind will have no right or title to this taluk . . . . God forbid, if you or your heirs aforesaid be ever under the necessity of making a sale or giving in mortgage by way of conditional sale or of giving ijara of kaimi miras patta, etc., or of making transfer in any way of the whole or any portion of this taluk then you or they will have to sell the same to me or my heirs at the value often times the amount of the realizable rent that may remain after deducting the sadar rent of grant kaimi miras patta in respect thereof and if it be necessary, to give in mortgage by way of conditional sale or grant ijara patta, you will have to do it according to rule; but you will not be able to sell or transfer, as aforesaid, in any way, or mortgage by way of conditional sale or grant ijara or kaimi miras patta, to any other persons; if you or they do or give, the same will be rejected. It I or my heir on being requested, fail to purchase, etc., as aforesaid, or do not take in mortgage by way of conditional sale or ijara or kaimi miras lease then you or your heirs, as aforesaid, will be able to put in a petition in Court, by mentioning the terms of this patta, and on the expiry of three months from the date of that petition, to sell or give in mortgage by conditional sale or grant ijara or kaimi miras patta, or transfer in any other way; to that no objection on my part or on the part of my heirs will avail. Further, if you or your heirs, as aforesaid, ever willingly give up your residence in Joydevpur, and, God forbid, if the particular heirs of you, whose rights have been mentioned in the lands of this patta, cease to exist then the terms written in this patta will become inoperative and the taluk will revert to the right of me and my heirs. Finis Dated 23rd Falgoun 1283, B. S."

It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the effect of the words in this document is that at best on absolute estate was given to Kripamoyee defeasible in the event of her dying without issue and in that event the property was to revert to the donor and his heirs. Reliance is placed in support of this contention on the case of Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chundar Chowdhry (1) and it is contended that the words in the patta in the present case bear a close resemblance to the words in the sanad in the above case and the present patta should be construed in the same manner. I am always reluctant to construe a document with reference to authorities as to how a similar document was construed. The well-known remarks of Sir G. Jessel, M. R., may be referred to in this connexion. Says the Master of the Rolls:

"I think it is the duty of a Judge to ascertain the construction of the instrument before him, and not to refer to the construction put by another Judge upon an instrument, perhaps similar, but not the same. The only result of referring to authorities for that purpose is confusion and error, in this way, that if you look at a similar instrument, and say that a certain construction was put upon it, and that it differs only to such a slight degree from the document before you, that you do not think the difference sufficient to alter the construction you miss the real point of the case, which is to ascertain the meaning of the instrument before you. It may be quite true that in your opinion the difference between the two instruments is not sufficient to alter the construction, but at the same time the Judge who decided on that other instrument may have thought that that very difference would be sufficient to alter the interpretation of that instrument. You have in fact, no guide whatever, and the result especially in some cases of Wills, has been remarkable. Aspden v. Seddon (2)."

I shall, therefore, endeavour to interpret the patta according to my own judgment.

Although by the use of the word "patni" there was no grant in this case of a patni taluk properly so-called, there is no doubt that the donor meant to grant a permanent heritable lease at a fixed rent to Kripomoyee, and the use of the words "patni talukdari patta, miras taluqdari patta, miras taluk, miras talukdari" in various portions of the document are quite apt to convey such a right. The grant of the interest was to her as malik and not to any other person designated after her death. It is not necessary to consider at present whether the restrictions on the right of alienation are valid or not. Nor is it necessary to consider whether the stipulation giving the right to purchase the leasehold interest on certain terms by the donor and his heirs offends against the rule against perpetuity. It may, however, be noticed that on the refusal of the donor or his heirs to purchase, the lessee and her heirs were entitled to transfer their interest to any person whatsoever. Evidently, an estate of inheritance was conferred on Kripamoyee subject to certain restrictions as to the persons who would be entitled to inherit. The words "your sons born of your womb, etc.," refer to succession to the property as also the prohibition clause commencing with

"excepting the above, etc." It seems to me clear that on a true construction of the grant the donor desired to give a permanent heritable right to his daughter Kripamoyee subject in certain restrictions on the course of succession which he desired should follow in a particular manner, with which I shall deal next.

The question then is whether the provisions as to succession are valid or not. The question depends on the true meaning of the clause relating to succession, whether the donor intended an indefinite failure of issue or failure of issue at the time of the death of Kripamoyee. If the words relate only to the time of the death of Kripamoyee then their effect would be to make the absolute estate defeasible in the event of failure of issue at that time. The case would then fall under Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullik (3) where the will was held not to point to an indefinite failure of male issue. See also Bhooban Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (1). If the intention of the donor was to control the succession to the property for all time, then the question must be decided according to the observations of their Lordships in Jotendramohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (4). Their Lordships say :

"A private individual, who attempts by gift or will to make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs, is assuming to legislate, and that the gift must fail, and the inheritance take place as the law directs. This was well expressed by Lord Justice Turner in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullik (5) : "A man cannot create a new form of estate or alter the line of succession allowed by law, for the purpose of carrying out his own wishes or views of policy."

"Another general principle applicable to transfers by gift (more liberally applied in the law of England to wills than to gifts inter vivos) is, that a benignant construction is to be used, and that if the real meaning of the document can be reasonably ascertained from the language used, though that language be ungrammatical or untechnical, or mistaken as to name or description, or in any other manner incorrect, provided it sufficiently indicate what was meant, that meaning shall be enforced to the extent and in the form which the law allows."

"Accordingly, if the gift confers an estate upon a man with words imperfectly describing the kind of inheritance, but showing that it was intended that he should have an estate of inheritance the language would be read as conferring an estate inheritable as the law directs."

In my opinion, the donor in this case desired to grant an estate of inheritance to Kripamoyee, but directed that the succession should take place in a specified manner. It was not limited to what should happen at the death of Kripamoyee, but gave directions for an indefinite period of time, or, in other words, he intended to alter the rule of succession under the Hindu law. This, the donor had no power to do, and those provisions are, therefore, void. As their Lordships observed in Purna Sash Battacharji v. Kalidhan Rai (6) :

"If the attempt to interfere with the course of descent according to law is to be regarded as a condition of defeasance it was applicable not merely to the case of Ananda, but to the case of every male descendant who happened to leave no male issue; and its application might have been postponed for an indefinite period. Their Lordships are not aware of any authority to warrant such a provision."

In my judgment, the limitation as to the right of succession to the property is void, but the grant to Kripamoyee being one of inheritance she got an absolute title as a permanent tenure-holder and was entitled to deal with the property as she liked. The estate did not revert to the donor or his heirs after Kripamoyee's death and, therefore, assuming that the plaintiffs are heirs of Raja Kali Narayan they are not entitled to the property. In the view I have taken, it is not necessary to express an opinion on the question whether a defeasance clause and a right of re-entry of the lessor provided in a lease may or may not be void for remoteness, as in this case I think the defeasance clause is void being contrary to the general law of inheritance. The result is that this appeal will stand dismissed with costs to be divided equally among the different sets of respondents appearing in this Court.

C., recommending that an appellate order of acquittal passed by the Additional District Magistrate of that district should be set aside and the appeal ordered to be reheard.It has been laid down in a long series of cases what should be the guiding principle to be acted upon by the High Court in dealing with applications for revision of orders of acquittal. The principle has been very clearly laid down by Jenkins, C. J., upon a review of the practice in almost all the High Courts in India, in the case of Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowdhury (1). He observed:

“The pronouncements of the High Courts of Madras, Bombay and Allahabad consistently support the view that as a general rule it is expedient not to interfere, on revision, at the instance of a private person, with an acquittal after trial by a proper tribunal, and that applications for that purpose should be discouraged on public grounds.”

(1) [1915] 42 Cal. 612=19 C. W. N. 184=27 I. C. 186=21 C. L. J. 53.

He further observed:

“I am not prepared to say the Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an acquittal, but I hold it should ordinarily exercise that jurisdiction sparingly and only where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.”

Since this proposition was laid down by that learned Chief Justice it has, I find, been followed by all the High Courts (e. g., Pramatha Nath Barat v. P. C. Lahiri (2), In re Faredoon Cawasji Parbhu (3), Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar (4) and Siban Rai v. Bhagwat Dass (5). A reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., recommending revision of orders of acquittal, in my opinion, stands on no higher footing than applications of private prosecutors for such revision. In the case of Hrishikesh Mandal v. Abadhut Mandal (6) it was said by this Court that in the case of an acquittal when the Local Government has not preferred an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C., the High Court ought not to interfere in revision, on a reference under S. 438 where it cannot do so without practically hearing the case on the evidence as an appeal in order to satisfy itself that the opinion of the referring Court is correct, though it has jurisdiction to intervene in such cases. It is true that in a few instances there has recently been some departure from the practice intended to be laid down in the aforesaid decisions of this Court, but on an examination of the papers of such of the cases as are available it appears that either the reference was not opposed or that the acquittal was not on the merits or was based on a palpable error of law. The present reference is entirely on the merits, the Additional Sessions Judge having been inclined to take a view of the evidence different from that of the Additional District Magistrate. That this is a very reasonable and convenient practice is clear from the fact that other High Courts have also set their face against references of this character. The learned Judge agreeing with the verdict of the jury sentenced each of the accused to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years. In the present appeal the appellant Hencia alias Niranjana Ghose has been represented before us by Mr. Mritunjoy Chattopadhyaya. The appellants in appeal No. 253 of 1928 preferred the appeal from jail and the two appeals have been heard together before us. For the reasons which we are about to give we must set aside the verdict of the jury and the conviction and sentence and direct retrial of the accused in these two appeals according to law.

This course has been forced upon us and we have had no other alternative than to direct retrial.

Mr. Chatterji has argued on behalf of his client that from the charge of the learned Judge to the jury as it appears on the record before us it could not be said with certainty what was the view on the facts appearing on the evidence which was placed before the jury and that it could not be called a proper summing up within the meaning of S. 297, Criminal P. C. He further contends that the summing up by the learned Judge after the close of the evidence in the case should be a full and a distinct statement of the evidence on the record with such advice as to the legal bearing of that evidence and the weight which should attach to the several parts of it as sound judicial discretion would suggest and in so far as the present summing up violates the conditions indicated above it amounts to a misdirection within which expression are included also matters of non-direction. It is not necessary to set out herein the charge itself of the learned Judge for the purpose of indicating what that charge is. The charge itself must be referred to in order to fully understand the observations which follow. In our opinion this charge is one which is animadverted upon in the judgment of this Court reported in 31 Calcutta Weekly. Notes at p. 387 and in Indian Law Reports 34 Calcutta at p. 698. It no doubt appears on the face of it to be heads of charge to the jury and in so far as it consists of heads of charge to the jury it may be said that there is a technical compliance with the provisions of S. 297, Criminal P. C. It is not however, a charge in such a form as to enable this Court as the final Court of appeal in cases of trial by a jury to be satisfied that it was delivered with sufficient fulness as regards the evidence on the record or that it is such as to enable this Court as a Court of appeal to say for itself that all points of law and fact were clearly and correctly explained to the jury having regard to the evidence adduced in the case. Now the explanation of the law bearing on the subject, if it can at all be called an explanation, is drastically meagre and we have not been afforded any assistance whatsoever by the learned Judge in the portion of the charge relating to the explanation of the law bearing on the case for the purpose of finding out for ourselves whether the sections were properly explained to the jury or not. Leaving that aside and confining ourselves to the observations in the charge and the summing up of the evidence on the record it seems to us that the summing up is no more than the barest possible skeleton of the evidence on the record. It is not as indicated above a summing up at all. It is doubtful whether the jury were afforded any real assistance by the learned Judge when he proceeded to sum up the case to the jury. The names of the witnesses are mentioned no doubt in the charge. But the interdependence of the evidence given by these witnesses bearing on the charge framed against the accused has not been made clear nor does the summing up of the evidence appear to us in any way connected with the several parts thereof as a whole, as a summing up made with ordinary care would certainly show. But we need not pause here because from the record it has been shown that important points which should have been brought to the notice of the jury have not been brought to their notice. In our opinion, the circumstances to which our attention has been drawn imperatively demand that the accused should have an opportunity of having the case against them placed before the jury by another officer and at a second trial.

In the first place it is pointed out that there is an important discrepancy between the facts stated in the first information report and the evidence of the persons who lodged the first information in Court and that such discrepancy has not been placed before the jury. It is pointed out that in the first information report lodged at the thana the witness Upendra had stated that even up to the time when the first information was lodged the names of the dacoits had not been ascertained whereas in his evidence in Court he stated that his elder brother Rajani, witness No. 3 had informed him about the names of the dacoits before he proceeded to the thana to lodge the first information.

In the second place it is pointed out that in the first information it was stated that the dacoits who had committed the dacoity in question had worn pieces of cloth ordinarily called galpatta. But so far as it can be ascertained from the evidence of Rajani in Court it was clear that none of the dacoits had worn galpatta. It is further pointed out that if one looks at the evidence of Upendra and Rajani together while Upendra says that galpattas were worn by the dacoits, Rajani on the contrary is positive that no galpatta was so worn. Rajani is equally positive that he did not furnish the names of the dacoits except perhaps of Dwarka brother of Upendra.

In the third place it is pointed out that there is no mention whatsoever in the learned Judge's charge to the jury of the names of the several persons who appeared in the first information as being the persons who had either chased the dacoits or who had come immediately to the place of occurrence after the occurrence itself and had heard from Rajani witness 3 the names of the persons who had taken part in the dacoity nor is it pointed out in the charge itself that most of these persons last referred to had not been called as witnesses in the trial, their names being Surendra Chakraburty, Jyotish Pal, Girija Nath Chatterji, Kalyan Babu, Dhuli Babu, Pran Kristo Chakraburty and Govinda Chakraburty.

In the fourth place it is contended that the learned Judge was wrong in stating to the jury that witness 5 corroborates witness 4. Witness 5 does not speak to the fact of the accused persons meeting together in the house of Niranjana in the evening of the day of occurrence and in so far as witness 5 does not speak to that, there is no corroboration of witness 4.

In the next place complaint is made that the learned Judge told the jury in clear and unequivocal language that the identification was a genuine one thereby indicating to the jury that there was very little left of the case for the accused inasmuch as the dacoits had been identified in a satisfactory manner. The learned Judge was not entitled to express his opinion on the question of identification in that forcible and dogmatic manner in which he did because it is clear from the evidence of witnesses 1, 3, 8 and 13 that the persons accused of having committed the dacoity in question had been taken after their arrest to the village where the occurrence took place and had been kept for a day near the baitakhana of the complainant before they had been sent up for trial. These are some of the circumstances to which our attention has been drawn showing that there has been non-direction by the Judge—non-direction as regards important points to which the attention of the jury should undoubtedly have been drawn. In the circumstances, we think on the plainest consideration of justice that we should interfere in this matter, set aside the verdict of the jury and order retrial and we, accordingly, do so and direct that the accused, that is, the appellants in the two appeals mentioned above be retried before the present Sessions Judge of Burdwan and a jury in accordance with law.

Criminal Revn. No. 894 of 1928, Decided on 10th December 1928.

No appeal lies against an order made by Court directing complaint to be lodged under S. 476-B: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 281, Foll. [P 173 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., amended (1923), S. 195 (3)—Even under amended Code District Magistrate and not Magistrate empowered to hear appeals is a Court to which appeals ordinarily lie.

The omission of the word: "only," in sub-S. (3) does not imply any change in the law as it existed before the amended Code. A Magistrate empowered under S. 407 (2) cannot be regarded as a Court "to which appeals ordinarily lie," the Court of the District Magistrate being the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie: 30 Cal. 394; 26 Mad. 656 (F.B.), Foll.; 18 Mad. 487 Dist. and not Followed. Akhil Chandra Dutt—for Petitioner.

Mukerji, J.—The facts necessary to be stated for the purpose of this rule are these: One Naimuddin was the complainant in a case under S. 426, I. P. C., against one Hanif and others, which was tried by Maulvi Mir Hossain, a Magistrate of the Third Class. The accused persons pleaded that the land concerned had been purchased by them and that the complainant Naimuddin was himself an attesting witness to the deed of purchase. The petitioner Mohim Chandra Nath Bhowmik gave evidence in support of the defence proving the execution of the deed and the signature of Naimuddin therein. Naimuddin, while the trial was pending, denied his signature in the deed and applied to the trying Magistrate for the prosecution of all concerned in the forgery. The accused persons were acquitted, the trying Magistrate being doubtful as to the forgery. After the case was over Naimuddin pressed his aforesaid application. The trying Magistrate instead of dealing with the matter himself, as he should have done, forwarded the papers to the Sadar Sub-Divisional Officer for necessary action. The Sadar Sub-Divisional Officer returned the papers to the trial Magistrate with the following remarks:

"The only materials are the denial of execution by the complainant, and the dissimilarity of the left thumb impression of the complainant from those on the document Ex. 1. The Court too did not on the judgment come to any finding that it is forged. As such I would leave to complainant to move in the matter if the left thumb impression be really forged."

What other action on the part of the complainant was contemplated by these remarks it is difficult to see: evidently the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was thinking of sanction under S. 195 as distinguished from order for prosecution under S. 476, Criminal P. C., forgetting for the moment the changes effected by the amendments of 1923. As the trying Magistrate did not pass any final order in the matter the complainant moved Mr. L. B. Das, a Deputy Magistrate who had powers under S. 407 (2), Criminal P. C. and that officer asked the trying Magistrate to pass such orders. When the said order of Mr. L. B. Das arrived before the trying Magistrate, he rejected the complainant's prayer in these words:

"Read the order of the appellate Court. Looked into the connected record including the petition of Naimuddi. I have not been personally convinced about the guilt of the accused party and I do not think it quite proper to proceed under S. 476, Criminal P. C."

The complainant then preferred an appeal which was admitted by the Joint Magistrate, and on the latter vacating his office Mr. L. B. Das, who it is said, succeeded him, dealt with the appeal and being of opinion that the acquittal of the accused persons Hanif and others was wrong and that a prima facie case was made out against the petitioner directed under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. a complaint to be lodged against the petitioner for offences under Ss. 193 and 465 read with 109 I. P. C. On that complaint the petitioner has been put upon his trial. He impugned at his trial the validity of the proceeding taken against him on the ground that Mr. L. B. Das though he had power under S. 407 (2), Criminal P. C. was not competent to pass the order under S. 476 B, Criminal P. C., and that consequently the proceedings taken on that complaint cannot stand. The objection has been overruled by the Court in which the trial is going on and the Sessions Judge on being moved to make a reference to this Court has declined to interfere. The petitioner has then moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

One of the grounds upon which the Sessions Judge has declined to make a reference to this Court is that the petitioner not having appealed from the order passed by Mr. L. B. Das under S. 476-B, is precluded by reason of S. 439 (b), Criminal P. C., from invoking the revisional powers of this Court. This ground has no substance as, apart from other reasons, no appeal lay from Mr. L. B. Das' order: Ahamadar Rahman v. Dwip Chand Chowdhury (1).

In support of the contention that Mr. L. B. Das, though empowered under S. 407, sub-S. (2), Criminal P. C., to hear appeals from the sentence of the Court of Moulvi Mir Hossein, was not the presiding officer of a Court to which appeals from the Court of Moulvi Mir Hosain ordinarily lay within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (3), Criminal P. C., so as to be competent to hear the appeal under S. 476 B, Criminal P. C., the petitioner has relied upon the decision of this Court in the case of Sadhu Lall v. Ram Churn Pasi (2). On the other hand, the Crown has in the first place relied upon the contention urged in the Magistrate's explanation which seeks to make out that the decision is no longer of any force because of the alteration in S. 195 by the Amending Act of 1923. The alteration to which reference has been made in this behalf is the omission of the word 'only' from sub-S. (7) of that section as it stood in the Act of 1898: vide Sub-S. (3) of S. 195 as it stands at present. It has been urged that because the word 'only' is no longer in the sub-section, there is nothing to prevent two Courts namely that of the District Magistrate as well as that of the Deputy Magistrate empowered under S. 407, sub-S. (2) being regarded as Courts to which appeals ordinarily lay from the Court of Moulvi Mir Hosain and that if that be the position then under proviso (a) to the sub-section the Court of Mr. L. B. Das would be the only Court to which the Court of Moulvi Mir Hosain would be subordinate within the meaning of S. 195. In my opinion the omission of the word 'only' has no such significance, and the words "to which appeals ordinarily lie" should still be understood in the sense attributed to them in the decision aforesaid. The wording of S. 407 has not undergone any change and the decision aforesaid appears to have been followed by almost all the superior Courts in this country, and no dissent against it has been expressed anywhere except in the dissentient judgment of Benson, J. who was in the minority in the Full Bench case of Eroma Variar v. Emperor (3). The Crown has, in the next place, relied upon the decision in the case of Queen-Empress v. Subbaraya Pillai (4). That case, however, was decided under the Code of 1882 in which the wording of S. 407 was materially different as has been pointed out by White, C. J. in the case of Eroma Variar v. Emperor (3) and in any event I do not see any good reason to depart from the view which our own Court has taken of the meaning of the words "to which appeals ordinarily lie."

Finally it has been contended on behalf of the Crown that if Mr. L. B. Das had no jurisdiction to make a complaint under S. 476 B, it should be held that the case has been instituted without a proper complaint and an omission of this character is curable by S. 537, Criminal P. C. This argument overlooks the bar which S. 195 imposes. It also overlooks that what S. 537 provides for is an error, omission or irregularity in the complaint and not the entire absence of a complaint without which no cognizance of the offence can be taken under the law.

The result is that the proceedings instituted upon the basis of Mr. L. B. Das' order which purports to have been made under S. 476, Criminal P. C., cannot go on. They are accordingly quashed.

We should observe that in the view that we take the complainant's appeals from the order of Moulvi Mir Hossein refusing to make a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., has not yet been disposed of by a Court competent to deal with it. It follows, therefore, that if the complainant desires to proceed with that appeal any further, it will necessarily have to be heard by the District Magistrate and disposed of by him in accordance with law and in the light of those well-established principles which govern appeals of this description. The rule is made absolute.

Graham, J.—The true construction of the words "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" in S. 195 (3), Criminal P. C., seems to be not free from doubt. But on the whole I see no reason to differ from the view taken by my learned brother and I agree that we should follow the decision of this Court in Sadhu Lal v. Ram Charan Pasi (2) and that the Rule should be made absolute.

Buckland, J.—These are two appeals preferred by the Local Government against the acquittal on appeal of seven persons who had been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Officer at Feni of offences under Ss. 147 and 225 (B), I. P. C. and sentenced each to six months rigorous imprisonment three months under each section. The facts of the case, which I take from the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Officer, were that a police officer had been entrusted with a warrant for the arrest of a witness. He found her in the house of a man named Yusab and he stated the object for which he had come. Yusab asked him to wait and after going away returned with the other accused persons and endeavoured to remove the witness. Then as she was being removed the police officer seized her. The accused persons thereupon assaulted him and rescued the person who was required as a witness from the custody of the police officer. The accused persons were put on their trial before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Feni with the result which I have stated. On appeal before the Additional Sessions Judge at Noakhali they have been acquitted, the ground being that the provisions of S. 80, Criminal P. C., had not been complied with. The learned Judge observes:

"There is absolutely no evidence to show that the substance of the warrant of arrest was notified to Nasibonessa or that the warrant was shown to her."

Consequently he held that the arrest was illegal and that she was not in the legal custody of the police officer and, therefore, there could not be and, in fact, there was not any offence under S. 225 (B), I. P. C. The common object under S. 147, I. P. C. being to commit an offence under S. 225 (B), as, according to the learned Judge, there was no offence committed under that section and their object was not to commit any such offence, he acquitted the accused of any offence under S. 147. In support of the view he has taken of S. 80, Criminal P. C., he has relied on the judgment of this Court in Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress (1). Our attention has also been drawn on behalf of the respondents to another decision of this Court, Satish Chandra Rai v. Jadu Nandan Singh (2). These cases are clearly distinguishable upon the facts. For the determination of this appeal reference must be made to S. 46, Criminal P. C. That is to be found in Ch. 5 of the Code, in the part which deals with arrest generally, and says :

"If such person forcibly resists the endeavour to arrest him, or attempts to evade the arrest, such police officer or other person may use all means necessary to effect the arrest."

Now, it is obvious and indeed only common sense that to an occasion within that section, S. 225 (B), I. P. C. also applies. Omitting so much as is unnecessary for the present purpose,

"whoever intentionally offers any resistance or illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of himself or of any other person, or rescues or attempts to rescue any other person from any custody in which that person is lawfully detained, shall be punished etc."

To say that the apprehension or custody is unlawful in a case where efforts have been made to evade or prevent the arrest and rescue the prisoners because of the provisions of S. 80, Criminal P. C., would bring the law into ridicule. So to insist would merely give more time and opportunity to the obstructionists to effect their purpose. A police officer who has made an arrest without having observed the provisions of S. 80, Criminal P. C., may be able to justify his action under the provisions of S. 46 (2), Criminal P. C. I must not be taken as expressing any opinion on the facts of these cases. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, overlooking S. 46, appears to have thought that no arrest can be lawfully made without compliance with the provisions of S. 80. In my judgment the Additional Sessions Judge was wrong in the view he took of the law and I would set aside his judgment and direct that the cases be remitted to the Sessions Judge to rehear the appeals himself on the merits.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 200—Complainant not examined before issuing summons—No prejudice to accused—Irregularity does not vitiate trial.

Non-examination of complainant before issuing summons against the accused is an irregularity which does not vitiate trial in the absence of any prejudice to the accused.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 222 (2)—Scope.

Trial involving offences under S. 406, I.P.C., committed on five distinct dates is not bad.

Bireswar Chatterjee—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 406/75, I. P. C. and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 35.

The two grounds upon which this Rule was issued are (1) that the proceedings are illegal as the Sub-Divisional Officer issued summons against the petitioner without examining the complainant under S. 200, Criminal P. C.; and (2) that the trial was bad involving as it did offences committed on five distinct dates.

As regards the first of these grounds it is true that the Court which issued summons against the petitioner did not examine the complainant Badam Santra before issuing such process, but this defect in our opinion amounts only to an irregularity which cannot be held to have vitiated the trial in the absence of any prejudice having been caused to the petitioner. We find also that the said complainant Badam Santra has been examined as a witness for the prosecution in the case itself. As regards the second ground the learned advocate appearing in support of the Rule is unable to support it in view of the provisions of S. 222 (2), Criminal P. C. The two grounds upon which the Rule was issued therefore fail. We have been asked to consider the question of the sentence. But having given the matter our best consideration we are unable to hold that the sentence is in any way too severe. The Rule is accordingly discharged.

Criminal Revn. No. 1004 of 1928, Decided on 19th December 1928, from orders of Ch. Presy. Magistrate, D/- 10th and 13th September 1928 respectively.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 96—Application disclosing commission of offence — Issue of search warrant after taking cognizance, is legal.

Where a search warrant is issued upon an application in which certain offences are disclosed as having been committed by the accused after cognizance of those offences has been taken by the Magistrate, he is quite within his power in issuing search warrant under S. 96.

Per Graham, J.—Section 202 requires that reasons should be given when the issue of process is postponed. But the failure to do so would at most be an irregularity and would not justify the setting aside of an order for issue of search warrant.

N. K. Basu, Rishindra Nath Sarkar and Sukumar Dey—for Petitioner

B. C. Chatterji, D. K. Basu, Mohendra Kumar Ghosh and Satyendra Kumar Ghose—for Opposite Party.

Mukerji, J.—This rule has been issued to show cause why two orders passed on 10th September 1928 and the other on 13th September 1928 by the Chief Presidency Magistrate should not be set aside. By the former, he ordered a search warrant to issue for certain documents and by the latter he allowed inspection thereof to the complainant, who is the opposite party in this rule.

The validity of these orders is challenged in this rule mainly upon two grounds, one questioning its legality and the other its propriety.

The legality of the orders would depend primarily on the question whether S. 96, Criminal P. C. would warrant the issue of the search warrant in this particular case. Now the documents in respect of which the search warrant was asked for were "challans, counterfoil books, bill books and account books for 1927" of the firm of Messrs. Sarkar Brothers, the petitioners. What was seized in execution of the warrant were "2 Account books, 2 Challan counterfoil books, 1 Second part of Challan, 2 Challans with 2nd and 3rd parts, 1 Bill book and 1 Challan, all of Messrs. Sarkar Bros.: vide petition of motion, para. 10."

It is not complained that what was seized was not justified by the warrant, but that the issue of the warrant itself was illegal.

It would appear that this search warrant was issued upon an application in which certain offences, to wit forgery and forgery for the purpose of cheating, were disclosed as having been committed by the petitioners, though no very definite particulars of the offences were given and the sections of the Penal Code under which the said offences would come were not mentioned, and the prayer was for the issue of a search warrant and for an order upon the C. I. D. Police to investigate into the matter. The application contained allegations of offences, and asked for an order to be passed without which, by reason of sub-S. (2), S. 155 the police would be incompetent to hold an investigation. Before passing that order the Magistrate necessarily would have to take cognizance of the offence, and this he did in the regular way on examining the complainant. Once he took cognizance of the offence, he was quite within his powers in issuing the search warrant under S. 96 of the Code. The articles recovered on the search are evidently necessary for the inquiry or trial that the learned Magistrate is contemplating to hold. It is not material to consider whether he will eventually decide to make an order for investigation by the Police or whether he will call upon the petitioner to stand his trial or whether he will dismiss the complaint. It is clear, however, that once the articles are brought before the Court in execution of the search warrant, inspection thereof may be allowed to the complainant: vide Mahomed Jackariah & Co. v. Ahmed Makomed (1).

A further argument has been advanced namely on the question of the propriety of the proceedings in the criminal Court in view of the result of the suit in the Court of Small Causes. I think it is too early now to pronounce any opinion on this matter, seeing that the offences in respect of which the trial may have to take place, have not yet been definitely specified.

Graham, J.—I do not think there is any substance whatever in the contention that the order of the learned C. P. is illegal or without jurisdiction.

The facts shortly stated are that the opposite party S. G. Bose, a builder and contractor filed a complaint making certain allegations amounting to the commission of offences under S. 468 and 477-A, I. P. C., against the petitioner Ajoy Krishna Sarkar. The Magistrate thereupon examined the complainant and issued a search warrant under S. 96, Criminal P. C., for the production of certain books of account. The procedure adopted was according to law and it is difficult to understand how it can be said to be contrary to law or without jurisdiction.

The examination of the complainant was obviously made under S. 190 (a), Criminal P. C. The Magistrate then having taken cognizance of the complaint, as he was bound to do, issued the search warrant and ordered that the complaint should be put up with the counter-petition. Three courses were open to the Magistrate. He could (1). Issue summons to the accused or (2). Hold an inquiry, or direct inquiry to be made or (3). Dismiss the complaint.

It seems to be clear that the Magistrate adopted the second of these alternatives. S. 202, Criminal P. C., requires that reasons should be given when the issue of process is postponed. But the failure to do so would at most be an irregularity and would not justify the setting aside of the order. Moreover, the order which was made directing that the case should be put up with the counter-case, is in itself a reason for postponement of process. It seems clear that the learned Magistrate desired to have both versions before him, and also such assistance as he could get from the books of account before taking further action.

In my opinion the grounds on which the rule was issued are without any substance and I agree that the rule should be discharged.

Appeal No. 29 of 1928, Decided on 14th December 1928, from original order of Pearson, J., D/- 16th March 1928, in Suit No. 2721 of 1927.

** Arbitration Act (1890), S. 8 (1) (b)—Joint submission to two arbitrators—One refusing to act—‘An appointed arbitrator’ can mean one of two such arbitrators—Court can fill vacancy.

There was a mutual agreement to refer to two arbitrators, specified and named in the clause of agreement itself. One of these appointed arbitrators refused to act. The submission did not show that the place of the arbitrator who refused to act should not be filled up. It was clear that the parties had not cared to fill up the vacant place.

Held: S. 8 (1) (b) applies, as the expression “an appointed arbitrator” can mean one of two appointed arbitrators: 43 Bom. 809, Diss. from; Yeates v. Caruth, (1895) 2 *Ir. B. C. Mitter, S. Ghose and B. B. Sircar—for Appellants.

C. C. Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of an application made by the appellant firm under S. 19, Arbitration Act 1899, for an order for stay of the proceedings in suit No. 2721 of 1927 instituted by the respondent company against the appellant firm on 22nd December 1927 in this Court. The application came on for hearing before my learned brother Pearson, J. on or about 16th March 1928, when by his judgment and order dated 16th March 1928, he dismissed the same.

The facts involved in this appeal, shortly stated, are as follows: It appears that on 22nd December 1923, an agreement was entered into between a company known as Gorio, Limited and the appellant firm whereby the latter were appointed distributors of the goods of the Siemens Schuckart Manufacturing Works for Sind and Baluchistan. In January 1925 the respondent company succeeded to the interest of Gorio Limited in its Electrical Department including the benefit of the agreement between Gorio Limi.

ted and the appellant firm. Thereafter here were various transactions between the respondent company and the appellant firm, the agreement in question being varied from time to time. In January 1926, the appellant firm instituted a suit against the respondent company in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind praying for a decree on accounts being taken between the parties. That suit was not proceeded with as a result of a certain settlement being arrived at between the parties, the terms of which were embodied in an agreement bearing date 29th June 1926. Cl. 3 (f) of that agreement ran as follows:

"That accounts so far not settled will be settled as soon as possible and all such matters on which Siemens (India) Limited disagree with the General Electric Trading Company will be referred to Mr. Haug and Dharamdas for final decision and if they also disagree they will both appoint a third person to decide the matter finally."

On 1st October 1927, the respondent company gave a letter of authority to Messrs. Haug and Juerges authorizing them to refer matters in difference between the respondent company and the appellant firm to arbitration in terms of the clause above recited. It is alleged that thereafter there were certain meetings between the representatives of the respondent company and the appellant firm, but no final settlement was arrived at, nor was there an award made by the arbitrators named in the said clause. The appellant firm contended and contends that the respondent company is not entitled to institute the said suit inasmuch as the agreement for reference to arbitration still subsists and as the matters covered by this suit were within the scope of the said submission.

In answer to the application under S. 19, Arbitration Act, the respondent company filed an affidavit sworn to by one Noordea, a Director of the said company which contained among other things the following:

"Accordingly for the purpose of the said arbitration on the defendant firm's refusal to accept any other person in his place, the plaintiff company at considerable expense and inconvenience brought out the said George Haug from Norway to Karachi and I was informed by the said George Haug that several sittings lasting many days were in fact held by the said George Haug and Dharamdas in their capacity as arbitrators at Karachi. I was further informed by the said George Haug and say that during such sittings certain items out of those in dispute were definitely settled and agreed by the said arbitration. At the time the said George Haug came out to India to act as arbitrator as aforesaid he had ceased to be in the employ of the plaintiff company and he was brought out at the expense of the plaintiff company as stated above.

"In order to assist the arbitrators in the matter the plaintiff company at considerable expense also sent their Chief Accountant Paul Juerges from their Berlin office who was in India at the time to Karachi to explain to the arbitrators any matters that they might refer to him. "I was also informed by the said George Haug that the said Dharamdas Lilaram having verbally agreed in his capacity as arbitrator to the said settlements and decisions and to the figures of account therein contained and having taken away certain documents on the express promise that he would return the said documents duly signed by him, he refused to put his signature to any one of the said settlements, decisions or agreed figures.

"Owing to such misconduct on the part of the said Dharamdas Lilaram as such arbitrator as aforesaid and also owing to the obstructive attitude of the defendant firm it became impossible for the said arbitration to continue. I was informed by the said George Haug that the said Dharamdas Lilaram refused to meet him to sit as arbitrator and continue the arbitration. I was also informed by the said George Haug and Paul Juerges that at the meetings which took place of themselves and the said Dharamdas in or about September 1927, there was discussion about the pro- notes, but the said Dharamdas was of opinion that payment under the agreement was only to be made after settlement of all claims in detail and he persistently refused to go into details at the time although pressed for it.

"In the circumstances aforesaid the said George Haug notwithstanding his best endeavours in that behalf was unable to continue to act alone or carry on the said arbitration and the same came to an end. The said George Haug consequently left for Europe about the end, of November 1927 and the said Paul Juerges is now in Burmah and will come back about the end of this month on his way to Europe where his presence is urgently required in connexion with the plaintiff company's business."

The respondent company also filed an affidavit by Paul Juerges supporting the last-mentioned affidavit of Noordea. There is thereafter an affidavit in reply by Dharamdas. At the hearing before Pearson, J. various points were gone into. He held inter alia that the reliefs claimed in the suit were substantially within the scope of the agreement to refer to arbitration, but that having regard to the fact that Mr. Haug had refused to act as an arbitrator and that the arbitrators appointed in this case being two in number who had been nominated by mutual agreement, S. 8 (1) (b), Arbitration Act, did not apply and that there was no machinery, in the events that had happened, to give effect to the submission. Pearson, J. therefore held that the suit ought not to be stayed because the arbitration would be infructuous and he accordingly dismissed the application.

On appeal it has been contended before us by Sir Benode Mitter that the construction put upon S. 8 (1) (b), Arbitration Act, by Pearson, J. is wrong and that there is nothing in the Arbitration Act which prevents the Courts from stepping in and appointing an arbitrator in place of Mr. Haug, and secondly, that the considerations which may arise on a construction of S. 8 (1) (b), Arbitration Act, should not have been taken into account in dealing with an application under S. 19, Arbitration Act.

In dealing with Sir Benode Mitter's contentions it may be useful to set out here under the exact language of Pearson, J. He observed as follows :

"It is to be observed that the reference here is not to two arbitrators one to be appointed by each party to which the provisions of S. 9 of the Act would apply for supplying a vacancy. It is here a case of a mutual agreement to refer to two arbitrators' nomination, that is, specified and named in the clause of agreement itself. The only provision which is cited as applicable to such a case is S. 8 (b) of the Act. Taking that sub-section by itself, it may be that the language is wide enough to cover the present case, but clearly it must be read in conjunction with the rest of the section and the scheme of the Act. In Gopalji v. Morarji (1), it is said at p. 830 that S. 8 (1) (b) only applies in terms to the case of a single vacancy to be supplied by the parties so far, that would be the case here in filling Mr. Haug's vacancy. But the judgment goes the length of saying that clause (b) like clause (a) relates to the case where the submission provides for the reference to be to a single arbitrator. So, Hayward, J., at p. 833 says that it is not open to the Court to interfere where the reference is to two arbitrators to be appointed not one by each party but the two jointly, by the two parties. Again in Russell on Arbitration (11th Edition) in dealing with the meaning of "an appointed arbitrator" under the corresponding S. 5, English Act, it is said at p. 126 that the expression must mean a single arbitrator and not one of the two appointed arbitrators, because in the concluding words of the section it is provided that the arbitrator appointed shall have the like powers to act in the reference and make an award as if he had been appointed by consent of all parties. I am not prepared to hold that the reasoning or the construction of the section given in the above cited case is erroneous particularly because to hold otherwise would seem to make S. 8 (b) in certain cases an alternative procedure to that provided by S. 9, which I do not think was intended."

Now, in this case two arbitrators have been mutually agreed upon and they have been appointed as such by the parties. Therefore S. 9, Arbitration Act, has no application, because the language used therein has reference to a case where the submission is to two arbitrators one to be appointed by each party. Let us next see whether there is anything in the language used in S. 8, Arbitration Act, which prevents the application of S. 8 to this case, having regard to the events that have happened. S. 8 (1) (a) obviously has no application because it deals with the case of reference to a single arbitrator. Turning to 8 (1) (b), there is nothing, in my opinion, in the language used therein which would render it inapplicable to this case. To start with, the arbitrator who has refused to act, etc. is an appointed arbitrator. In the second place, the submission does not show that the place of the arbitrator who has refused to act etc., should not be filled up. In the third place, it is clear that the parties have not cared to fill up the vacant place. Therefore I do not see why S. 8 (1) (b) should not apply. This is the conclusion I come to on the language used in the section.

It is said, however, that the matter is concluded by authority and that it is no longer possible to hold that the expression "an appointed arbitrator" can mean one of two appointed arbitrators. The case that is referred to in support of this proposition is that of Gopalji Kuverji v. Morarji Jeram (1). It was an appeal from the decision of Marten, J. as he then was ; therein he held that the expression an "appointed arbitrator" in S. 8 (1) (b), Arbitration Act, was not confined to the case of an appointed sole arbitrator, but that it could apply to the case of two or more arbitrators appointed by the parties jointly. The Court of appeal (Scott, C. J. and Hayward, J.) were, however, of opinion that S. 8 (1) (b) could not apply to the case of two or more appointed arbitrators. Scott, C. J., observed as follows :

"Section 8 (1) (b) does not apply to the case of independent appointments of two arbitrators. In such case when a vacancy occurs it would ordinarily be filled by the original appointer as contemplated in S. 9. S. 8 (1) (b) only applies in terms to a single vacancy to be supplied by the parties S. 8 nowhere seems to contemplate the case of two original arbitrators appointed jointly by the parties plus a third of the same class appointed by the two already jointly appointed or by the parties. In short, S. 8 only applies to certain cases of failure to appoint jointly. Where choosers should but do not concur the Court is enabled to assist them by the selection and appointment of an individual falling in one of the following categories—an (i. e., one) arbitrator; an umpire; a third arbitrator in the special sense in which the term is used. It follows that in my opinion Cl. (b) must be read with Cl. (a) and Cl. (d) with Cl. (c), S. 8. The Court is not at liberty to take upon itself to select an individual where the selection is by the submission reserved for one of two disputing parties. The Act does not attempt to provide for every case. It only gives assistance in the commoner cases where joint appointment cannot be arrived at. It is said that the present case is not of joint appointment of three arbitrators. That is probably correct but it is not one of the common cases of joint appointment contemplated by the section. It is unusual, except perhaps in references in the course of a suit, to have a triangular submission and the joint appointment of three. In Russell on Awards, Part 2, Ch. 3, S. 3 in the Edns. of 1870, 1882 and 1906 it is said:

"In cases of death, refusal to act, or incapacity of a single arbitrator. . . . a Judge may appoint a new one if the parties do not; and. . . . where one of two arbitrators fails for the like causes, unless the party appointing him appoints a fresh arbitrator the remaining arbitrator may be appointed to act alone. The authority given for this statement is until 1889 the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, Ss. 12 and 13, and after that date the Arbitration Act, Ss. 5 and 6 (S. 8 and 9, Indian Act) which reproduced Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act of 1854. "This, as the pronouncement of the standard text book on Arbitration unaltered through a period of thirty-five years, is a good indication of the understanding of the profession as the scope of these sections."

With great respect I am unable to agree with Scott, C. J., in his construction of S. 8 (1) (b), Arbitration Act. In my opinion the reasoning of Marten, J., is more correct and the construction put by him on the section should be followed. The basis of Scott, C. J.'s judgment is the passage in Russell on Awards: see in this connexion, 11th Edn. p. 126, and the English cases which are referred to on p. 832 of I. L. R. 43 Bombay. If, however, the matter is scrutinized with some degree of care, it would seem that the passage in Russell on Awards was originally based on the words used in the English Common Law Procedure Act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vic. C. 125, S. 12) and has been continued in the later editions of Russell without the change brought about by the English Arbitration Act of 1889 being noticed. S. 12, English Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, is identical in all respects with S. 15, Irish Common Law Procedure Act of 1856 and as appears from the decision of Walker C., Palles, C. B., and Fitz Gibbon and Barry, Lord-Justices in the case of Yeates v. Caruth (2), there were good grounds for holding, on the words used in the English and Irish Statutes referred to above, that where the parties referred all matters in dispute to the arbitration of two arbitrators and one of them declined to act, the Court had no power to appoint an arbitrator in place of the arbitrator who had declined. Walker, C., observed as follows:

"It is clear the case does not come within S. 16, Common Law Procedure Act of 1856, because though the consent was to refer the matters in dispute to two arbitrators, the arbitrators here are not such as are mentioned in that section, viz. "one appointed by each party." Does the case fall within S. 15 of the same Act? "If in any case of arbitration the document authorizing the reference provide that the reference shall be to a single arbitrator, and all parties do not after differences have arisen concur in the appointment of an arbitrator." So far the clause deals only with a case where no arbitrator has been appointed but it next proceeds to deal with cases where there has been an arbitrator appointed. "Or if any appointed arbitrator refuse to act or become incapable of acting, or die, and the terms of such document do not show that it was intended that such vacancy should not be supplied, and the parties do not concur in appointing a new one." This is the branch of the section which is said by the appellant to include the present case. However, I cannot so read it. The words, "such document" give us the key to the true construction of the sentence; these words must refer to the "document authorizing the reference" in the first branch of the clause and that document is a document authorizing a reference to a single arbitrator. So far, therefore, the section only deals with cases where there is a single arbitrator to be appointed, or a single arbitrator actually appointed."

Let us now see what the language of S. 5, English Arbitration Act is. S. 5 runs as follows:

"In any of the following cases: (a) Where a submission provides that the reference shall be to a single arbitrator, and all the parties do not after differences have arisen concur in the appointment of an arbitrator. (b) If an appointed arbitrator refuses to act, or is incapable of acting or dies, and the submission does not show that it was intended that the vacancy should not be supplied and the parties do not supply the vacancy: (c) Where the parties or two arbitrators are at liberty to appoint an umpire or third arbitrator and do not appoint him. (d) Where an appointed umpire or third arbitrator refuses to act, or is incapable of acting, or dies and the submission does not show that it was intended that the vacancy should not be supplied and the parties or arbitrators do not supply the vacancy, any party may serve the other parties or to arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to appoint an arbitrator, umpire or third arbitrator. If the appointment is not made within seven clear days after the service of the notice, the Court or Judge may, on application by the party who gave the notice, appoint an arbitrator, umpire or third arbitrator, who shall have the like powers to act in the reference and make an award as if he had been appointed by consent of all parties."

It is not necessary to pursue the matter further but it is sufficient to observe that the language used in Ss. 5 and 6, English Arbitration Act is different from the language used in Ss. 12 and 13, English Common Law Procedure Act of 1854. As regards the English cases referred to above, the case of Smith & Service v. Nelson & Sons (3), was not a case of named arbitrators at all. In my opinion that case has no application to the facts of the present case. Nor does the case of Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. S. Pearson & Son Ltd. (4), assist the respondent company at all. The only matter for consideration in that case was whether there was refusal or incapacity so far as the arbitrator was concerned. The case In re Baballdas (5), is not really in point. There the submission provided for a reference to three arbitrators. Pratt, J., referred to the case Gopalji v. Morarji (1) which was binding on him, and observed that though it had been decided in the Bombay High Court that S. 8 or 9 did not apply to the case of a reference to three arbitrators, yet if the Court could not give direct assistance by nominating an arbitrator, it could do so indirectly on an application under S. 19 of the Act by staying a suit filed in defiance of the submission.

On all these considerations I am of opinion that the construction put by Pearson, J., on S. (8) (1) (b) of the Act cannot be supported and ought not to be followed. I am not prepared to say that in dealing with an application under S. 19, Arbitration Act, the Court is not entitled to take into consideration the effect which the other sections of the Act may have on the facts of a particular case brought before the Court. I desire to reserve this point for fuller and further consideration. The point, however, is immaterial in view of the final conclusion on the present application under S. 19, Arbitration Act, to which I have come and which is referred to hereinafter. In my opinion there is no substance whatsoever in the point taken by Mr. Page on behalf of the respondent company, namely, that the respondent company have accepted the repudiation of the contract in question (which includes the submission to arbitration) and, therefore in the events that have happened the arbitration would be infructuous and that the Court should not interfere. This point is referred to in paras. 12 and 13 of the plaint filed by the respondent company. In my opinion, the facts stated in those paragraphs do not conclude the matter at all and can have no bearing on matters which had taken place before 7th December 1927.

The appellants, however, are in very great difficulty on this application. It is true that Pearson, J., mainly proceeded on the view taken by him of S. 8 (1) (b) of the Act, but on appeal before us the entire matter is open and we have been taken by learned counsel on both sides through the merits of the application itself. No doubt, the matter is one entirely in the discretion of the Court. The discretion again has to be judicially exercised in accordance with the ordinary rules of law and I am not unmindful of what has been laid down by eminent Judges from time to time that where the parties have agreed to refer a dispute to arbitration and one of them notwithstanding that agreement commences an action to have the dispute determined by the Court, the prima facie leaning of the Court is to stay the action and leave the plaintiff to the tribunal to which he has agreed. It is unnecessary for me to re-iterate the facts in this case once more. In my view the record discloses a state of things in which in the exercise of my discretion I do not feel called upon to stay the suit commenced by the respondent company. I have carefully considered the merits of the present application but in view of the order I propose to make, I refrain from going into the matter in detail and expressing an opinion on Criminal Appeal No. 549 of 1928, Decided on 11th December 1928, from decision of Addl. Sess.-Judge, Faridpur.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Accused applying for copies of statements made by prosecution witness to police officer—Magistrate ordering grant of such copies at commencement of each witness's cross-examination—Defence counsel not filing any folios or doing necessary acts to get copies saying that it would be inconvenient to file folios at that stage and it was no use getting copies at subsequent time—Grievance of defence, that they were not given their rights under S. 162, was groundless.

At the trial the accused applied for copies of statements made by the witnesses for the prosecution and it was ordered by the trying Magistrate that the copies should be granted at the commencement of the cross-examination of each witness. But the pleader for the defence did not file any folios and did not do the necessary acts to get the copies, saying that it would be inconvenient for him to file folios at that stage and it was no use to get copies at a subsequent time.

Held: that the grievance of the defence that they were not given their rights under S. 162 was groundless and under the circumstances it was needless to consider whether the proper time for granting the copies was at the commencement of the cross-examination or at the time when the witness enters the witness-box. [P 183 C 2, P 184 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Accused not applying for copies of statements before Committing Magistrate—Their only right then is to ask trial Judge for such copies.

If the accused have not availed themselves of the opportunity of asking for the copies of the statements during the Committing Magistrate's enquiry, they have no further right under S. 162 than to go to the Judge at the time of the trial and ask him to grant such copies. [P 184 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Scope.

The charge cannot be said to be bad unless it is really insufficient. [P 185 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C. (amended 1923), S. 162—Amended section does not intend that Judge should consider whether foundation has been laid in cross-examination.

Per Rankin, C. J.—It is not the intention of the amended section that the Judge should consider whether a foundation has been laid by way of cross-examination before copies of statements can be granted: (Obiter) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 514, Doubled. [P 184 C 1]

N. K. Bose and Asitaranjan Ghosh—for Appellants.

Probode Ch. Chatterjee—for Complainant.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this there are 10 appellants who have been tried before the learned Addl. Sessions Judge of Faridpur and a jury who heard 27 witnesses for the prosecution and a large number of witnesses for the defence. The jury have unanimously found the 10 appellants guilty of the charges of which they stand convicted. The nature of the case is that the deceased one Nawabali Matbar was a member of certain society (Samaj) in the village and that for various reasons he became unpopular with some of his neighbours owing to social friction showing itself in various ways, extraordinary petty ways to all appearance, but really important from the point of view of the accused and the deceased. The character of the crime alleged, shortly speaking, was this that at 6 o'clock in the morning of Sunday 5th February 1928, when the deceased and certain ploughmen were tilling the field the accused bent upon revenging their grudge came running up armed with lathis and certain small spears to make a determined attempt to cause hurt to the deceased. They were doing this in concert and had a common object in view. That, in point of fact, as so often happens when a number of people band together for such a purpose, one of them Hashu Bepari, accused 5, killed the deceased and two others inflicted grievous hurt upon the deceased, namely accused 9 and 10. Accordingly accused 5 was put on his trial and was convicted under S. 304 read with S. 148. The remaining of the first 8 accused were convicted under S. 147 of rioting and under S. 304 read with S. 149. As regards the second charge of which these persons have been convicted the case under S. 149 is of a very ordinary character. The charge against them is not that all of them set out to commit murder or homicide at all but that they set out with others to cause hurt in circumstances which they well knew rendered it probable that some one or other of their party would go further and would deal a blow to the deceased which would result in his death.

It is a matter of most common experience based on elementary reasons that when a number of people attempt to carry out an object of that kind one or other goes further than he originally intended. I regard the charge against these persons as exactly of the type intended to be covered by the alternative clause of S. 149. As regards the accused 9 and 10 they have been convicted not only under S. 148 and under S. 304 read with S. 149 but under S. 324 also. The objection that has been taken on the part of the appellants to the proceedings in the lower Court has reference to the question whether they were given their rights under S. 162, Criminal P. C. We have not heard the Deputy Legal Remembrancer on this point and I will take the statement made in the appellants' own affidavit. This was a case which was tried after commitment and after an enquiry held before the Committing Magistrate. I shall assume, indeed I see no reason to refuse to assume, that had these appellants when before the Committing Magistrate asked for a copy of the statement made by any one of the witnesses then called for the prosecution they would have been entitled at that stage to a copy of the statements on the terms of the section. No such application was made. The Committing Magistrate finished his enquiry and committed the case and it left his Court altogether. Then it was that an application was made to him and it is conceded that he had no other course but to refuse it. An application was made to the learned Sessions Judge of Faridpur before the case came on for trial. At that time it was by no means certain which judicial officer would try this case. The learned Sessions Judge thought it was a case for the Judge at the trial and left the matter with him. Nothing happened in the meantime but at the trial a petition for copies was filed and after making the order for granting copies the Judge found that the Government Pleader was contending that the proper time to make the order was before the cross-examination of each witness had begun. That was quite true as laid down in the case in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (1). A case to the contrary was cited from Patna which held that copies should be asked for when a witness entered the witness-box and the learned Sessions Judge very properly thought himself bound by the rulings of his own High Court. But in truth and in fact the position was this that copies were ordered to be granted at the commencement of the cross-examination. The order was then made. The position was, therefore, that if it was desirable to see the statements in order to know whether there would be any cross-examination upon them or not, opportunity was given to the defendants at that stage to apply at the commencement of the cross-examination. As regards the present case it is most important to observe what followed, for in my judgment in this case nothing requires to be decided as to the time when copies are to be asked for, that is whether the true view is that the application should be made the moment the witness enters the box or at the close of his evidence in chief.

Let us assume for the sake of argument though I am far from holding so, that the order for the supply of the copies should have been made a couple of hours earlier than it was in fact made. The position then was this that the accused were to get reasonable facility given by the section. They had to file stamp papers upon which the copies could be made. If they did not get their copies in time their duty was to ask the learned Judge in the circumstances to adjourn the cross-examination till the next day or, at all events not to formally conclude the cross-examination in case the statements when furnished might lead the learned pleader for the defence to cross-examine further. What in fact was done smacks too much to my mind of an attempt to make a grievance. What was done was that the pleader for the defence said that it was very inconvenient for him to file folios at that stage and it was no use to get copies at a subsequent time. So he did not file any folios and did not do the necessary to get the copies. That seems to me to put this grievance out of Court altogether. I quite agree that that if in the circumstances the learned Judge had insisted on closing the cross-examination of the witnesses without giving reasonable facilities to the pleader to give his client the benefit that S. 162 confers that would have been a good ground for objecting to the fairness of the trial. In this particular case it is evident to me that the defence preferred their grievance to their copies and I do not think that we are called upon to interfere with this trial and to have it held over again because of that ground. The question has been raised in this Court as to whether at any time after the witnesses were called before the Committing Magistrate the defendant has not the right to apply to the Court to get an order for copy. I am very far from so holding.

It seems to me that in this case the defence had one opportunity during the Committing Magistrate's enquiry to get a copy if they wanted. They did not avail themselves of it. I am by no means satisfied that by any construction of this section they have any further right than to go to the Judge at the time of the trial and ask that officer in that way. If this case had turned upon the question whether the learned Judges, Mr. Justice Chotzner and Mr. Justice Duval were right in the Calcutta case to which I have referred in saying that there must be a foundation laid by way of cross-examination showing that the statements are wanted to contradict the witnesses I should have thought it necessary to refer this case a to Full Bench to have that question decided. As at present advised I am not prepared to accept that as a possible interpretation of this section. I do not think that it was any part of the intention of the amended section that the Judge has to consider whether a foundation has been laid. In my judgment that part of that decision is open to criticism. That question, however, it is unnecessary to determine for the purpose of the present case. Another question of some difficulty is whether the right time to apply for copies is when a witness enters the box or when his evidence-in-chief is concluded. That question again as I have already shown it is unnecessary to determine now in view of the course taken by the learned pleader for the defence.

There is a good deal to be said in favour of the view which appears to be the view of the Bombay and other High Courts that an application is to be made at the commencement of the cross-examination. There is also a good deal to be said in favour of the view that the wording of the section points to the time when the witness appears in the box. Which of these two views is the better is a matter which no doubt needs consideration. For the present purpose it is not necessary that we should endeavour to deal with that question.

The second objection taken in the case was that the charge against 7 of the accused that they were guilty under S. 304 read with S. 149 was bad but it appeared that certain words following the alternative given by S. 149 had not been inserted in the learned advocate's copy of the charge. It is clear that what the accused were charged with and what the jury was directed upon was the question whether the homicide committed by the accused 5 was of such a character that the others knew that it was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. I see no objection to the charge.

It is said with regard to appellants 9 and 10 who were given the additional two years on the ground that they had themselves committed grievous hurt upon the deceased that they should only have been convicted of one offence, namely, of the offence under S. 304 read with S. 149 and not of S. 324, in addition. I cannot say that on the facts of this case the objection is made out but it matters little to the appellant whether they are given five years on one charge and two years more on another or whether their sentences are raised from five years on the first charge to seven years on the first charge. It is entirely unnecessary to interfere with the conviction on that matter. In my opinion they thoroughly deserve the sentences of seven years which have been passed on them.

Coming to the charge various points have been taken by way of criticism. In a case like this where there are many witnesses on either side it is almost inevitable that the charge should be long and it is more than lucky if it is not confusing. It is necessary that the charge should be long because there are many points to be considered and unless the law is laid down fully the labour of the learned Judge is apt to be in vain. The particular charge before us seems to me to be a very good charge. It is logical in method and it is in my opinion wonderfully accurate in detail. If one fastens upon a single point one can always find room for the wish that something more elaborate had been given. It is to be remembered that when each point has been further elaborated the charge has neither become less long nor less confusing. After all the constitution in this matter puts faith in the jury and the charge cannot be said to be bad unless it is really insufficient. I think the main complaint is that in some matters where the learned Judge has correctly laid down the law he has laid it down rather in an abstract way. One or two references to specific matters have been made as to which it is said that there is a suggestion which is unwarranted and to the prejudice of the defence. One refers to the observation that there is no direct evidence of forgery as regards the post-marks. Another is with reference to a witness who says that the Sub-Inspector at another place took a statement from him. Another is with reference to the fact that a defence witness said that a certain man was ill and the fees for the doctor were paid by his firm and that the entries were in the firm's books, which were not produced. Another has reference to one Afi Durain who is mentioned in the first information report and who according to the prosecution witnesses including the first informant came just after the occurrence and was said not to be a useful witness. Mr. N. K. Bose has taken us through all the points in his usual reasonable and succinct manner. I cannot say that they amount to any successful criticism of this charge. In most cases the learned Judge's observation is entirely justified and it is not possible to make out from a plain statement of facts that the charge is bad. I am quite satisfied that this is a thorough and careful charge. In these circumstances the appeal must be dismissed.

Buckland, J.—I agree, but I desire to add a few words with reference to the point which has been argued under S. 162, Criminal P. C. The learned Sessions Judge, to whom an application was made between the commitment order and the trial, in my opinion very properly said that the matter was one to be dealt with by the Judge at the trial. The words of the first proviso to the section, "when any witness is called for the prosecution in such enquiry or trial" must refer to a time when an enquiry or trial in which such a witness is called is in progress. This excludes the possibility of an order being made either by a Committing Magistrate after he has dealt with a case by committing it to the Sessions, or by a Sessions Judge in anticipation. An order may only be made "when any witness is called". The opportunity before the Committing Magistrate has gone and that before the Sessions Judge will only arrive on that point being reached.

A further reason in support of this view is that as soon as a request for copies of the statements is made the Court shall refer such writing, and do so before allowing copies to be furnished. The object of this is to be found in the second proviso to the section, which requires the Court first to satisfy itself whether any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice or is inexpedient in the public interest. Clearly the Court to satisfy itself on a question of relevancy is that before which the enquiry or trial is in progress.

The learned Chief Justice has said that it is not necessary to lay down for the purpose of deciding this appeal at what point the application for copies may first be made, whether directly the witness is called or after the cross-examination has begun. I may, however, add to what the learned Chief Justice has said with reference to the decision of this Court, which the learned Sessions Judge was bound to follow, that it appears to me that there is a certain amount of confusion between what the section says the Court shall do and what it says later as to the object with which that shall be done, which has tended to obscure the question as to the point of time at which an order for copies shall be made under the section.

Whatever may be decided in a case where the correct view to be taken of the section can be authoritatively and finally laid down I can see that with a trial going on from day to day there may be practical difficulties in the way of applying the section without delaying the proceedings or embarrassing the defence. I feel confident, however, that such difficulties will disappear as Courts and practitioners become accustomed to the provisions of this section. In this case it has been sought to derive from such difficulties a somewhat meretricious tactical advantage but in this I am satisfied there is no substance. There is no need for me to add anything more to what has already been said about the facts of this case and I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal No. 484 of 1926, Decided on 5th July 1928, from appellate decree of Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, D/- 18th August 1925.

* * (a) Registration Act, S. 17 (d)— Agreement to lease after measurement of land and transferring possession for facilitating measurement — Agreement does not require registration — Registration Act, S. 2 (7).

A written agreement to grant a lease after calculation of the area of the land and giving the lessee permission to take possession, not for his immediate use but for clearing the jungle in order that the land might be measured is not a present demise of the land and does not require to be registered. [P 187 C 1, 2]

(b) Part-performance — Agreement to lease — Lessee using land without paying agreed rent—Suit for rent—Specific performance not barred then — Lessor's part-performance entitles him to specific performance.

The proposed lessee entered on the land in pursuance of an agreement to grant a lease and not only cleared the jungle but also made bricks for over a year without any other lease. He enjoyed the full the profits of the land without paying the lease money.

Held: in a suit for rent that there has certainly been part-performance by the lessor of the contract and it is a contract fit to be specifically enforced, especially when a suit for specific performance was not time barred at the time when the suit was instituted.

Nanda Gopal Banerjee — for Appellants.

*Mritunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Biraj Mohan Roy—*for Respondents.

Garlick, J. — Plaintiffs-appellants agreed to let a piece of garden land to defendant 1 (respondent) for a period of nine years for the making of bricks. A written agreement was executed but not registered. Defendant 1 entered on the land, cleared the jungle and began making bricks. After he had used the land for 15 months, the superior landlord of his lessors sued for a permanent injunction to prevent the use of the land as a brickfield. He obtained a temporary injunction and it was in force for some 15 months and then the zemindar came to terms with the lessors, and recognized their right to use the land as they liked, and the temporary injunction was withdrawn. The plaintiffs in the meantime had filed this suit against defendant 1 for rent of the land and for selami. They claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 20 a bigha and selami at Rs. 100 a bigha for 8 bighas 18 cottas of land. The defence was that by the terms of the written agreement the rent was only Rs. 15 a bigha and the area only 4½ bighas. It was admitted that selami of Rs. 100 a bigha was to be paid, but it was contended that it was not payable until the lessors should execute a formal lease.

The written agreement was admitted in evidence by the first Court and marked Ex. B, though it was not a registered document. The learned Munsif held that it was an agreement to grant a lease and that the selami agreed on was not payable because the lease had not been executed and that the rent due had been paid. So he dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and contended that by the doctrine of part-performance the defendant was liable to pay the selami agreed on since he was enjoying the land. But the learned Subordinate Judge held that the agreement, being unregistered was not admissible in evidence, that oral evidence of the agreement was inadmissible because the contract had been reduced to writing, and that there was, therefore, no evidence on which to found the doctrine of part-performance. He therefore dismissed the appeal.

In second appeal to this Court plaintiff cites a number of rulings: Harinath v. Promotho Nath (1); Satyendra Nath v. Anil Chandra (2); Upendra v. Umes (3); Sarat Charan v. Shyam Chand (4);

(4) [1912] 39 Cal. 663=14 I.C. 701=16 C.L.J. 71.

Ardesir Bejonji v. Sirdar Ali (5) to show that an agreement which, for want of registration is inadmissible to prove a lease may be admissible to prove an agreement which does not affect the land, for example, an agreement to execute a lease on the fulfilment of certain conditions. Respondents on the other hand cite Sanjib Chandra v. Santosh (6), Hemanta Kumari v. Midnapur Zamindari Co. (7); Elahi Baksh v. Hukum Baksh (8); Champaklatika v. Nafar Chandra (9) to show that an agreement coupled with delivery of present possession is in fact a lease and cannot be proved unless it is registered. The question we have to decide is therefore whether the document marked Ex. B, ought under S. 17, Registration Act, to have been registered, and if so, whether it could be admitted under S. 49 (c), Registration Act, as evidence of a transaction not affecting the land.

The recitals of Ex. B are briefly these :

"We agree to settle mallik garden with you for nine years at a selami of Rs. 100 per bigha and a rent of Rs. 15 per bigha for the making of bricks, and we have received 201 in advance. You will now clear the jungle and erect huts and then the land will be measured and the amount of rent and selami will be fixed and all the cosharers will execute a registered lease within two months and you will give us a kabulyat."

The defendant entered on the land in pursuance of this agreement, and not only cleared the jungle, but also made bricks for over a year without any other lease. The document was therefore acted upon as if it were a lease, except that the land was not measured and the rent and selami were not calculated. A Commissioner appointed by the lower Court found that the area of the land was 8 bighas 2 cottas, and not  $4\frac{1}{2}$  bighas as stated by the defendant, nor 8 bighas 18 cottas as stated by the plaintiffs. It is clear that the document was an agreement to grant a lease within two months, after calculation of the area of the land. And it gave the lessee permission to take possession, not for the immediate purpose of making bricks, but for clearing the jungle in order that the land might be measured. We are therefore of opinion that the document was not a present demise of the land and did not require to be registered, and was rightly admitted in evidence by the Court of first instance. And when the first Court had used it as a defence exhibit and had dismissed the suit because of the terms of the document, it was inequitable to refuse to allow the plaintiff to refer to it in the Court of appeal.

The next question is whether the defendant, having made use of the land by virtue of the agreement, is bound by the doctrine of part-performance to pay the selami and rent agreed on. He pleads that the plaintiffs have not performed their part of the agreement since they have not executed a registered patta. Though the plaintiffs have not fully performed their part of the contract, yet the defendant for 15 months enjoyed the full use of the land and made bricks from it. It was not the plaintiffs who stopped his work. It was the superior landlord who obtained the temporary injunction. And as the superior landlord has since acknowledged that he had no right to interfere with the use of the land, the defendants' remedy for the interruption is against him. We understand that since the withdrawal of the injunction the defendant has been using the land as before. The defendant is therefore enjoying to the full the profits of the land without paying any rent or selami except Rs. 200 or so paid at the beginning of the lease. There has certainly been part-performance of this contract, and it is a contract fit to be specifically enforced. A suit for specific performance was not time barred at the time when this suit was instituted. We have not been given any reason why the land was not measured, by the parties and why a registered lease was not executed. We take it that both parties were equally to blame for these omissions.

The lower appellate Court has found that the area leased to the defendant is 8 bighas 2 cottas, and that the amount paid to the plaintiffs by the defendant was 231 in all. We allow the appeal and grant the plaintiffs a decree for rent at 15/a bigha and selami at 100/ a Bigha for 8 bighas 2 cottas of land minus 231/ all ready paid. But the decretal amount will not be payable until the plaintiffs have tendered to the defendant a duly registered lease in terms of the agreement Ex. B. The plaintiffs-appellants will get

Mallik, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of money on a mortgage bond. Both the Courts below decreed the suit in full. Defendants 2, 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha, 4 uma have appealed to this Court.

There were two points taken before us on behalf of the appellants. First of all it was said that the decree was not sustainable inasmuch as the mortgage bond had not been proved in accordance with law. It appears that at the time of the trial of the suit three of the attesting witnesses were alive and it appears also that the plaintiff called one of these three witnesses and when this witness resiled the plaintiff proceeded to prove the document by other evidence. It was contended before us that as there were other attesting witnesses alive at the time it was incumbent on the plaintiff to try them before he was allowed to prove execution of the document by other evidence. I do not think there is much substance in the contention. As observed before the plaintiff did actually call one of the attesting witnesses then alive and it was only when that attesting witness resiled the plaintiff proceeded to prove the document by other evidence. This in my opinion was a full compliance with the provisions of Ss. 68 and 71, Evidence Act. The first contention raised before us must, therefore, fail.

The second point that was taken on behalf of the appellants has more substance in it. It was said that the suit ought to have been dismissed as against defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha and 4 uma (who were subsequent transferees) inasmuch as they were brought on the record after the period of limitation of 12 years was over. This contention seems to me to be sound and must prevail; under S. 22, Lim. Act, when a party is added after the institution of a suit the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party. It appears that defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha and 4 uma were brought on the record and made defendants in the case after defendant 2 had filed his written statement and this was admittedly more than 12 years after the money had become due and after the statutory period of limitation of 12 years. A considerable amount of argument was advanced on behalf of the respondent to show that S. 22, Lim. Act, could not apply to a case like the present one and a number of cases among which I may mention the cases of Mahamed Ishaq v. Akramul Huq (1); Jaggewar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (2) and Imdad Ahmad v. Pateshri Partap Narain Singh (3) were cited before us. But the point that has been decided in all those cases is that when a person who is a necessary party to a suit is brought on the record after the period of limitation the whole suit must fail. These cases, however, are no authority for the proposition that when a party who is not a necessary party brought on the record after the period of limitation no part of the suit not even the part as regards the party who is brought on record after the period of limitation can fail. On the other hand the case of Mathewson v. Ram Kanai Singh Deb (4) is a clear authority against the point contended for on behalf of the respondent. In this case it has been laid down that S. 22, Lim. Act, does apply to a case even where a person is not a necessary party, but only a proper party to a suit and such a person cannot be added as a party after the expiry of the period of limitation as provided for by that section. On the authority of this I. L. R. 36 Cal. case I am of opinion that S. 22, Lim. Act, must be held to apply to the present case and if S. 22, Lim. Act, does apply to the present case there can be no getting over the difficulty about limitation so far as defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha, 4 uma are concerned without invoking the aid of some of the saving sections of the Indian Limitation Act.

An attempt has been made by the respondent to show that the limitation in the present case as against these defendants was saved by the provisions of S. 18, Lim. Act. It was urged that the plaintiff came to know of the existence of the subsequent transfers in favour of these defendants only after the written statements of defendant 2 had been filed and these defendants were brought on the record within a short time after the plaintiff came to know of those transferees. It may be that the plaintiff had come to know of these transferees only a short time before these defendants were made parties to the suit. But that alone will not do for bringing in the aid of the provisions of S. 18 of the Act. Before the plaintiff could avail himself of the provisions of that section it was incumbent upon him to show that he had been kept out of that knowledge by means of fraud. But in the present case there was no allegation of any fraud of any kind much less any evidence to substantiate such fraud. S. 18, Lim. Act, could not, therefore, in my judgment, be of any help to the plaintiff and holding as I do that S. 22 applies to the case the suit as against defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha, and 4 uma must be held to have been barred by limitation.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed in part. The decree of the lower Court as against defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha and 4 uma are set aside and the suit as against them will stand dismissed. The rest of the decree of the lower Court will remain intact. Defendants 4 ka, 4 kha, 4 gha, and 4 uma will get their costs from the plaintiff throughout. The plaintiff-respondent will get from defendant 2 his costs of this appeal.

Criminal P. C., S. 403. (1)—"Tried" does not necessarily import decision on merits—Acquittal under S. 247 bars further trial.

The meaning of the word "tried" in S. 403 (1) does not necessarily import a decision of a case on merits, but only refers to the nature of the proceedings that were had; or in other words, means that the proceedings in which the acquittal was passed were in the nature of a trial. Therefore an acquittal under S. 247 would bar a further trial under S. 403 (1): 34 Mad. 253, Appr.; 40 Mad. 976; 7 C.W.N. 492 and 7 C.W.N. 711, Ref. [P 189 C 2, P 190 C 1]

Mukerji, J.—The whole question in this Rule is whether an acquittal under S. 247, Criminal P. C. is an acquittal which would bar a further trial under S. 403, sub-S. (1), Criminal P. C. The decision of this question turns upon the meaning of the word 'tried' as used in that sub-section. I am clearly of opinion that the word 'tried' there used does not necessarily import a decision of the case on the merits, but only refers to the nature of the proceedings that were had ; or in other words, means that the proceedings in which the acquittal was passed were in the nature of a trial. I entirely agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court in the case of In re : Guggilapu Paddaya (1), in which it has been pointed out that the non-mention of S. 247 in the explanation to S. 403 is suggestive of this interpretation and that a contrary view would make S. 247 illusory. The authorities bearing on the question have been fully considered in the case of In re : Dudekula Lal Sahib (2). I am also of opinion that the cases of this Court, namely Bishun Das Ghosh v. King-Emperor (3), and Kedar Nath Biswas v. Adhin Majhi (4) though they do not directly touch this question, lend ample support to this view. I would accordingly make the rule absolute and quash the proceedings pending against the petitioners.

Graham. J.—I think the case is clearly covered by the rule of autrefois acquit. It is plain from the complainant's statement that he was merely presenting before the Court the same complaint that he had formerly made and upon the same facts. The previous case having ended in acquittal the accused could not, so long as that order remained in force, be prosecuted again on the same set of facts.

Whether the acquittal was under S. 247 or under S. 253, Criminal P. C. is immaterial because the accused had been "tried" within the meaning of the word in S. 403 (1), Criminal P. C. and the effect of the acquittal under S. 247 is to bar trial on the same facts. For these reasons I agree that the rule should be made absolute, and the proceedings quashed.

(a) Bengal Village Self-Government Act (5 of 1919), S. 64—S. 64 does not apply to all suits but only to those where compensation is claimed for some wrongful act of Union Board done in exercise or honestly supposed exercise of statutory powers.

Section 64 is applicable only in those cases where the plaintiff claims damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the Union Board or its members in the exercise or the honestly supposed exercise of their statutory powers and the notice in the section is meant to give the defendant the opportunity of making some pecuniary amends for the wrong without incurring the cost of litigation. [P 191 O 1]

A Union Board in a village decided to repair certain road and carried out the work of repair. Plaintiffs sued for declaration that land on which the road was, belonged to them but no notice under S. 64 was given.

(b) Bengal Village Self-Government Act (5 of 1919), Ss. 63 and 64—Where S. 64 applies, plaintiff has also to show that his case does not fall within ambit of S. 63.

In cases to which S. 64 applies, even if the plaintiffs have complied with the provisions of S. 64, it is incumbent upon them to satisfy the Court that their cause of action is not within the ambit of S. 63, and if they fail to do so the suit or legal proceeding would fail. [P191 C 2]

"Section 63. No suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against a Union Board, or any member or officer thereof acting under the direction of such board, in respect of anything done lawfully and in good faith and with due care and attention under this Act or any rule made hereunder."

"Section 64 (1). No suit or other legal proceeding shall be brought against any Union Board or any of its members or officers, or any person acting under its direction, for anything done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Board, and also if the suit is intended to be brought against any member or officer of the said Board, or any person acting under its direction) at the place of abode of the person against whom such suit is intended to be brought, stating the cause of action and the name and place of abode of the person who intends to bring the suit; and unless such notice be proved, the Court shall find for the defendant."

"(2) Every such action shall be commenced within three months after the accrual of the cause of action, and not afterwards."

" (3) If any Union Board or person to whom a notice under Sub-S. (1) is given shall, before a suit is brought, tender sufficient amends to the plaintiff, such plaintiff shall not recover. "

It appears that the Union Board in the Village Kunda within the Brahmanbaria sub-division decided to repair a certain road which runs from Kunda to Maslandpur, and pursuant to the resolution of the Board in that behalf the work of repair was undertaken and was carried out as far as the land in dispute in the present suit. The plaintiffs protested that the land in suit on which the Union Board proposed to execute repairs was not a public road but their private property, and the present suit was brought against the President and members of the Union Board for a declaration of the plaintiffs' title to that land, and for confirmation of their possession of the same. The defence was that the property in suit was part of the public road, and did not belong to the plaintiffs, and further that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not served a notice as required by S. 64, Sub-S. (1) of Act 5 of 1919, the suit was barred. It was contended on behalf of the respondents, and found by both the lower Courts that S. 64 of the Act applied to suits and legal proceedings of every description brought against the Union Board or its members or officers, and the suit was dismissed. In my opinion, the decree of the lower appellate Court cannot stand, and the ratio decidendi of the Full Bench in the case of Chunder Sikhur Bandopadhyaya v. Obhoy Churan Bagchi (1) is applicable to the present suit, and concludes the matter against the respondents. In that case, a suit for possession of certain land taken by the Santipur Municipality was filed more than three months after the accrual of the cause of action, and it was contended that the suit was barred under S. 87, Bengal Act 3 of 1864, which is substantially in the same terms as S. 64 of Act 5 of 1919. Garth, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench observed :

" That section, as it seems to us, is applicable only in those cases where the plaintiff claims damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the commissioners or their officers, in the exercise, or the honestly supposed exercise, of their statutory powers. "

" The notice in the earlier part of the section is meant to give the defendant the opportunity of making some pecuniary amends for the wrong, without incurring the cost of litigation. "

(1) [1881] 6 Cal. 8 (F.B.).

" We think that it could hardly have been the intention of the legislature to allow the commissioners (even by mistake) to appropriate the lands of private persons without paying for them, and to hold those lands forever as against the true owners, unless the latter should happen to be sufficiently watchful to discover the aggression in time to take steps to protect their property within so short a period as two months. "

See also the case of Sasanka Sekhar Banerjee v. Sudhangsu Mohan Ganguly (2). I am of opinion that S. 64 has no application to a suit of the nature of that under appeal. In our opinion, however, in cases to which S. 64 applies, even if the plaintiffs have complied with the provisions of S. 64, it is still incumbent upon them to satisfy the Court that their cause of action is not within the ambit of S. 63, and if they fail to do so the suit or legal proceeding will fail.

The result is that the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside, and the suit will be sent back to the trial Court to be heard on the merits in accordance with law. The plaintiffs will have their costs of and incidental to the present appeal and in the lower appellate Court in any event. The costs in the trial Court will abide the event.

Criminal P. C., S. 203—Dismissal of complaint without giving opportunity to substantiate charge is illegal.

A complaint was filed under S. 500, Penal Code. The Magistrate suo motu dismissed the complaint.

Held: that the Magistrate was wrong in law in dismissing the petition of complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to substantiate the charge by adducing evidence. [P 192 C 1]

Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhury, Rainendra Nath Ghose and Bireswar Chatterjee—for Petitioner.

Facts.—Certain imputations against the Indian widows appeared in an English daily the "Statesman" on 12th August 1927. A petition of complaint was filed against the editor and printer A. H. Watson alleging that the imputations were false, malicious, and grossly defamatory and had lowered the complainant's reputation as he had several relations who were widows. The Magistrate sue motu dismissed the complaint giving reasons therefor. A petition for further enquiry into the complaint was dismissed by the Sessions Judge.

The complainant thereupon moved the High Court and obtained the present rule the sixth ground of which was :

"that the learned Magistrate was wrong in law in dismissing the petition of complaint without giving an opportunity to the petitioner to substantiate the charge by adducing evidence."

Chotzner, J.—We are of opinion after hearing the learned vakil for the petitioner that this rule should be made absolute on the sixth ground specified in the petition. Criminal Revn. No. 1095 of 1927, Decided on 9th February 1928, from order of Dy. Mag., Dinajpore, D/- 22nd August 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 192—A Magistrate to whom case is transferred can deal as if he had taken cognizance of it.

A Magistrate to whom a case is transferred by the District Magistrate under the provisions of S. 192 stands in the shoes of the original Magistrate and he has full authority to deal with the case as if he himself had taken cognizance of it. [P 192 C 1]

Mritunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Manindra Nath Bannerjee No. 2—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—This rule was granted on the ground that the learned Magistrate, Mr. S. N. Dutt, not having any jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (c), Criminal P. C., the proceedings instituted against the petitioner are bad in law and should be quashed.

There is no dispute about the facts, which are that one Jaduram was summoned by Mr. Bhowmic, Deputy Magistrate of Dinajur, under S. 420, I. P. C., on the ground that he induced the complainant Kali Charan Deshi, to pay him Rs. 550 on the false representation that money was to be paid to the present petitioner, Hemendra Nath Sen, a Sub-Inspector of Police, in order to secure the release of one Bindha, who had been arrested in connexion with an investigation in a case of murder. The case was subsequently transferred under the orders of this Court by the District Magistrate from the file of Mr. Bhowmic to the file of Mr. S. N. Dutt, another Deputy Magistrate, for trial. The Magistrate after recording the evidence found that the case against Jaduram had not been substantiated, but that there was a strong case against the present petitioner and he, therefore, directed summons to issue against him under S. 161 read with S. 511, Ss. 347 and 323, I. P. C. Mr. Chatterji, who has appeared on behalf of the petitioner, contends that Mr. Dutt had no authority to issue processes and that the only person, who was competent to take such action, was Mr. Bhowmic before whom the original petition of complaint was filed. He further points out that the petitioner was examined as a witness in the case and he says, on the authority of the case of Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (1), that the action of the Magistrate was illegal. It is contended by Mr. Khundkar on behalf of the Crown that the original petition of complaint filed by Kali Charan Deshi was in itself sufficient to justify the issue of processes against the petitioner and that Mr. Dutt, to whom the trial had been transferred, stood 'exactly in the same position as Mr. Bhowmic, who had taken cognizance on the original complaint.

In our opinion, this rule should be discharged. The petition of Kali Charan Deshi makes it perfectly clear that the present petitioner was prima facie instrumental for the demand of the bribe. If Mr. Bhowmic, who took cognizance of the offence, as he did, under S. 190 (a), Criminal P. C., had chosen to issue process against the petitioner, no possible objection could have been taken. Mr. Dutt to whom the case was transferred by the District Magistrate under the provision of S. 192, Criminal P. C., stood in the shoes of Mr. Bhowmic and he had full authority to deal with the case as if he himself had taken cognizance of it. The facts cited in Khudiram's case to which we have referred do not seem to us to have any bearing on the present case.

For these reasons this rule must be discharged.

* (a) Limitation Act, Art. 183—Filing tabular statement under O. 21, R. 11, is making application—Court's order on application is not necessary.

The filing of a tabular statement in accordance with O. 21, R. 11, is an application to the Court within the meaning of Art. 183 in conjunction with S. 3. S. C. Mitter for Kali Charan Dhur—for Applicant.

P. N. Chatterjee for Nobin Chandra Dhur—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is an application made by Kali Charan Dhur, one of the defendants in this administration suit. The decree directed the plaintiffs and the defendants Nobin Chandra Dhur and Susila Sundari Dasi to pay to the applicant Rs. 2,590-5-3 with interest thereon from the date of the decree until realization. The application is for the execution of that decree under the provisions of O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C. and is in the tabular form required by that rule. In Col. 10 the applicant states:

"I, the applicant pray that the said sum of Rs. 2,590-5-3 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realization and the costs of taking out this execution be realized by attachment and sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors to and in the immovable properties specified at the date of the application and paid to him."

The tabular statement was duly filed before the Master under Ch. 6, R. 12, of the Rules of the Court and as the decree was more than a year old the matter fell to be dealt with under the provisions of O. 21, R. 22 and the Master endorsed the tabular statement in this way:

"Let usual notice issue under O. 21, R. 22 (a), Civil P. C."

The notice was duly issued and was dated 8th May 1928. It is to be observed that the decree was made on 8th May 1916 and the notice was dated 8th May 1928, that is to say, exactly twelve years after the date of the decree. Under S. 12 (1), Limitation Act, in computing the period of Limitation, the day from which such period is to be reckoned is excluded. If therefore it can be said that the filing of the tabular statement was itself "an application" then the application was made just within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 183, Sch. 1, Limitation Act.

Section 3, Limitation Act, is first section in "Part 2" of the Act which "Part" bears the heading "Limitation of Suits, Appeals and Applications," so that there are three species of matters which are dealt with in the Limitation Act and the schedule to that Act. S. 3 reads as follows:

"Subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 every suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the Sch. 1 shall be dismissed."

Upon looking at Art. 183 we find that that is one of the articles in the division of the schedule which deals with "Applications" and the heading of the Col. 1 is "Description of application," that of Col. 2 "Period of Limitation", and that of Col. 3 "Time from which the period begins to run." Reading Art. 183 in conjunction with S. 3 the provisions of the Statute relating to limitation of the kind applicable to the present instance may be stated to be as follows:

Subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 every application to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter made after the period of 12 years shall be dismissed.

Therefore it is quite obvious that what has to be considered is whether or not the "application" in the present matter was or was not made after the period of 12 years from the date of the decree.

It was argued by Mr. Chatterjee on the authority of the cases of Monohar Das v. Futteh Chand (1) and Amulya Ratan v. Banku Behari (2) that it is not sufficient merely that an application should be made but that some order should be made by the Court. In my view these decisions do not go so far as to lay down the proposition that the article requires the making of an order in execution in order that the rights of the decree-holder should be preserved, except no doubt in cases where a question arises as to whether or not there has been a revivor within the meaning of Cl. 3, Art. 183. To my mind in order to preserve the rights of the decree-holder it is only necessary that he should make an "application" within the prescribed period of 12 years. On any other view of the matter the result would be to cut down the period of limitation actually prescribed by the Statute, e g., if the making of an application means the actual hearing of a motion by the Court, it follows that the actual period of limitation has been cut down by the length of time required for notice of that motion. There is a decision of the Bombay High Court Venkapaiya v. Nazerally Tyabally (3) that where an "application" is to be made to the Court within the period of limitation prescribed by any Act, it is deemed to be made for the purposes of limitation when the notice of motion is first filed in the proper office of the Court. In my opinion that is the right view of the matter, although I am aware that there are other decisions of this Court which suggest the contrary. There is also a decision of the Madras High Court which goes even further in that it is to the effect that an application to the Registrar of the Court is an application within Art. 183 even though the affidavits supporting the application are filed subsequently. The Bombay decision was in the main based upon the well-known decision of Denman, J., In re Gallop and Central Queensland Co., Ltd. (4). The effect of Denman J's., judgment in that case reported in In re Gallop and Central Queensland Co., Ltd. (4) is that if a notice of motion is given before the last day of any limited time then the application is within the time prescribed. That means that wherever there is a limitation of time prescribed within which one party has to move the Court in any matter in order to preserve his rights, he has safeguarded his position if in fact he gives notice of his motion within the time prescribed, and it is not necessary that such motion should actually be heard by the Court or even have appeared on the list of matters to be heard by the Court within the prescribed period. I respectfully agree entirely with the decision of Denman, J., and with the decisions reported in Venkapaiya v. Nazerally Tyabally (3) and Kuttayan Chetty v. Elappa Chetty (5) to which I have already referred.

Nevertheless having regard to the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and in particular to the decision of a Bench of this Court consisting of Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., and Norris and Piggot, JJ., in the case of Khetter Mohan Sing v. Kassy Nath Sett (6) were I called upon to do so I should feel myself bound to hold that the mere giving of a notice of motion is not of itself sufficient to preserve the rights of the person giving such notice unless at any rate the notice nominated a return day which fell within the period of limitation. I do venture, however, with all due deference to express the opinion that that decision may not be quite in accordance with the law in England on analogous points. But in any event that decision has I think no real bearing on the facts of the present case, and none of the decisions to which I have been referred actually cover the point which I have here to decide and for this reason in my view all that I have now to decide is whether or not Kali Charan Dhur made an application to enforce his decree within 12 years from the date of the decree.

I have no doubt that the lodging or filing of the tabular statement was in itself the making of an application to this Court in the person of the Master who is the officer of this Court designated to deal with matters of this character. In Col. 10 of the tabular statement the decree-holder in terms says: "I the applicant pray" and so on. To my mind it is scarcely arguable otherwise than that the tabular statement is in fact a petition to this Court for the setting in motion of the necessary machinery for the execution of the decree. That tabular statement on the face of it being within time, the Master gave directions for notice to be given to the other side to show cause why the decree should not be executed. Therefore without attempting to come to any definite decision as to whether, for example, the giving of a notice of motion would be sufficient irrespective of the hearing of the motion to safeguard the rights of the person giving such notice of motion, I decide that the filing of a tabular statement in accordance with O. 21, R. 11, is an application to the Court within the meaning of Art. 183, Lim. Act, read in conjunction with S. 3 of that Act. That being so, I hold that this application is made within time and must accordingly be dealt with on its merits.

I am supported in the view that I take in this matter by two unreported decisions of Pearson, J., one in suit No. 610 of 1915 Sashi Moni Daseei v. Dhira Moni Dasee and the other is an insolvency case In re Chaitan Das Sarana.

* Criminal P. C., S. 476-B—Appellate Court must file complaint when appeal is allowed and not the lower Court.

In an appeal under S. 476-B the District Judge found that there was sufficient justifification for placing a party on trial for forgery and directed the lower Court to file a complaint :

Held : that the only person who was competent to make the complaint was the District Judge himself and the order directing the lower Court to file the complaint was without jurisdiction and must be set aside. [P 195 C 2]

J. Camell and Satindra Nath Mukherjee—for Petitioners.

Monnier and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Nripendra Chandra Das—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This rule was granted on the first ground stated in the petition, namely, that the order of the learned Judge directing the Subordinate Judge to file a complaint against the petitioner is illegal and without jurisdiction. The proceeding under S. 476, Criminal P. C., was begun at the instance of the opposite party before the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, and the learned Judge was invited to formulate a complaint against the petitioner under that section. This the learned Judge for reasons recorded in his judgment refused to do. An appeal was taken from that decision to the Court of the District Judge of Chittagong and the learned District Judge after stating the facts said as follows :

"In the circumstances, I am of opinion that there is sufficient justification for placing the opposite party (that is the present petitioner) on trial for forgery under S. 471, I. P. C. The Magistrate after hearing the whole evidence will be in a position to decide whether a charge should be framed or not. Hence ordered that appeal be allowed. The record is returned to the Subordinate Judge and he is directed to file a complaint under S. 471, I. P. C., or such other sections as he thinks fit."

Now the appeal being under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., the only person who was competent to make the complaint was the District Judge himself. The order, therefore, directing the Subordinate Judge to file the complaint was without jurisdiction and must, accordingly, be set aside.

The rule is, therefore, made absolute and the case remanded to the learned District Judge to proceed according to law.

The point taken on his behalf and seriously pressed by Mr. Talukdar is that there is no evidence and that according to the definition of "tout" as given in S. 3, the petitioner procures, in consideration of any remuneration, moving from any legal practitioner, the employment of the legal practitioner in any legal business; or who proposes to any legal practitioner or to any person interested in any legal business to procure, in consideration of any remuneration moving from either of them, the employment of the legal practitioner in such business.

The matter has come before us in revision and we have to see if the order of the Court below is unsupportable there being such absence of evidence as to induce us to hold that the order was passed without jurisdiction or with material irregularity.

We have in this case a resolution of the Jamalpore Bar Association declaring the petitioner a tout. Such resolution has now been made evidence of general repute by the amendment in 1927 of S. 36, Legal Practitioners Act. If this resolution is good and in conformity with the requirements of the law, there is evidence in support of the Judge's order that the petitioner is a tout; but it is argued by Mr. Talukdar that the resolution passed was not duly passed and cannot be validly treated as evidence in the case. The findings of the Munsiff who originally dealt with the matter and of the learned District Judge are that a special meeting was convened for the purpose of considering the matter of the petitioner and out of 43 members of the association 29 members were present and they passed a resolution declaring the petitioner a tout. There does not seem to be any irregularity in the proceeding by the Bar Association; but Mr. Talukdar says that the meeting at which such a resolution was passed was not one of the entire body of the members of the association inasmuch as only 29 out of 43 members were present at the meeting. The law does not require that all the members should be present at the meeting but requires that a meeting of the association should be convened for the purpose of considering whether a certain person is a tout: and if by a majority of the members present at such a meeting a resolution is passed it is to be considered as a resolution of an association of persons entitled to practice as legal practitioners in Court. The Courts below have also proceeded upon certain facts in order to hold that the petitioner is a tout within the meaning of the law. Undoubtedly there is no direct evidence to show that the petitioner received remuneration from any legal practitioner. But certain facts were placed before the learned District Judge from which the learned District Judge has observed that the irresistible inference to be drawn from his admitted conduct is that he is a tout and received remuneration from legal practitioners. In this connexion the learned advocate for the petitioner has drawn our attention to the case of Ugan Prasad Pandey v.

Emperor (1). In that case the resolution of the Bar Committee was held not to have been legally passed. In that case the Bar Association appointed a small committee of seven persons to enquire into the matter of the petitioner in that case and this small sub-committee held that the petitioner was a tout. The learned Judges remarked that such a resolution was not a resolution within the meaning of the law. I am not called upon to consider whether in that case the view expressed there is correct but I am not prepared to say in this case that the view taken by the Judge is wrong. The next point upon which the judgment in that case proceeded was that there was no direct evidence that the petitioner received any remuneration from a legal practitioner. The learned Judge who delivered the judgment had accepted the arguments of the counsel for the petitioner in that case that the mere fact that a person makes it his business to act as general agent and to find legal practitioners for those who want legal aid without being bound as clerk or otherwise to any one legal practitioner does not constitute such person a tout. As a bare proposition of law the argument looks unassailable. But there may be circumstances from which the Court is entitled to draw a legal inference. The Legal Practitioners Act, as it originally stood before its amendment in 1927 made it obligatory upon the prosecution to prove that the person accused receives remuneration from legal practitioners. Even at that time it was held in some cases that this proof may be supported by circumstances leading to the inference that the person accused was in the habit of receiving remuneration from legal practitioners.

It was held by Walsh, J., in the case of Kalka Prasad v. Emperor (2) that it is a reasonable and legitimate inference of fact that if a man is shown to spend the greater portion of his working hours in canvassing and introducing clients to members of the profession, he is not rendering gratuitous service such as a casual friend or acquaintance may do. The learned Judges in Ugan Prasad Pandey v. Emperor's case (1) also did not lose sight of this principle and observed . . . . . while remanding the case . . . . . to the Court below that there might be evidence on the record showing that remuneration moved from legal practitioners, or giving rise to a reasonable inference that it so moved. It is ordinarily difficult for the prosecution by evidence of the legal practitioners to prove moving of remuneration from them and in order to facilitate the proof of such conduct on the part of the person accused the legislature thought it fit to amend S. 36 by making evidence of a general repute admissible against the person accused. There can be no doubt that the Courts below were within their rights to draw legitimate inference from the facts before them as to the probability of the petitioner receiving remuneration from legal practitioners and this is in accordance with the definition of 'proved' in the Evidence Act.

In the present case the facts, as succinctly stated by the Munsiff in his judgment are that it has been admitted and proved by the evidence on both sides that Harendra Narain Chaki attends Courts regularly every day from 11 a. m. to 6 p. m., looks after cases of clients, even pays to pleaders and realizes costs and engages pleaders and realizes also fees for pleaders. From these facts we cannot say that the inference drawn by the Courts below was unjustifiable. The result is that this rule fails and must be discharged.

(a) Bengal Cess Act (9 of 1880), S. 4—“Annual value” includes damages for use and occupation—Payment under kabuliyat for use and occupation is “annual value.”

The expression “annual value” is so wide as even to include damages which the Court would allow to the owner of the land against third persons for actual use and occupation of the land. Therefore, the payment of jama on the basis of a kabuliyat by a farmer of a hat on account of his occupation of the land on which the hats were to be held, and from which he was entitled to exclude other persons, is the "annual value" which is payable for use and occupation of the land. [P 201 C 1]

Surendra Nath Guha and Nassim Ali—for Appellant.

B. B. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State who was the defendant in the suit out of which this appeal arises against the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge of Midnapore affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The suit was for a declaration that the assessment of cesses under the Bengal Cess Act on the property of the plaintiffs on the basis of realizations on account of hats within the estates of the plaintiffs was ultra vires and for refund of the amount of cesses paid under protest. The learned Judge below held that on the authority of certain cases decided by this Court the assessment of cesses on the income derived from the hats was ultra vires and made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for refund of the money paid by the plaintiffs.

The learned Government Pleader contends that the decision of the Courts below is erroneous having regard to the terms of the agreement in the kabuliyats accepted by the plaintiffs with regard to the hats read with the provisions of the Cess Act. The relevant portions of the Cess Act should be stated in order to appreciate the contentions of both parties. The imposition of cesses is made under the provisions of Ss. 5 and 6 of the Act which run thus:

"5. From and after the commencement of this Act in any District or part of a District all immovable property situated therein . . . shall be liable to the payment of a Road Cess and a Public Work Cess.

6. The Road Cess and the Public Work Cess shall be assessed on the annual value of the lands and on the annual net profits from mines, quarries, tramways, railways and other immovable property ascertained respectively as in this Act prescribed."

Immovable property is defined in S. 4 of the Act, but it is not necessary to state the definition for the present purpose. "Land" means land which is cultivated, uncultivated or covered with water and does not include houses or buildings. "Tenure" includes every interest in land whether rent paying or not, save and except an estate as defined in the Act. The definition of "annual value of land" runs thus:

"Annual value of any land, estate or tenure means the total revenue or rent which is payable, or if no revenue or rent is actually payable would on a reasonable assessment be payable during the year by all the cultivating raiyats of such land, estate or tenure, or by other persons in the actual use and occupation thereof."

These are all the relevant provisions of the Cess Act which we have to consider in the present proceeding.

The contention of the Government Pleader is that the property with regard to which the assessment is made is "land" within the meaning of the Act. It is not disputed that if any interest in "land" was conferred by the agreement cesses may be assessed on the income. The controversy is with regard to the definition of "annual value of land" whether the income derived from the hats in this case falls within it or not. Before I proceed to discuss the several contentions of the parties, it is necessary to refer to the cases on which the learned Judge below purported to base his conclusion.

These cases are Umed Rasul v. Anath Bandhu (1), the Full Bench case of Secy. of State v. Karuna Kanta (2), and a case reported in 5 Indian Cases 254. It is not necessary to deal with the case of Umed Rasul v. Anath Bandhu (1) in detail as it was a case the sequel of which gave rise to the Full Bench case of Secy. of State v. Karuna Kanta (2). The facts of that case were these: There was a certain piece of land in the possession of occupancy raiyats within an estate. On that land a mela used to be held for a certain number of days in the year when there were no crops standing. The owner of the estate granted an ijara to some persons called Fakirs permitting them to hold the mela, and an income was derived from the mela. The land was assessed with cesses on the basis of the income derived from the mela. The owner of the estate had to pay the amount. He then brought a suit to recover a share of the cesses under S. 41, Cess Act, from the Fakirs. That suit gave rise to the case of Umed Rasul v. Anath Bandhu (1). It was held there that the owner of the estate was not entitled to recover cesses because the income of the mela was not liable to be assessed with cesses. Subsequently, the owner of the estate sued the Secretary of State for a declaration that cesses were illegally levied and for recovery of the amount paid. That gave rise to the Full Bench case reported in I. L. R. 35 Cal. 82. It was held by the majority of the Judges composing the Bench that the Fakirs, the ijaradars, were mere licensees and had no interest in the land, and therefore cesses could not be levied on the income derived from the mela. It was pointed out that the ijaradars were not given and could not be given any right to the land on which the mela was held. The land was in the occupation of occupancy raiyats and the mela could only be held on it with the leave and license of the occupancy raiyats and if they objected the landlords had no right to put the ijaradar Fakirs into possession of the land in question. It was therefore held that the ijaradars were mere licensees and the money that was realized by the zamindars from them could not by any means be called rent for the use and occupation of the land. That is what was decided in that case.

The case of Suraj Deo Narain v. M.H. Mackenzie (3) on which the learned Judge lays special stress is also similar as regards the facts as there the landlord created a mokrari in favour of a defendant and also granted the right to the wife of that defendant to collect dues for hats within the mokrari. That case simply followed the case in 28 Calcutta 637.

In the Full Bench case observations were made by some of the Judges as to whether the mela or hat is immovable property or not. I do not, however, think that it would serve any useful purpose to discuss that question in the present case having regard to the arguments addressed to us. The learned Government Pleader did not argue that the assessment in question could be made on the amount realized on account of the hats under the last portion of S. 6, Cess

Act, that is to say, as falling within "other immovable property." Sir Binode on behalf of the respondents argued that the expression "other immovable property" must be construed according to the rule of ejusdem generis, that is, coming after the words mines, quarries, tramways and railways it must have a similar meaning as those words, and he supports his argument by an observation of one of the learned Judges, Mookerjee, J. composing the Full Bench at p. 97, Report in Indian Law Reports 35 Calcutta. I have considerable doubts whether the expression "other immovable property" should be construed with reference to the rule of ejusdem generis, because in my judgment there is no connexion between mines, tramways and railways, and you cannot find any other immovable property similar to mines, quarries, tramways and railways. To my mind, it seems that this expression 'other immovable property' was used for the purpose of bringing into the net anything that might have been left out by the previous portion of the section, that is to say, by the words lands, mines, quarries, tramway and railways. It is not, however, necessary for me to express a definite opinion on the question whether a hat is immovable property or not under this Act, as I have already said that the learned Government Pleader, Mr. Guha, did not base his argument upon this part of S. 6, Cess Act.

The real question in this case is, as stated by both Mr. Guha and Sir Binode, whether the grant in this case is mere license or a lease of property. It is not disputed that if any right to the land was granted assessment on the income of the hats could be made, but if it is a mere license the assessment is illegal. I have to refer to two cases cited on behalf of the respondents on the strength of which it was contended by Sir Binode that we should hold that the transaction evidenced by the kabuliati which I am presently going to mention constituted a mere license. The first case that was cited was that of Smith v. St. Michael Overseers (4). There the owner of a house allowed a person to occupy a number of rooms in the house on condition of receiving a certain amount of money and for which he undertook to keep the premises clean, light fires and attend to the same by providing a trustworthy person to reside on the premises to do all these acts. The question was whether the owner was liable to be rated on the value of the premises. It was held that he was, as notwithstanding the right given to a third person to live in a portion of the house he was to be considered as the occupier of the whole of the house. That case to my mind is of no assistance to us in deciding whether the transaction in this case should be considered as a license or a lease. The same thing may be said about the case of Rochdale Canal Co. v. Brewster (5). Lord Justice Lindley in his judgment stated that the transaction pointed to a lease, and Lord Justice Lopes thought that it was a license, but all the Lord Justices were of opinion that the grantor of the right to the third person was liable to be rated as the occupier of the whole of the premises. These cases only illustrate the difficulty under the English Law in determining whether a particular transaction amounts to a mere demise of property or to a license. There are cases in the books where it has been held that the grant of a right to occupy a piece of land for a certain number of days in the year for some purposes may amount to a lease, and on the other hand there are cases where it has been held that the right to erect stalls and do certain other things upon a piece of land is a mere license. I think therefore that instead of trying to find what this transaction amounts to by reference to English cases we should look into the document itself in order to determine what sort of right was conveyed to the grantee.

(3) [1910] 5 I. C. 254.

(4) [1860] 3 C. & E. 383.

This brings me to the kabuliats which were accepted by the plaintiffs with reference to the hats. One of them has been placed before us and we are informed that the other kabuliats are in the same terms. The relevant portions of the kabuliat run thus:—Kabuliat for a term of one year commencing from the month of Bhadra . . . in respect of hatkars of two hats . . . The total area of the site lands of the said two hats being 4 bighas, 5 bis, 1 cottah, bearing a jama of Rs. 252 . . . I . . . do execute this miadi kabuliat for a term of one year in respect of jamas for realization of hatkar to the effect following :

"Having taken settlement . . . of two hatkars in respect of all sales of paddy, rice and various other articles that will be effected on each hat day at any place comprised within the boundaries given below and appertaining to the two hats . . . appertaining to your touzi . . . the total area of the site land of the said two hats being 4 bighas, 1 cottah, 5 bis (the site lands of such permanent shops as there are in respect of which you are realizing rents and that of your kutcheri bari, etc., that now exists and that may be constructed in future which has become your khas are excluded therefrom) and remaining in possession thereof by realizing the hatkar at the rate previously approved by you from the vendors of all sorts of articles at the said two hats from the commencement of the current amli year in 1318, I execute this kabuliat for a term of one year in respect of the hatkar jama. . . . The said two hats shall pass into your khas possession from the commencement of the year 1319 and you shall grant fresh settlements thereof. I have and shall have no objection thereto. If any police case takes place in the two hats abovementioned taken settlement of by me during the term of my settlement I shall forthwith lodge information thereof with the local police and at your office and shall have the investigation made and shall render proper assistance."

Then in the schedule are given the boundaries of the site land of the two hats, and there is another schedule of instalments for payment of rent.

The question then arises whether the jama payable would be the "annual value" of any land, estate or tenure. It is not necessary, as I have said, in the view I take to decide whether a hat is immovable property within the meaning of that expression under the Cess Act. The question here is, was the amount to be paid by the person executing the kabuliat for the "actual use and occupation of any land." It was contended on behalf of the respondents that if no interest in the land was created, although the expression jama, which means rent, is used the money payable would not be rent. That may be so, but what is the meaning of "annual value" of land according to the definition in the Cess Act? From the words of the definition it seems to me that the expression means not only the rent payable but if no rent is actually payable then what would on reasonable assessment be payable by other persons, (i. e., other than cultivating raiyats) in the actual use and occupation thereof. The expression is so wide as even to include damages which the Court would allow to the owner of the land against third persons for actual use and occupation of the land. If I am right in that view then we have to see next whether the person executing the kabuliat was entitled to the use and occupation of the land mentioned in the kabuliat. It seems to me that excluding certain site lands of permanent shops and the site land of the kutcheri bari in existence or which might be constructed in future on land which has already become khas of the landlord, the rest of the land was given possession of to the person executing the kabuliat. It may be that this possession would be exercised only on the day on which the hat was to be held. But still there would be use and occupation of the land. Even if I were to accept the contention of the respondents that the grantee could not exclude the grantor from the land on other days or even on the days when the hat was to be held from going upon the land for realizing his rents from the permanent shops or going to his kutcheri bari, still the payment of the jama was on account of his occupation of the land on which the hats were to be held, and with regard to the portion of the land on which the hats were to be held the grantee was entitled to exclude other persons. That being so, the money that was realizable on the basis of the kabuliat is in my view the annual value which is payable for use and occupation of the land. In my view the assessment was not ultra vires.

The judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court cannot, therefore, be supported. The plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Cammiade, J.—I agree with my learned brother that the preferable view is that hats are covered by the second portion of S. 6, Cess Act. The rule of ejusdem generis cannot apply to the words "and other immovable property" in that section, because the classes of business previously enumerated are exhaustive and there is no room for the application of the rule of ejusdem generis. In spite of that I also agree with my learned brother that hats may be assessed also under the first part of the section. The assessee here is the landlord and the assessment is in respect of the land used for the hat and land is immovable property. The only difficulty that then arises is about the way in which the assessment is to be made. In respect of properties which are to be assessed on the basis of annual value the criterion for assessment is under the definition of annual value the amount of rent paid for the land or which might be paid for the land where rent is not actually assessed. Then arises the difficulty whether rent is actually paid or not in respect of this land. My personal opinion is that the term rent has been used inartistically in the definition of annual value. But even if that were not so, I agree with my learned brother that the farmer of the hat has sufficient control over the land to be said to have an interest in the land for which he would pay rent. Under these circumstances I hold that the assessment has been rightly made and that the suit should be dismissed as ordered by my learned brother.

MITTER, J.

Bir Bikram Kishore—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Rajjah and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Appeal No. 127 of 1928, Decided on 14th December 1928, from decree of 1st Sub-Judge, Zillah Tipperah, D/- 30th June 1927.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 3 (9)—Parcel of land including undivided share is not "holding."

Where a portion of a tenancy includes an undivided fractional share in a parcel of land, it cannot be regarded as a holding. [P 202 C 1]

* * (b) Civil P. C., S. 11—Applicability—Subject-matter not same—Constructive res judicata does not apply.

By a decision under S. 104, Ben. Ten. Act, enhancement of rent was made on the ground of rise in the value of crops before 1898. In the suit under S. 30-B of the Act, enhancement was sought on the ground of rise in value of crops after 1898. The defence opposed enhancement on the ground that their jama was not a holding. This plea was not heard and finally decided in the previous suit.

Held: that even if the question might and ought to have been made a defence in the former proceeding, the matter is not res judicata as the subject-matter of the S. 104 proceeding is not the same as that of the present suit, and the defendants are not barred from raising their defence to the claim for enhancement on the ground of constructive res judicata: 24 Cal. 711, Appr. A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 55; 29 Cal. 252 (P.C.), Ref. [P 202 C 2]

Jogesh Chandra Ray, Ramesh Chandra Sen, Birendra Chandra Das and Santimoy Mazumdar—for Appellant.

Judgment—The Maharajah of Tipperah brought the suit in which this appeal arises for recovery of arrears of rent from the defendants for the years 1332—35 T. E. claiming rents at the rate of Rs. 8 9. He also prayed for enhancement of rent on the ground of the rise in the price of staple food crops under the provision of S. 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act.

One of the defences to the claim for enhancement was that as the lands of the tenancy consisted of undivided share the defendants could not be regarded as tenants of a holding within the meaning of S. 30-B, Bengal Tenancy Act and as such the rent could not be enhanced under the provisions thereof.

The Munsif decreed the claim for arrears of rent but dismissed the claim for enhancement on the ground that one of the lands comprising the jama is held in undivided share by defendants and their cosharers. The plaintiff contended that it was not open to the defendants to raise the contention that the jama was not a holding by reason of a previous decision in a proceeding under S. 104, Ben. Ten. Act, as it stood before its amendment in the year 1898. This contention of the plaintiff was negatived by the Munsiff.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge has affirmed the decision of the Munsif and has dismissed the claim for enhancement.

In this second appeal by the Maharaja it is argued that as the arable lands of the tenancy were not held in undivided shares the tenancy must be regarded as a holding and it is quite immaterial if the homestead land of the tenancy is held in undivided shares. I do not think that it is possible to disregard the fact that a portion of the tenancy includes an undivided fractional share in a parcel of land and, therefore, it could not be regarded as a holding, within the meaning of S. 3, Cl. 9, Ben. Ten. Act. S. 30-B authorizes the landlord of a holding to enhance rent.

The present case is governed by the decision in the case of Binayak Das v. Sominuddi (1) where it was said that where the land was held by a raiyat consisting of entire parcels of agricultural land and an undivided share of a parcel of homestead land it was not a holding and a suit for enhancement of rent under S. 30 of the Act, did not lie in respect of such undivided share. It was next argued that the Courts below have clearly erred in law in not holding that the previous decision under S. 104, Ben. Ten. Act, operated as res judicata and barred the contention of the defendants that their jama was not a holding. By the previous decision it is true, enhancement under S. 30 (b) was allowed and fair and equitable rent was assessed after keeping in view the principles laid down in S. 30 (b) of the Act. S. 104 of the old Chap. 10, ran as follows :

"In any case under S. 104, sub-S. 2, Cl. (d), (1) the officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant. In settling rents under this section the officer shall presume until the contrary is proved that the existing rent is fair and equitable and shall have regard to the rules laid down in this Act for guidance of the civil Court in increasing or reducing rents as the case may be."

The effect of the provisions of S. 104 and S. 107 of the Act, is to give the decision of the Settlement Officer the force of a decree and the matters determined by that decision could only be reopened on an appeal to the Special Judge. When that decision becomes final, question decided in that suit could not be reopened: see Durga Churn Law v. Hateen Mandal (2). The question as to whether rent could be enhanced under S. 30-B because the jama is not holding was not heard and finally decided in that suit, and even if the question might and ought to have been made a defence in the former proceeding the matter is not res judicata as the subject-matter of the 104 proceeding is not the same as that of the present suit. The present suit is for enhancement of rent on the ground of rise of staple food crops long after the institution of the 104 proceeding and the ground on which the present suit is based is different from the ground of the proceeding under S. 104 as the 104 proceeding was based on the rise of price of the staple food crops for a period prior to 1898. In this connexion the following observations of Banerjee, J. in the case of Kailash v. Barada (3), are instructive :

"It is only where the subject-matter of the two suits is the same that the matter can be said to have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of S. 13 of the Code even though the matter was never raised in issue; but it is very difficult to hold that a matter which was never raised in issue, actually in the former suit and which is raised in defence in a subsequent suit in which the subject-matter is different from that of the former suit shall nevertheless by virtue of Expl. 2, S. 13; be deemed to have been not only matter directly and substantially in issue but matter which has been heard and finally decided."

Although these observations of Mr. Justice Banerji have been commented on by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Fateh Singh v. Jagannath (3), their Lordships point out that in the actual decision there is no conflict with established authorities.

For the reasons given above I think the lower Courts have held rightly that the defendants are not barred from raising their defence to the claim for enhancement on the ground of constructive res judicata. The appeal fails and must be dismissed but without costs as the respondents have not appeared.

Jahnabi Ch. Das Gupta and Jogesh Chandr Saha—for Appellants.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the two appellants have been convicted unanimously by a jury, appellant 1 having been convicted under S. 471, I. P. C., that is, of an offence of dishonestly and fraudulently using a document which he knows to be a forged document. Appellant 2 has been convicted of abetment of that offence. The first has been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment and the second to 2½ years. It appears that there was a third accused who had been acquitted and that a rent suit had been brought against accused 2 and this accused 3 in the Court of the Second Munsif at Comilla. Accused 1 by some procedure which I am not familiar with, was a witness in that case and in advance of that trial he filed a kabuliati which has been found to be a forged document. It is a document which purports to show that the defendant did not hold under the plaintiff but under somebody else. The plaint was returned for presentation before another Munsif as it was a Small Cause Court case and, therefore, it was sent to the 7th Munsif who tried the suit and dismissed it. At the trial the kabuliati was not used in evidence. Some time later on the application of the unsuccessful plaintiff the Second Munsif before whom the document had been filed made a complaint under S. 476 against these two appellants and the third accused who has been acquitted.

In this appeal various points have been taken by way of objection to the conviction. First of all, it is said that although there is an appeal against every order made under S. 476 which results in a complaint it is open to the person complained against not to exercise his right of appeal at all and to argue before a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge whether the complaint is a good complaint or made by a proper officer or so forth. In my opinion this contention cannot be too formally rejected. What the Criminal Procedure Code requires is that certain proceedings shall not be instituted unless there is a complaint. Whether there is a complaint or there is no complaint in my judgment is a question which can only be agitated in the manner provided.

The second question is whether this document as it was not given in evidence can be said to have been used by appellant 1 at all. It is said that it was filed as a document in the list of documents filed by this accused. Reliance has been placed on the case of Ambica Prosad Singh v. Emperor (1). We find, however, another case in Emperor v. Bansi Sheikh (2) in which that case has been disapproved of as regards certain particulars. It is pointed out there that if a person puts forward a document as supporting his claim in any matter, whether that document is acted upon by the Court or used in evidence is immaterial for the purpose of constituting use of the document by the party within the meaning of S. 471, I. P. C. In this case the matter rests wholly on this that from some interest in or desire to assist the defence the accused filed a document for the purposes of the suit in advance of a trial. That in my judgment is using a document. The wider the definition of the word "use" the better as the use has to be fraudulent.

The next question is whether it was open to the appellant to contend that as the Second Munsif had only the power of returning the plaint to the plaintiff for its presentation before the 7th Munsif, the proceeding before him was not a judicial proceeding. There are two answers: one is that it was a judicial proceeding, and the second is that it does not matter whether this was a judicial proceeding or not at the present stage of the case.

On the question of sentence no doubt it is true that people are very free in executing or putting forward forged kabuliats and it may be that appellant 1 was somewhat astounded when he discovered that he was sentenced to 4 years' rigorous imprisonment. In my judgment 4 years' rigorous imprisonment imposed on this appellant is not at all heavy considering the nature of his offence.

So too appellant 2 may have been astonished to find a sentence of 2½ years' rigorous imprisonment imposed upon him because he told somebody to file the document. However, these cases should be severely dealt with so that it may be a lesson to other persons who try to file documents of that character and in my judgment the sentence imposed on this appellant is not at all severe. This appeal is dismissed. The appellants who are on bail must surrender to their bail and serve the remaining portions of their sentences.

Criminal Revn. No. 904 of 1928, Decided on 13th December 1928, against order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Dacca, D/-23rd June 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 182 and 438—District Magistrate moved against — Order under S. 182 on the ground that Court outside district had jurisdiction is deemed to act under S. 438.

Where the District Magistrate is moved against any order of a Magistrate under S. 182 and the contention is that a Court altogether outside the district has jurisdiction to try the case, the District Magistrate deals with the matter only in his revisional powers.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 438—District Magistrate sitting in revision—Defence case made out—He cannot quash proceeding but ought to make reference to High Court.

Where the District Magistrate deals with a matter in the exercise of his revisional powers he cannot, under the law, quash the proceedings, but if he thinks the contention of the defence to be made out, the only course open to him is to make a reference to the High Court for final order.

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 438—District Magistrate sitting in revision must give notice to opposite side.

Where the contention on behalf of the defence is that a Court altogether outside the district had jurisdiction to try the case, the district Magistrate sitting in revision, must give notice to the complainant and bring on record all the materials which both the parties may desire to adduce, before he arrives at a proper conclusion.

Judgment.—This rule relates to a case which arose out of an occurrence which, according to the police report and the case for the prosecution, took place in a certain Char called Char Gobindopur in the Sub-Division of Manickgunge in the District of Dacca. According to the defence the place of the alleged occurrence lies in Agsimulia which, the defence alleged, is within the District of Pabna. On the case being started in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Manickgunge an objection was taken on behalf of the defence to the jurisdiction of that Court. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate being of opinion that there was considerable uncertainty as to the local area where the alleged offence was committed made an order under S. 182 (1), Criminal P. C., that the trial of the case be held at Manickgunge. The accused thereupon moved the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca who asked for a report from the Sub-Divisional Officer of Serajgunge within the District of Pabna as to whether the place of occurrence, of which a description was supplied to him, lay within the District of Pabna or within the District of Dacca. The Sub-Divisional Officer of Serajgunge thereupon sent a report to the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca in which he stated that his Khas Mahal Officer knew the place of occurrence well and that Agsimulia Gap Part 3 was within the Mirkutia group of khas mahal and also within the Serajgunge sub-division. Reading that report the learned Additional District Magistrate of Dacca passed the following order in this case:

"I think in the circumstances that I have no option but to act on this report and find that both the Sub-Divisional Officer of Manickgunge and the District Magistrate of Dacca are without jurisdiction. I, therefore, quash this proceeding being without jurisdiction and direct the opposite party to complain to, or move the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge in the matter."

It is against this order that the present rule is directed.

Having heard the parties and perused the relevant papers on the record we are of opinion that the order complained of is open at least to three objections. In the first place it is apparent that the learned Additional District Magistrate was acting under his revisional powers. No application for transfer of the case could possibly have been entertainable by him by reason of the fact that what was urged on behalf of the defence was that a Court altogether outside the district had jurisdiction to deal with it. If the learned Additional District Magistrate was dealing with the matter in the exercise of his revisional powers he could not have under the law quashed the proceedings but if he agreed with the contention urged on behalf of the defence the only course open to him was to make a reference to this Court so that this Court might pass final orders in the matter. Nextly it appears that in dealing with this matter the learned Additional District Magistrate did not give any notice to the complainant and in point of fact the complainant was not heard against the contention that was urged on behalf of the defence. Lastly the learned Additional District Magistrate did not come to any proper finding of his own on the question of the local jurisdiction of the Court at Manickgunge but acted upon the report made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge whose report again was based upon some information supplied to that officer by some Khas Mahal Officer under him. We are of opinion that in order to arrive at a proper conclusion on the question of jurisdiction it would be necessary for the learned Additional District Magistrate to give notice to the complainant and to bring on the record such materials as both the parties may desire to adduce in connexion with this question, and then if he comes to the conclusion that contention urged on behalf of the defence has been made out, to make a reference to this Court for passing such orders.

In dealing with this matter the learned Additional District Magistrate will have to consider also the provisions of S. 182, Criminal P. C., under which the learned trial Court appears to have acted. The rule is made absolute in the terms indicated above. The order of the learned Additional District Magistrate complained of in the rule is set aside and the case sent back to him to be dealt with in accordance with the observations made above.

Even if a tenancy is an utbandi tenancy, still if the Court has decided what is the rate of rent which is payable, or whether the rent is payable in respect of certain lands, appeal can lie against the decision. [ P 206 C 2 ]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 80 (a) and (b) —Utbandi character of tenures continues until order under S. 80 (a) is passed, notwithstanding acquisition of occupancy right before such order.

Irrespective of the question whether occupancy rights have or have not been acquired, the utbandi character of tenures continues until order under S. 180 (a) determining the annual rental with respect to those tenures, has been passed. [ P 206 C 2 ]

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (as amended in 1923), S. 180 (a) and (b)—Addition of S. 180 (a) and (b) under Amendment Act does not interfere with arrangement or custom previously existing.

Addition of S. 180 (a) and (b) under the Amendment Act (10 of 1923) does not interfere with any previous arrangement or custom that might have regulated the rights as between the landlords and tenants. [ P 207 C 1 ]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs landlords and arises out of a suit for arrears of rent on utbandi basis. The defence of the tenants in substance was that some of the lands were patit or khicha or asha lands during the period in suit, that no rent was payable for patit lands and that the rate of rent for khicha lands was 8 annas and for asha lands 6 pies per bigha. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that defendants were liable to pay rent for lands kept patit. The lower appellate Court agreed with the Munsiff.

A second appeal has been taken to this Court by the plaintiffs landlords and the main contention before me has been that even if it were held that some lands remained patit or khicha or asha during the years under claim the plaintiffs are yet entitled to full rate in respect of those lands inasmuch as the tenants have acquired a right of occupancy therein. It is to be noticed that this grounds on which the plaintiffs sought to recover full rates of rent does not find place in the plaint. It is true that the question was raised in the course of argument in the Court of first instance.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned advocate for the respondents to the hearing of this appeal and it is contended that as the tenancy is an utbandi tenancy the provisions of S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act did not apply to such a case and that an appeal is not allowed by the proviso to S. 153 as it cannot be said that there is any decision on any question of amount of rent annually payable. It is not disputed that the word "rent" under the Bengal Tenancy Act includes money as well as paddy rent and although the rent may vary still the Court has determined what is the rate of rent which is payable or as to whether the rent is payable in respect of certain classes of land or not. I do not think there is any substance in the preliminary objection.

With regard to the contention of the appellants that the tenants are liable to pay full rent as they have acquired rights of occupancy, in my judgment, S. 180 (a) (b), Ben. Ten. Act, affords a complete answer. It is not disputed that in this case no order has been made yet under S. 180 (a) determining a uniform annual rental for any land of the tenancy and S. 180 (b) provides that it is only when such an order is made that such lands in respect of which an order has been made shall cease to be held as utbandi lands with effect from the date from which new rent takes effect and the tenant shall hold them as occupancy raiyats from the date of the order. It is said on behalf of the respondents that it is open to the landlord to make an application under S. 180 (a), Cl. (2). I think the view taken by the lower appellate Court as to the effect of S. 180 (a) is right and that the utbandi conditions of the tenures still continue irrespective of whether occupancy right has or has not been acquired in this tenancy. It also appears from the deposition of plaintiff's gomasta, his witness No. 2, that no rent is payable for patit lands in the mouza irrespective of the time such lands are in possession of the tenants. It also appears from the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 1 that the tenants never paid rent for the patit land before the settlement operation. The learned advocate for the respondents supports the judgment of the Court below also on the ground that there is a custom not to pay rent for patit lands as has been deposed to by the plaintiff's own witnesses and that irrespective of the time of the occupation of the lands by the tenant. S. 108 (a) and (b) have been added to the Bengal Tenancy Act by the Utbandi Amendment Act 10 of 1923. I do not think that the effect of the amendment is to interfere with any previous arrangement or custom that might have regulated the rights as between the landlord and the tenant. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that there would be considerable hardship if the landlord is not to get fair and equitable rent in respect of all lands although the defendants have acquired rights of occupancy in these utbandi lands having regard to the provisions of S. 24, Ben. Ten. Act. It is contended, on the other hand, that ordinarily with regard to these Utbandi tenancies the rates are very high. In this connexion reference is made by the learned advocate for the respondents to a case in 3 W. R. Act 10 B. 159 to show that in the district from which this case comes utbandi tenancies are granted at pretty high rates. I am not, however, concerned with the question as to whether the construction that has been put by the Courts below on S. 180 (b) operates harshly on the plaintiffs landlords. The rights of the parties have to be regulated by the law although it may operate harshly on one party or another. I think the Courts below have taken a right view. The appeal accordingly fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The applicant is the purchaser of certain property at a Registrar's sale, and seeks to have the sale set aside and the deposit refunded.

The property in question is No. 48/5, Boloram Dey Street. This was purchased in September 1912 in the name of one Nanibala Dabi, the wife of Mani Haldar. On 22nd May 1922 Mani Haldar and Nanibala borrowed moneys from plaintiff on mortgage of the property. On 10th June 1923 Mani borrowed certain money from one Durlava Sett upon a promissory note. This debt was assigned by Durlava Sett to one Satya Srimani who obtained a decree against Mani Haldar on 28th August 1924 in suit No. 2106 of 1924. On 8th September 1924 Satya Srimani in execution obtained an order for attachment of this property, and on 11th September 1924 the Sheriff attached the property. On 8th Nov. 1924 Nanibala instituted claim proceedings.

On 16th November 1925 the plaintiff filed a suit on the mortgage.

On 12th January 1926 Nanibala's claim was dismissed. The preliminary decree in the mortgage suit was on 22nd March 1926 and the final decree on 27th July 1927. The property was sold to the applicant on 18th February 1928 at the Registrar's sale for Rs. 16,600.

After the purchase an abstract of title was submitted, and requisitions on title were sent to plaintiff's attorney, when the claim proceedings and attachment came to light. It appeared that the attachment was prior to the institution of the mortgage suit but the plaintiff in the mortgage suit had no knowledge of it and the attaching creditor was not made a party, although under S. 91. T. P. Act, he is entitled to redeem, and under O. 34, R. 1 all persons having an interest in the right of redemption must be joined as parties.

Consequently it is said that the title is bad and the purchaser entitled to reject it, because the attaching creditor can at any time come in and redeem. To this it is said that the only reason for setting aside a sale under O. 21, R. 91 of the Code is that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, and that O. 34, R. 1 is subject to the other provisions of the Civil Procedure Code including those that a suit is not to be dismissed because of a nonjoinder of parties : see Har Chandra v. Mahmed (1). To which is added the argument that he is a bona fide purchaser and cannot be disturbed, so that he has suffered no prejudice: Rewa Mathon v. Ram Kishen (2).

The sale, however, was held not under the Civil Procedure Code but under Ch. 27 of the Rules and the conditions of sale framed thereunder. These are the conditions under which the purchase was made and the purchaser is entitled to refuse if he is not given a clear title. If there is an attachment subsisting from before suit giving the creditor a right of redemption, which fact is only disclosed after purchase, I think the purchaser is entitled to reject the title and have the sale set aside and his deposit returned. I make the order in terms of the summons.

S. N. Banerji (Jr.) and J. C. Hazra—for Defendant.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff company is in liquidation and is represented by the Official Liquidator. By a contract made in July 1925 it was agreed inter alia that the plaintiff company should act as commission agents for the defendant firm in the purchase and sale of hessian and gunnies and that the defendant firm would indemnify the plaintiff company against all losses in respect of such transactions. Pursuant thereto, on or about the 2nd December 1925, the plaintiff company purchased certain hessian from one Maliram Ramjidas, which the defendant firm failed to pay for or take delivery of, with the result that the goods were resold by the vendor at less than the contract price, and he has claimed the balance from the plaintiff company. Consequently the plaintiffs now seek to recover this sum from the defendants under the aforesaid indemnity, in addition to a further sum for commission which otherwise they would have received. The defendants contend, firstly, that the plaintiffs have never become liable to the vendor, because they acted only as agents for disclosed principals, namely, the defendant firm, and therefore no right to indemnity has arisen. This argument seems to rest upon a misapprehension of fact. The plaintiffs purchased through a broker as principals and not as agents which becomes evident upon perusal of the bought and sold notes. Consequently they are liable to the vendor for breach of the contract of sale.

Secondly, the defendants contend that inasmuch as it is admitted that the plaintiffs have not actually made any payment to the vendor in respect of their liability to him, they are not at present entitled to any sum on account of the aforesaid right of indemnity. In support of this contention their learned counsel has referred to the case of In re Richardson. In re Richardson, Ex parte the Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital (1) and especially to the observations therein of Fletcher Moulton, L. J. at p. 712 as follows :

" Suppose A has a claim upon B, but in respect of that claim, B has a right of indemnity from C. B goes bankrupt. Is B's trustee in bankruptcy in a position in which he can force C to pay the amount of the claim to him and then can use the money so obtained for distribution amongst the creditors generally, whereas he only pays a dividend upon the claim which A has against the bankrupt?

"If you seek guidance in the matter from common law, there is no doubt whatever that it went on this principle. It would not help a man to make a profit out of what was merely an indemnity. If, for instance, B was bound to pay a sum to A and C was bound to indemnify B, which is the case before us, then B could not sue C unless he could aver payment to A."

But the learned Lord Justice was there expounding the doctrine of the common law, which he recognized was different to the rule in equity. Moreover in that case the right of indemnity did not arise from contract but from a trust and the learned Judge goes on to say at p. 714:

"It would not be right for a trustee to obtain money from this right to be indemnified against payments made to the head creditor when he not only has not made those payments but comes here to say that he does not intend so to do. Therefore I come to the conclusion that, as a general principle, an indemnity like this can be used by the trustee only for the purpose of bringing about payment to the head creditor of the claim against which he is indemnified."

These distinctions were drawn also by Cozens-Hardy, M. R. at p. 709, where he says:

"In the first place this is not the case of a contractual right of indemnity. It is merely an equitable right which every trustee has to be indemnified by his cestui que trust. It is a right which the common law would not in any way have recognized. Equity has always taken a wider and more liberal view of these rights of indemnity than the old Common Law Courts did. It is settled at common law that, given a contract of indemnity, no action could be maintained until actual loss had been incurred. The common law view was first pay and then come to the Court under your agreement to indemnify. In equity that was not the view taken. Equity has always recognized the existence of a larger and wider right in the person entitled to indemnity. He was entitled, in a Court of Equity, if he was a surety whose liability to pay had become absolute to maintain an action against the principal debtor and to obtain an order that he should pay off the creditor and relieve the surety. Another way in which the indemnity was often worked out in the Court of Chancery was by ordering a fund to be set a part to meet the liability as and when it arose. So that in the view of the Court of Equity it was not necessary for the person entitled to the indemnity to be ruined by having to pay the full amount in the first instance. He had full power to take proceedings under which that fate might be averted, and he might substantially protect himself and secure his position by coming to the Court."

Further, Buckley, L. J. says at p. 715:

"Indemnity is not necessarily given by repayment after payment. Indemnity requires that the party to be indemnified shall never be called upon to pay . . . ."

In Richardsons case (1) it was held that the sum recovered by virtue of the indemnity must be applied exclusively in paying that debt against which the debtor was entitled to be indemnified. The reason given for this by Buckley, L. J. was that if such sum were distributed among the creditors generally, the creditor whose claim the debtor was indemnified against would only get a dividend and would have the right to a further dividend if further assets came in; against this claim, the debtor would have no right of indemnity left, and, therefore, his indemnity against such creditor would not be complete, as it had been intended to be. And the Master of the Rolls at p. 711 says as follows:

"The respondent says: 'This right to an indemnity which the bankrupt as trustee had against his cestui que trust is property which vests in me as his trustee in bankruptcy, and I am bound to apply that like all other assets of the bankrupt for the benefit of all the creditors.' But is that quite so? I cannot think it is. If and when he pays the amount of the debt he will have a right to treat the money, which he can then sue for from the person who is bound to indemnify, as part of the estate, but unless and until he pays I fail to see how it can be in accordance with justice and common fairness that he should be allowed to augment the estate of the bankrupt in a way which results in this, that the greater the liability the greater will be the advantage to the estate."

In my opinion, however, a sounder reason appears in the next paragraph, viz:

"The trustee cannot be allowed to say: 'I will take the money recovered under my right of indemnity against the claim of St. Thomas's Hospital and will apply it, not towards satisfying the claim of the hospital in the way which the indemnity implies, but as part of the general assets, and I will give no effect whatever to the indemnity except so far as the hospital come in and prove for their claim in the bankruptcy.' To allow that would be to allow a trustee to make a profit out of his position as trustee."

This case of Richardson (1) and especially the observations of Fletcher Moulton, L. J. were adversely criticized by Scrutton, J. in the Liverpool Mortgage Insurance Co's case (2), which I will deal with hereafter.

In Lacey v. Hill (3) Sir George Jessel M. R. said:

(2) [1914] 2 Ch. 617=84 L. J. Ch. 1=30 T. L. R. 616=58 S. J. 704=111 L. T. 817.

(3) [1874] 18 Eq. 182 (191).

"Last of all it is said this is a liability as distinguished from an actual payment, and that the agent or person entitled to be indemnified has no remedy. Whatever may be the case at law (as to which I say nothing, because it is not necessary), it is quite plain that in this Court any one having a right to be indemnified has a right to have a sufficient sum set apart for that indemnity. It is not very material to consider whether he is entitled to have that sum paid to him, or whether it must be paid direct over to the creditor. If the creditor is not a party, I believe that it has been decided that the party seeking indemnity may be entitled to have the money paid over to him."

And in British Union and National Insurance Co. v. Rawson (4), Pickford, L. J. says :

"It has been stated in several cases that at common law an indemnity is confined to protecting the indemnified against actual loss and not against liability, for example, In re Perkins (5) though this was doubted by Scrutton, J. in In re Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society (2) on the authority of Ashdown v. Ingamells (6) However this may be, the indemnity is not so confined in equity (see Lacey v. Hill (3) and the two cases above mentioned), and in equity the indemnified may call upon the indemnifier to pay the debt either to him or to the principal creditor before having paid himself, and if paid to him the indemnifier has no concern with what he does with the money."

And Warrington, L. J. at p. 486 says :

"Moreover, I think this decision follows logically on the manner in which Courts of Equity had given effect to contracts of indemnity. In many cases they had ordered the indemnifier to pay the debt against which the indemnity had been given though nothing had been paid by the person indemnified. Cruse v. Paine (7) is an example. Money has even been ordered to be paid by the indemnifier to the indemnified himself in respect of moneys for which he was liable but which he had not paid. Evans v. Wood (8) is an example and shows that Sir George Jessel, M. R. was not mistaken in saying, as he did in Lacey v. Hill (3) that if the creditor is not a party, 'I believe that it has been decided that the party seeking indemnity may be entitled to have the money paid over to him.' The more recent cases of In re Richardson (1) and In re, Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society (2) are in accordance with this view."

In In re Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society, Ltd. Liverpool Mortgage Insurance Co's. case (2), Buckley, L. J. says :

"The equitable doctrine is that the party to be indemnified can call upon the party bound to indemnify him specifically to perform his obligation, and to pay him the full amount which the creditor is entitled to receive, and that whether having received it he applies it in payment of that creditor or not is a matter with which the party giving the indemnity is not concerned. In such a case the party indemnified is entitled to receive 20s. in the pound, and, having got it, to deal with it as he thinks proper. The case is otherwise where the party giving the indemnity is concerned with the application of the money which he pays. This was the case in In re, Richardson (1). The wife who was bound to indemnify was there concerned in seeing that the money which she paid went to the lessor so as to relieve the property of which she was beneficial owner from the consequences of non-payment of rent and damages for breach of covenant. In Cruse v. Paine (7) the stock jobbers were interested in seeing that the amount which they provided was applied in discharging the calls upon the shares. In In re Perkins (5) the executors of assignee No. 2 were interested in the application of that which they had to pay in discharging the obligations under the lease. But here the company are not interested in the question whether the amount which they pay does or does not go to the debenture-holders. The case is that which is put in Carr v. Roberts (9) where both Littledale, J. and Patteson, J., at the conclusion of their judgments point out that it is the duty of the defendant to pay the whole amount, and it makes no difference whether it is applied in discharge of the debt, or whether the plaintiff, having recovered it, does not make a proper use of it."

And Kennedy, L. J., says at p. 638 :

"There appears to me to be authority for holding that, in the view of a Court of Equity to indemnify does not merely mean to reimburse in respect of moneys paid, but (in accordance with its derivation) to save from loss in respect of the liability against which the indemnity has been given. See Wright, J., in Wolmershausen v. Gullick (10), citing Lord Lindley's work on Partnership, 5th Edition, pp. 374, 375. As Neville, J., points out in the course of his judgment in this case Liverpool Mortgage Insurance Co's. case (11), if it be held that payment is a condition precedent to recovery, the contract may be of little value to the person to be indemnified, who may be unable to meet the claim in the first instance."

And again, at p. 639 :

"This being that which may be called the normal position, is it altered by the fact of the insolvency and liquidation of the society? It is contended on behalf of the company that it is ; that, inasmuch as the debenture-holders will not be able to enforce against the society payment in full of the amount due to them from the society, but only payment of a dividend upon their proof in the liquidation for that amount, the company, so far as the indebtedness to the debenture-holders as distinct from costs and expenses is concerned, will satisfy its contractual obligation to the society if it pays only the amount of that dividend. This question might have arisen on the facts stated in the report of that case in In re, Eddystone Marine Insurance Co. (12), but it does not appear to have been argued by counsel or dealt with by the learned Judge. I do not think that the contention of the respondents is sound. How the person who receives payment of a sum of money under a contract of insurance or re-insurance, or, I will add, of indemnity, deals with that sum is, in general and apart from special considerations, no concern of the party who, in fulfilment of his contract, has made the payment to him."

"I desire only, in conclusion, to refer to the case In re Richardson (1), which my brother Neville seems to treat as an authority for the view which he has taken of the present case. It appears to me that we can decide the present question in favour of the society without differing from the decision of the Court of appeal, in that case. The circumstances were peculiar. The husband's right of indemnity, upon which the wife was sued in an action in which the trustee in bankruptcy of her husband's estate and the husband's landlord were joint plaintiffs was not a contractual right, but an equitable obligation arising from the relation of cestui que trust and trustee which existed between wife and husband ; and it was held by the Court of appeal that the husband's trustee in bankruptcy could avail himself of the husband's right of indemnity only for the purpose of passing on the money, which his wife paid by way of compromise in the action, to the landlord, his co-plaintiff, who was the principal (or ultimate) creditor. To hold otherwise, said the Master of the Rolls, would be to allow a trustee to make a profit out of his position as trustee. In the present case the right to payment upon which the society is insisting depends upon an express contract, whether of insurance or re-insurance, for the payment in a certain event of a sum of money. The debenture-holders are not parties to these proceedings. There is no bond of connexion between the company and the debenture-holders. The company has no sort of interest in seeing how the money due from the company to the society is applied by the society."

And Lord Justice Scrutton at p. 650 says :

Neville, J., thought himself bound by the decision in In re Richardson (1), to hold that the society could not recover from the insurance company more than they had actually paid, but could call upon the insurance company to pay off the debenture-holders. The latter point, however, he said was not before him; and it was not in the original summons. The facts in In re Richardson (1), were remarkable and peculiar. Richardson, the husband, was twice bankrupt. He was also lessee of some properties from St. Thomas's Hospital and held them as trustee for his wife under circumstances explained in Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital v. Richardson (1).

(12) [1892] 2 Ch. 423=61 L. J. Ch. 362=7 Asp. M. C. 167=40 W. R. 441=66 L. T. 370.

Between his first and second bankruptcy the landlords got judgment against him for arrears of rent, damages for non-repair, and costs, and he then went into bankruptcy. The Court of bankruptcy gave leave to the landlords to join with the trustee in an action against the wife as cestui que trust. I understand how the husband and his trustee could ask to be indemnified by the wife. I do not understand and how the landlords had any direct claim against the wife to the sum claimed. However, the action never came to trial, for the wife paid £ 520 to the two plaintiffs in compromise of a claim for £ 711. Then the question arose who was to have the £ 520, the trustee for the general body of creditors, or the landlords, against whose claim the husband was to be indemnified, and the Court of appeal gave the money to the landlords. But the Master of the Rolls stated that it was not the case of a contractual right of indemnity" but of the "equitable right which every trustee has to be indemnified by his cestui que trust." The case did not decide that the trustee could not recover till he paid, and only what he paid. He had in fact paid nothing and got £ 520 by consent. The authorities on insurance were not cited to the Court, which was not dealing with any questions of re-insurance, and while Fletcher Moulton, L. J., made some very general statements as to the common law right of indemnity, they were not, as I read the decision, necessary for it' and if I understand the decision of the Court of appeal in Ashdown v. Ingamells (6), were contrary to the common law rules therein laid down. In Ashdown v. Ingamells (6) A agreed for valuable consideration to pay the trade debts of B ; he did not do so, and B was forced into liquidation by his trade creditors, whose proof for £ 1750 was admitted. The trustee of B sued A for damages, and it was replied that as B's estate would only have to pay a nominal dividend there were no damages. Huddleston B agreed with this contention, but the Court of appeal reversed him. They held that the insolvent if solvent, would have recovered the full amount, whether it was a contract to indemnify or pay was immaterial, and that the trustee could recover what the bankrupt could, if solvent, have recovered, without regard to whether the estate had paid or not. I do not understand how this supports the view of Neville J., or justifies the general observations of Fletcher Moulton, L. J."

Now the present case seems to me to fall in the category of those in which the party giving the indemnity is concerned with the application of the money which he pays. The defendants may be liable as undisclosed principals, and it would be a most unjust result if after paying the full amount claimed in this case, of which sum the vendor would receive only a dividend, they were called upon to pay a further sum to the vendor, to make up the balance due on the contract made by their agent on their behalf.

Therefore there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff company for two sums of Rs. 7,175-8-6 and Rs. 224-4-0 and costs with a direction that the sum of Rs. 7,175-8-6 be paid by the Official Liquidator to Maliram Ramjidas in settlement of his claim.

RANKIN, C. J., BUCKLAND AND MUKERJI, JJ.

In the matter of—Turner Morrison & Co. Ltd.

Reference under Income-tax Act, Decided on 16th May 1928.

* * Income-tax Act, S. 4 (3) (7)—Compensation for abrupt loss of office as managing agents is "receipt arising from business" and liable to levy of income-tax.

The assessee company were the managing agents of another company, which, by reason of the resolution to wind up, paid money to the assessee company as compensation for their loss of office as managing agents of the company.

Held: that the compensation, thus given, was "receipt arising from business" and was not exempted from income-tax. [P 213 C 2]

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, has stated to this Court for its opinion the question whether a certain sum, Rs. 2½ lakhs, received by the assessee is exempt from taxation under S. 4, sub-S. 3, Cl. 7, Income-tax Act, 1922. The sum in question is a sum which was voted to the assessee by the shareholders of a company called the Cossipur Sugar works Ltd. It appears that that company was passing a resolution for voluntary winding up. A firm which had previously carried on the business now carried on by the assessee had been nominated by the Articles of Association of this company as their Managing Agents. No time was fixed throughout which they were to be the Managing Agents and no remuneration was settled for the office; but in point of fact, the firm and afterwards the company, namely, the present assessee acted as the Managing Agents and during certain years which are mentioned in the letter of Reference, received about half a lakh of rupees annually for their trouble. Now the business was coming to an end. The Cossipur Sugar works Ltd. was being wound up and the Resolution passed by the share holders was that an amount of 2½ lakhs of rupees was to be paid to Messrs. Turner Morrison and Co. Ltd. as compensation for their loss of office as Managing Agents of the company.

The question which we have to decide is whether or not that sum which was paid to the assessee is a receipt not being a receipt arising from business of the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, which is of a casual and non-recurring nature and is not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee. The Commissioner of Income-tax is of opinion that it cannot be predicated that it was not a receipt arising from business. I am of the same opinion.

We are dealing here with two companies. It is quite true that the assessee company was a shareholder of the Cossipur Sugar Works Ltd. One company was not only making a large payment to the other company but stated that the reason of it was "as compensation for their loss of office as Managing Agents." We are not, therefore, considering a personal gift to a friend, and cases of that class may be put on one side.

It has been contended before us that, in view of the fact that the Managing Agency of the Cossipur Sugar Works Ltd. came to an end by reason of the resolution to wind up, the payment of compensation for the loss of office cannot be a payment or receipt arising from business. Now, that contention has been urged upon us mainly on the basis of certain English cases which are addressed to a very different state of the law. The problem before the English Courts in the cases which have been cited before us was whether or not the payment in question was a perquisite of an office or employment. The scheme of the Indian Act is different. S. 4 sets out, in the first place, certain forms of income which are not to be exposed to income-tax at all; and it is in that connexion that Cl. (7), sub-S. (3), is enacted. When we come to the subsequent section, we find that these sections beginning with S. 6 deal with incomes under certain heads specified by the statute. S. 6 lays down these heads and the following sections deal with each of those six heads. When we come to S. 10 we find that tax is payable under the head of "business" in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by the assessee; and S. 12 which deals with the residuary heading "other sources" is expressed in this way: the tax shall be payable in respect of "income, profits and gains of every kind and from every source to which this Act applies (if not included under any of the preceding heads)."

If, therefore, a payment comes under Cl. (7), Sub-S. (3), S. 4, it is not covered by S. 12 at all. In my judgment we have to take the words of Cl. (7) by themselves. We are not concerned for this purpose with the wording of S. 10. We are vitally concerned with the wording of Cl. (7) of the third subsection of S. 4. Whether or not an amount is profit or gain of any business is one question; whether it is "a receipt arising from business" is another question. We are concerned with the latter.

Now the English cases go not upon any similar test. They go upon the question whether a certain receipt is a perquisite of an office. If it is not a perquisite of an office or a profit of business or trade, then it is not taxable. Consequently, the class of cases, known as 'Easter offering' cases, e. g., Herbert v. Mequade (1) and Turner v. Cuxson (2), are not, in the least, in point. In one case, it was held that the person got the money because he was the parson, therefore, it was a perquisite of the office. In the other case, it was held that, although the curate would not have got the money unless he had been the curate of the parish, still he got it as a testimonial for his work and not because he was curate. In the same way, in the case of Cowan v. Seymour (3) the question was whether or not the voluntary payment accrued to the person by reason of his office. That was the case of a person who had acted as the secretary of a company. He was given what was called a testimonial. In view of the fact that it was a testimonial, it was held that it was not a perquisite of the office which had come to an end. Similar considerations were canvassed in the 'Cricketer's case' [Seymour v. Reed (4)] and in the Jockey's case [Wing v. O'Connell (5)].

Now, in the case before us, we are not considering whether Messrs. Turner Morrison and Co. Ltd. received this sum of money as a perquisite of an office. We are enquiring whether they received this sum of money as a receipt arising from business. They are a company that have several—it may be many—managing agencies. This is found as a fact by the Commissioner of Income-tax. They were given this sum of money because, without notice to them, in the middle of the year, one of their managing agencies was being brought to a close. In these circumstances, it was thought right to give them this moment by way of compensation for their sudden dismissal. In my judgment, it is impossible to say that the receipt is not a receipt arising from business and that is the statutory test which in this country has to be applied. It was not contended before the Commissioner that this case, if it did not come under S. 10, would not apart from this exemption clause, be hit by S. 12. We are not concerned, therefore, to find yea or nay whether Rowlatt, J.'s view is right or not in the case of Seymour v. Reed i. e., whether the payment for the loss of the managing agency would be a profit of the business. If it does not come under S. 10, then it comes under S. 12. And the observation in the Cricketer's case that such windfall as was there before the house was not income does not avail in this case. There is no doubt upon the Indian Act that the payment in the present case is income within the meaning of S. 12 unless it is saved by S. 4 (3) (7).

In these circumstances, it seems to me that the Commissioner of Income-tax was right in deciding that the exemption relied on was of no use for the assessee and that income-tax was rightly assessed.

Costs must be paid by the assessee.

appeal was presented out of time and the appellants (respondents before us) obtained a rule calling upon their opponents to show cause why the appeal should not be registered though filed out of time.
The case made was that there had been a miscalculation of the time by the vakil acting in the matter of the presentation of the second appeal and that, in the circumstances, this amounted to a sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, Limitation Act. The rule came on for hearing before C. C. Ghose, J., and Buckland, J., who differed in opinion. Buckland, J., would have discharged the rule but C. C.
Ghose, J., being the senior Judge, made the rule absolute and permitted the appeal to be filed and registered. From this order an appeal has been taken under Cl. 15, Letters Patent, and at the hearingbefore us the competence of this appeal has been objected to on the ground that the decision of C. C. Ghose, J., was not a judgment within the meaning of that clause.An opinion has been judicially expressed to the effect that the term "judgment" includes any decision or determination affecting the rights or interests of any suitor or applicant and that it is impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from: per Bittleston, J., in De Souza v. Coles (1).
In this Court, however, the contrary view has been well-settled. The well-known definition of Couch, C. J., defines judgment as a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability: *The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta
v. Oriental Gas Co.* (2); but in more than one recent case it has been stated that this definition is not exhaustive.The correct technical use of the word 'judgment' as distinct from 'order' was considered in England in the case of Ex parte Chinery (3), and Onslow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (4). According to these decisions a judgment is a decision obtained in an action and every other decision is an order. These cases were referred to with approval by the Judicial Committee and applied to the construction of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court in Tata Iron and Steel Co. v. Chief Revenue Authority (5).
In view of the use of the word 'order' in Cl. 15, of our Letters Patent as they now stand, it may be doubted whether for the present purpose the correct technical use of the word 'judgment' in England is a safe guide to the meaning of the clause. It was apparently upon some such principle, however, that the case of Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (6), was decided. In that case the senior Judge of a Division Bench had refused to extend the time for presenting an appeal under S. 5, Limitation Act, and it was held upon Letters Patent Appeal that no appeal lay from this refusal. The reasoning was :

" It may no doubt be said that an order which terminates a proceeding is a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15, but it must be a proceeding, as we understand it, in the course of a suit or in relation thereto and in which some question or other as to the right or liability of any party is raised, and not a proceeding in respect of a matter which has already come to a termination by the operation of law or otherwise."

This view was objected to by Mookerjee, J., in Mathura Sundari Dasi v. Haran Chandra Saha (7), as going beyond the definition of the term 'judgment' given by Couch, C. J., in Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moroba Naik (8), the High Court of Bombay dissented from the reasoning in Gobinda's case, holding that an appeal lay under the Letters Patent from a refusal to extend time under Cl. 5, Limitation Act. There is much force in the objections which have been taken to the decision in Gobinda's case and were the order appealed against before us an order refusing to extend time, and thereby putting an end to the litigation between these parties, we might well have thought it necessary to refer the question of the correctness of that decision to a Full Bench.

The cases which bear upon the competence of an appeal under Cl. 15, Letters Patent, from a decision under S. 5, Limitation Act, admitting an appeal after the period of limitation prescribed require, in my opinion, to be separated from cases which proceed upon the footing that the decision appealed from has put an end to the litigation. Even within this limited range, however, it cannot be said with confidence that the decided cases are uniform or consistent. While it has been held in Mathura Sundari Dasi v. Haran Chandra Saha (7), that an order made under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. refusing to restore a suit after it had been dismissed for default under R. 8 of the same order is a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15, Letters Patent, it has also been held in Maharaj Kishore Khanna v. Kiran Shashi Dasi (9) that no appeal lies from an order made under R. 9 setting aside a dismissal and restoring a suit. Again, while under O. 43, R. 1 (k), Civil P. C. an appeal is expressly given from an order under R. 9, O. 22 refusing to set aside the abatement of a suit, it has been held (Sarat Chandra Sarkar v. Maihar Stone and Lime Co., Ltd.) (10), that an order setting aside the abatement of a suit is a judgment under Cl. 15, Letters Patent. This decision followed an unreported case Padmabati v. Tulsi (11), where Woodroffe, J., laid stress upon the circumstance that under R. 9 of O. 22,

" where a suit abates . . . no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action " and said

" the appellant has acquired thereby a right which the order made by Chaudhury, J., has interfered with. There is therefore in my opinion an appeal. "

Of cases decided by the Judicial Committee there appear to be two. The first is Hurrish Chunder Choudhry v. Kali Sundari Debi (12). Pontifex, J., had refused to transmit a certain order in Council to the appropriate Court for execution, holding that the applicants must be left to a regular suit to enforce their claim thereunder. Their Lordships agreed that the learned Judge had in fact exercised a judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance which, if it remained, would entirely conclude any rights of Kali Sunderi to an execution in the suit. They held therefore that it was a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15. In Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (13), an appeal had been admitted out of time by the ex-parte order of a single Judge. When the appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench in the presence of the respondent it was held that the delay should not have been excused and the appeal was dismissed upon that ground. On appeal to the Privy Council it was contended that the Division Bench had no jurisdiction to override the order made extending the time under S. 5, Limitation Act. Sir Lawrence Jenkins delivering the judgment of the Board said in Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (13) at p. 416 [of 41 Mad.]:

" But this order of admission was made not only in the absence of Ramasami Chettiar, the contending respondent, but without notice to him. And yet in terms it purported to deprive him of a valuable right, for it put in peril the finality of the decision in his favour, so that to preclude him from questioning its propriety would amount to a denial of justice. It must, therefore, in common fairness be regarded as a tacit term of an order like the present that though unqualified in expression it should be open to reconsideration at the instance of the party prejudicially affected."

It will be seen therefore that of the cases before the Privy Council one was a case in which execution had been entirely refused. In the other the observations made were directed to the question whether the order was of a kind which should finally be pronounced ex parte. In both, however, the importance of the decision to the party complaining thereof was referred to.

An examination of the language of Ss. 3 and 5, Limitation Act of 1908, leads me to think that for the present purpose there is a certain fallacy in the language commonly employed to the effect that an order admitting an appeal under S. 5 deprives the respondent of a vested right granted to him by S. 3. The opening words of S. 3 are "subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 inclusive." S. 5 applies broadly speaking, to cases in which the limitation period is short. It does not apply so as to give a power of extending the period of limitation prescribed for suits. It appears to me to be the intention of the Limitation Act, that where an appellant has proceeded with due diligence, no right shall accrue to the respondent by reason merely of the lapse of the statutory period. On the whole, and not without some doubt, I think that the mere circumstance that an order puts in peril the finality of a decision given in the respondent's favour, does not of itself make that order a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The same might be said of an order restoring a suit under O. 9, R. 9, and with much greater reason. The same might be said of any order giving leave to appeal or granting a certificate that a case was a fit one to be taken on appeal. Whether any distinction can logically or practically be maintained between an order setting aside an abatement and an order restoring a suit after dismissal for default may well be doubted. But in the case now before us the order complained of does not set anything aside. It operates merely to declare that the appeal may be entertained. For the purpose of the present objection to the competence of this Letters Patent Appeal it is a stronger case in favour of the present respondent than the case of Maharaj Kishore Kahunna v. Kiren Shashi Dasi (9).

In my judgment we should uphold the preliminary objection and dismiss this Letters Patent Appeal with costs 4 gold mohurs.

Small Cause Court Ref. No. 2 of 1928, Decided on 19th July 1928.

* Limitation Act, Art. 97—Contract for sale—Vendor to satisfy certain conditions before completion — Time not specified—Property subsequently mortgaged and sold in satisfaction thereof — Original purchaser suing for deposit money—Limitation begins from sale in satisfaction of mortgage—Purchaser need not sue within reasonable time—Suit is governed by Art. 97 and not Lim. Act Arts. 60 and 115.

In a certain contract for the sale of property the vendor was to satisfy certain conditions before completion of the contract, but no time was specified for it. The vendor mortgaged the property to another and afterwards it was sold in satisfaction of that mortgage. The purchaser then sued for recovery of deposit money.

Held: that the purchaser need not have sued within a reasonable time. It was Art. 97 and not 60 nor 115, that governed such a case, and time was to be counted since when the property was sold in satisfaction of the mortgage, because it was then that the contract, having become impossible of performance, ended. Rankin, C. J.—This is a reference from the Small Cause Court. The question arises upon a contract for the sale of a certain house in Chowringhee No. 34 Chowringhee Road, which was entered into between Saheb Zadi Mamoodi Begam as vendor on the one part and John Caropiat Galstaun as purchaser on the other part on 9th September 1919. It appears that the premises in question were subject to a certain wakf and they were also subject to a renewal clause in a certain indenture of lease. No period for completion was fixed by the contract and it was a term of the contract that the vendor should use due diligence to apply to the proper Court in the matter of the wakf for an order for sale thereof and that she should take advice of counsel with a view to nullify, if possible, the clause in the lease to which I have referred. The contract provided that within one week from the date on which the purchaser should be satisfied in respect of the above two clauses being fully complied with by the vendor, the vendor would send all the title deeds. There were further provisions as regards what would happen thereafter in the matter of the completion of the contract. It appears that, in 1921, the vendor mortgaged this property to another and, in 1927, the property was sold in satisfaction of that mortgage.

The present suit was brought for the return of the deposit money, namely, Rs. 501 with reference to which there was a clause in the contract that, if for any laches of the vendor or failure on the part of the vendor to comply with the conditions of these presents and on her part to be observed and performed the said purchase cannot be completed, then and in such event the vendor should forthwith return on demand to the purchaser the said sum of Rs. 501.

Now, the question which arose and upon which the two Judges of the Small Cause Court composing the Full Bench disagreed has been stated as follows :

(1) Whether Art. 60 or Art. 115 applies to the claim in suit ?

(2) Whether the claim is barred ?

The view taken by the trial Judge is that the question for decision is whether the plaintiff, that is, the purchaser can be allowed to keep the agreement in force for an indefinite period. He thinks that, when the defendant mortgaged the property, it became impossible for her to convey it to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff immediately on becoming aware of this should have called upon her either to convey or to put an end to the contract. He is of opinion that the case comes under Art. 115, Sch. 1, Lim. Act. The Chief Judge is of opinion that the case comes under Art. 60 Lim. Act, as money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand.

In my opinion, Art. 60 is not applicable to this case at all. This money at the time it was deposited was not deposited on the term that it should be repayable on demand but it was deposited as part of the purchase money of the property and also as a deposit in the sense that it was capable of being forfeited if the purchaser did not fulfil his part of the contract. I have no doubt that the view taken of Art. 60 being applicable is incorrect. I am very doubtful whether, in any view, Art. 115 can be said to be the article applicable. Art. 115 is for compensation for the breach of any contract express or implied and the period of limitation is three years from the time when the contract is broken.

It appears to me that the Article applicable is Art. 97 for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails, the period of limitation being three years from the date of the failure. It is quite clear that in a case of this sort, the purchaser has three years from the time at which the contract comes to an end either by reason of impossibility of performance or by reason of refusal to perform or because the contract is abandoned or because the contract is rescinded by one party for the default of the other. In this case, the position is that notice was fixed for completion. The vendor had two things to do which might take a very substantial time. The purchaser never made time of the essence of the contract by giving notice that he should require performance within a definite time. It is erroneous to say that such a contract as this became impossible of performance, because the vendor mortgaged the subject-matter. This is a mere matter of conveyance. It is for the vendor to pay off the mortgagee at or before the time of completion. This contract certainly came to an end at the latest for impossibility of performance in 1927 when the mortgaged property was sold. After that the vendor was unable to perform the contract. The question is whether the contract came to an end earlier. It is erroneous to say that it was the duty of the purchaser to sue the vendor at the expiry of a reasonable time. It might have been within his rights so to do, but there is no law which prevents a purchaser from extending the time for his vendor. The object of the limitation Act is to make people bring their suit promptly when their cause of action has arisen. It is not to make people bring their cause of action into existence before they want to do so. In the present case, it appears, so far as one can gather from the judgment, that there are very few facts indeed which can be relied upon on one side or the other. It does not appear that the time was extended by express arrangement. It does not appear that either party purported to rescind the contract. It is a question on which there seem to be very few materials whether there is any proof that the parties had abandoned the contract before 1927. It does not appear that until 1927 the vendor became unable to perform the contract. This contract remained in existence for the present purpose until either by arrangement or rescission or impossibility of performance or refusal, the plaintiff's right to sue for the return of the money arose. It will be for the Small Cause Court to apply these principles to the facts of this case. Let the case be returned to the Small Cause Court with this expression of opinion.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal by defendants 1 to 5 arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of some lands which the plaintiffs claim as appertaining to Taluk No. 164 purchased by them at a rent sale in 1906. The facts of this complicated litigation may shortly be given. Under the Maharaja of Tipperah there was a taluk No. 164 standing in the name of one Jay Narain Sarma and called after his name taluk Jay Narain Sarma. This Jay Narain had also a niskar called niskar Jay Narain Sarma. Jay Narain Sarma left two sons Sib Prosad and Ram Gobinda. Sib Prosad had also acquired an agat taluk called agat Sib Prosad Taluk Ram Keshab. Agat taluk has been explained by the learned Judge in his judgment as meaning :

"A specific block of land carved out of a taluk. The owner of an agat need not enter into direct relations with its superior landlords, but he pays the proportion of the rent due from him in respect of agat to the owner of the taluk. On failure to pay this due proportion the owner of the taluk has to pay it himself to preserve his taluk from sale, but he can recover the proportion from the agatdar in a contribution suit."

The taluk No. 164 was sold for arrears of rent and purchased by the Choudhuries of Markuta in 1863. About 12 years after they had purchased, one Ananda-moyee, widow of one of the three sons of Sib Prosad, brought a suit for recovery of some lands on the allegation that they were niskar lands of Jay Narain Sarma and the agat lands of agat Sib Prosad. The suit was decreed or compromised by a compromise decree Ex. F. By that decree Anandamoyee got one-third of the lands which she claimed as belonging to niskar Jay Narain. The other lands claimed in the suit went to the Choudhuries. Thereafter one Gurudas Muhari purchased Anandamoyee's interest in the decree and one Gurudas Barman purchased one-third share, in the niskar belonging to some other members of Jay Narain's family. Subsequently the three parties Gurudas Muhari, Gurudas Barman and the Choudhuries came to an arrangement under which Gurudas Muhari obtained 16 annas interest by transfer from the other parties in 12 specific plots of niskar Jay Narain Sarma. Then Gurudas Barman and Gurudas Muhari respectively conveyed to the Choudhuries their one-third share in the rest of the lands described as niskar in Ex. F, and the Choudhuries thereby obtained an interest in the Niskar land also. Between 1888 and 1894 the defendants purchased in execution of decrees the interest of the Choudhuries which was described in the sale certificates as niskar and agat Sib Prosad. Between 1890 and 1895 Ram Charan and Bhairab Shaha whom we will call the Shahas hereafter purchased in execution of decrees and by private conveyances the interest of the Choudhuries in taluk Jay Narain Sarma. In 1900 the Shahas brought a suit against the defendants' father to recover some lands as taluk Jay Narain. That suit was withdrawn. Then in 1906, Taluk Jay Narain Sarma (taluk No. 164) was sold for arrears of rent by the Maharaja of Tipperah and purchased by the plaintiffs. This suit was instituted in October 1918 for recovery of some lands which the plaintiffs claim to appertain to the taluk purchased by them. The defence was that the land in suit belonged to the niskar Jay Narain and agat Sib Prosad and did not form part of the plaintiff taluk. It was also maintained that if they did, the defendants had acquired good title to them by adverse possession for more than 12 years.

On these facts the learned Subordinate Judge without going minutely into the question of title held that the defendants were in adverse possession of the land for more than 12 years ; and in this view dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge of Tipperah modified the decree of the trial Court and gave the plaintiff a decree in respect of some plots and remanded the case to the trial Court for enquiring into the title in respect of some other plots. Defendants 1 to 5 have appealed and it is contended on their behalf that the view taken by the trial Court is correct and ought to be maintained.

On the facts above stated the learned Judge has come to the following findings: (a) that it is not possible to find out definitely the extent either of the taluk or of the niskar ; (b) that the agat somehow or other had passed to the Choudhuries or they had acquired title to it by adverse possession it having become a part of their taluk ; (c) that Ex. F, the compromise decree in Anandamoyee's suit, is to be preferred to other evidence in finding as to what lands belong to the niskar at such distant date ; (d) that the settlement record so far as it is inconsistent with Ex. F, must be considered to be incorrect though it mentions some plots in suit land as appertaining to the agat ; but it must now be held that they have become part of the taluk and have ceased to have a separate entity ; (e) as to possession, in the circumstances of the present case there can be no question of adverse possession. In this view the learned Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs as above stated. It is admitted that some plots in suit belong to the defendant's niskar and have been excluded from the decree.

This appeal may be disposed of on the short ground of possession. The argument which the learned District Judge employed to support his finding that there could be no question of adverse possession in the present suit is, that at one time the Choudhuries held the niskar and the taluk both together. At that time there could be no question of adverse possession between the two estates. They elected to treat some lands as appertaining to the taluk and some as niskar. These lands were sold at different times to different parties the defendants and the Shahas. There cannot, therefore, be any question of adverse possession between these two parties. It is difficult to understand the process of reasoning adopted by the learned Judge in holding that the de-defendants are not entitled to claim adverse possession in the present suit. It is intelligible that so long as the taluk and the niskar were held by the same person the Choudhuries no question of adverse possession could arise nor could it be claimed by one against the other. But the same reasoning cannot be applied when the niskar and the taluk become vested in different parties. There was no privity of estate between the Shahas and the defendants nor was there any such jointness of possession as to stop the running of time against each party. The learned Judge holds that the land belonging to the niskar or to the agat taluk became part of the taluk No. 164 by adverse possession by the Choudhuries and passed along with the taluk to the plaintiffs. If that was so, there does not seem to be any reason for not holding that the lands which were thus acquired by adverse possession and formed part of the taluk being adversely possessed by other parties became permanently severed from the taluk. In one part of his judgment the learned Judge observes that since the possession of the defendants was never that of trespassers there could be no adverse possession in their favour. This is not a correct statement of the law. Possession if not permissive, is adverse. It may be adverse even to the vendor in a case between the vendor and the vendee. Sambhu Bhai Karsandas v. Shib Lal Das Sadashivdas (1). But it is not necessary to go so far in the present case. The possession of the defendants as against the Shahas was clearly adverse whether they possessed it as adverse to the taluk or as part of their niskar.

The learned Judge again becomes unintelligible when he says that the possession of the defendants could not be treated as adverse as neither set of transferrers could sue the other for recovery of possession. He further goes to elucidate this point and observes that if a private purchaser does not obtain possession of a part of the land purchased, his remedy is to sue his vendor for compensation or to avoid the contract altogether. Similarly a purchaser in an execution sale has remedy given to him under the Civil Procedure Code of having the sale set aside and claiming a refund of the purchase money. This view also cannot be supported. The remedy suggested by the learned Judge may be open to the purchaser but it does not take away his right of asserting the title of his vendor which he has obtained by his purchase. There is no question that the defendants were in possession of the lands for a much longer period than 12 years. Whether they were possessing this land as appertaining to the niskar or to the agat taluk or as against the owner of the taluk No. 164 they have acquired a good title to those lands by adverse possession. I take this view on the facts of this case relating to possession without considering the question of title as to which of the lands in suit appertain to the taluk.

It is a moot question whether a purchaser at a rent sale or a revenue sale obtains along with the estate the accretion to the estate caused by encroachment by the late holder of the estate. For it is said that a purchaser at such a sale purchases the estate as it stood at its creation. But this point though suggested in the lower Court was not raised and discussed before us and I do not propose to deal with it any further.

The learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court held that the defendants acquired a good title to the lands in suit by adverse possession and since such adverse possession was an encumbrance it must be avoided under the law and the attempt to avoid it by the plaintiffs failed. After purchase of the taluk in rent sale the plaintiffs served notices on the defendants under S. 167, Ben Ten. Act. The learned Subordinate Judge found on an examination of the evidence that notices were not properly and legally served. The learned District Judge in the view he took of the facts and of the law governing the case did not consider it necessary to examine in detail whether the notices under S. 167 were properly served on the defendants or not. But he observes that if it were necessary he would agree and for the reason given by the Subordinate Judge in holding that such notices were not properly served on defendants 1 to 5.

Mr. Chakraborty for the respondent, however, wanted to be heard on his cross-objection, namely, on the question of service of notice under S. 167, Ben Tenancy Act. Both the Courts below have found that the service was not legal and proper. The learned Subordinate Judge thoroughly went into the evidence in this case and found facts on which he based his finding that notices under S. 167 were not properly served. The learned District Judge in his judgment does not refer to the evidence in detail but expresses his concurrence with the findings of the trial Court on the issue relating to the service of notice. The learned Subordinate Judge found first that there was no separate service of notices on the four encumbrancers who are the defendants in the suit: secondly, defendant 4 was a minor, 15 years of age, and notices ought to have been served upon him also whereas notice was served upon his mother as guardian: thirdly, all due and reasonable diligence was not used to serve the defendants with notices: defendant 4 not having been found in the house and there being no one authorized to accept notices on their behalf, the peon ought to have affixed a copy of the notice on some conspicuous part of the house in which the defendants ordinarily resided. Under the rules framed by the Local Government which have the force of law notices under S. 167 are to be served in the manner provided for service of summons in the Civil P. C.

It was found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the peon went to the spot with only one notice in which the names of the defendants were written. He offered the notice to one Mohes who refused to accept it on the ground that he had no authority to do so. On which the copy of the notice was left with Mohes though he refused to take it and the peon returned without any further attempt to effect a proper service. The peon had no spare copy of the notice to affix at the outer door of the defendant's house. The learned Subordinate Judge further found that defendants 1, 2 and 3 one of whom was a well-known pleader of Comilla were not there and they were at Comilla and other places for the purpose of carrying on their profession. The plaintiffs being the residents of the village no doubt knew all about their whereabouts but took no steps to have the notices properly served on them. In fact he found that the circumstances under which the procedure laid down by O. 5, R. 17, Civil P. C. should be followed did not exist. With regard to service on the defendants the learned Subordinate Judge refers to O. 5, R. 11 which shows that service of summons shall be made on each defendant. As regards defendant 4 who is a minor the learned Subordinate Judge holds that though there is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code with regard to service upon the minor the authorities are in agreement that the procedure laid down for the service of processes upon adult defendants should be followed also in the case of a minor and this has not been done. With regard to the service of notices separately on each defendant, the learned advocate for the respondent argues that a joint notice under S. 167 is enough to satisfy the requirements of law and has referred us to the case of Jogabundhu Mujumdar v. Rashamanjan Dassya (2). In that case there was a joint notice. But it does not appear that there was a separate notice also. Besides, the judgment does not appeal to us as of a weighty character inasmuch as the learned Judges say that no form of notice under S. 167 is laid down. But it would appear of a reference to Mr. Surendra Chandra Sen's book on the Tenancy Act at p. 706 that a form has been prescribed of a notice under S. 167. The learned advocate further argues that a strict observance of the rules of service as given under O. 5, Civil P. C., need not be followed in the case of service of notice under S. 167; and he has referred us to some cases which have no bearing on the point. We are not satisfied that the view urged is correct.

Lastly, Mr. Chakravarti for the respondent has argued on the authority of Gopinath Biswas v. Kadha Shyam (3) and Easin v. Inti Jennessa Bibi (4) that he should be allowed a decree in this case with liberty to apply to the Collector for a fresh and proper service of notice under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act. It is no doubt true that if a notice is not properly served the plaintiffs are entitled to have a fresh service through the Collector; and it has also been held in those cases that where the plaintiff did not know of the encumbrance and brought a suit to eject the encumbrancer as a trespasser and subsequently it transpired that there was an encumbrance, he could be given a decree subject to the annulment of the encumbrance. We are not prepared to apply that principle to this case as it is not a case where the plaintiff did not know the existence of the encumbrance; and when he came to know that the service of notice was not proper he should have taken necessary steps to have the proper service made. We think that the view taken by the Courts below on the question of service of notice is correct.

(2) [1901] 5 C. W. N. 272.

(3) [1920] 24 C. W. N. 657=58 I. C. 671.

(4) [1920] 24 C. W. N. 659=58 I. C. 745.

The result of all the above considerations is that the cross-objection is dismissed and the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts.

The Maharaja of Tipperah (respondent 4 defendant 11 in the suit) has been made a party but no relief seems to have been claimed against him. The appellants before us agree to leave all the questions in controversy in this suit open so far as the Maharaja is concerned. We think that in the circumstances of this case the interest of the Maharaja who is not entitled to immediate possession of the lands in suit should not be affected by any decision arrived at in this case.

Jack, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit by the purchasers of a tenure Joy Narain Sarma Taluk No. 164. The taluk was sold in execution of a decree for rent and purchased by the Choudhuries of Merkutia in 1269. In 1300 and 1301 Ram Charan and Bharat Shaha purchased the taluk from the Choudhuries and auction-purchasers from them in execution of mortgage decrees: c.f. Exs. 30, 31 and 79. The taluk was sold for arrears of rent on 22nd October 1906, and was purchased by the plaintiff-appellants who got delivery of possession in 1908 but did not actually get possession of the suit land and, therefore, this suit has been brought for recovery of possession of the suit land as belonging to the taluk.

The respondents maintain that the land in suit does not belong to the taluk. That part of it belongs to nishkar Joy Narain Sarma, and part of it to agat Shib Prosad of taluk Rai Keshab being lands of which the Chaudhuries were also in possession, and which were subsequently purchased by the respondents' predecessors at sales in execution of mortgage and money decrees between the years 1295 and 1301: c.f. Exs. M, O. Q. S. D and E.

The questions which arise therefore are :

(1) Whether the lands in suit are part of the taluk No. 164 ?

(2) If so, whether the holdings of the respondents are incumbrances ?

(3) If they are incumbrances whether notices under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act, have been properly served on them ?

If the suit lands form part of the taluk then certainly the appellants are entitled to possession of them by virtue of their purchase in auction sale if not barred by limitation and provided the holdings of the respondents are not encumbrances, or, if those holdings are encumbrances, provided notices under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act. have been duly served upon them.

It appears that beyond the settlement Record-of-Rights, there is no evidence as to what lands exactly formed the taluk. The superior zemindar has been made a party (defendant 11) and on his behalf it is claimed that the taluk lands are as shown in the settlement records. Neither of the Courts below are, however, prepared to rely entirely on these records. The learned Subordinate Judge relies on the Record-of-Rights except where it is in conflict with a compromise decree obtained by Anandamoyi (Ex. F) showing that certain of the lands in suit belong to the nishkar Joy Narain Sarma, but he also holds that the lands of Shib Prosad agat referred to in that decree should be considered to be lands of taluk 164 or lands which have accrued to the taluk by adverse possession. The appellate Court came to the same conclusion as regards the lands referred to in Ex. F.

In the compromise Ex. F the Choudhuris practically admitted that certain of the plots in suit belonged to the nishkar Joy Narain Sarma, and relinquished them as such to the predecessor of the defendants. If these lands really belong to the taluk as found by the settlement authorities, then, in parting with them as nishkar lands, the Choudhuris in reality created interests adverse to the taluk which have become by lapse of time encumbrances of the taluk, and before the appellants can get possession of these lands they must show that notices under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, were properly served. The same reasoning would apply to the agat lands. The defendants' father purchased them in an auction sale in execution of a decree against the Choudhuris in 1891. In the sale certificate Ex. D the lands are described as belonging to the agat Shib Prosad. In the compromise decree too the lands were retained by the Choudhuris as belonging to the agat. In these circumstances I see no reason for not accepting the settlement record that they did in fact belong to the agat especially as the superior zemindar does not claim that they belong to the taluk 164 since he claims according to the settlement Record-of-Rights. The onus is obviously on the appellants if they wish to dispossess the respondents to show that the lands belong to the taluk 164, if they fail to do so they are not entitled to get possession and, as regards these Shib Prosad agat lands, I certainly think they have failed to show that they belonged to the taluk. Their claim in respect of these lands must therefore fail.

As regards the nishkar lands both the lower Courts have given reasons for relying on the compromise decree (Ex. F) rather than on the Record-of-Rights. There is evidence showing that in a number of transactions these lands were claimed, and bought and sold as nishkar lands since 1282 B. S. Here again the onus was on the plaintiffs to show that these lands belonged to the taluk and the Courts below have held that the presumption arising from the Record-of-Rights was rebutted as regards the lands relinquished as nishkar by the compromise decree Ex. F. But even if originally belonging to the taluk, these lands and the remaining lands in suit which the defendants have been holding as nishkar since 1300 B. S., would certainly be encumbrances on the taluk by virtue of adverse possession. I cannot accept the learned Judge's reasoning in this connexion. He holds that in this case there was no adverse possession because there was no one who could claim any title to these lands as against the defendants. But this is not so. When the Sahas purchased the taluk, they became entitled to any lands of the taluk which the Choudhuris had transferred to the defendants as nishkar. The Sahas purchased the taluk in 1300 and 1301 B. S. (1894) and these holdings of the defendants had become encumbrances on the taluk by adverse possession at the date of the plaintiffs' purchase of the taluk in October 1906. That the defendants were holding these lands adversely to the Sahas is obvious from the fact that the Sahas brought a suit to recover them as taluk lands from the defendants in 1900. The appellate Court allowed the withdrawal of that suit. The learned Judge has referred to the case reported in Gocool Bagdi v. Debendra Nath Sen (5) and says :

"that case and the line of cases following it have restricted adverse possession (forming an encumbrance) to the possession of a trespasser in parts of the land of the defaulting tenancy."

He therefore holds that since the defendants in this case were not trespassers there could be no question of adverse possession. The cases he refers to, do not appear to be an authority for any such restriction and in the present case it was immaterial to the Sahas whether the defendants obtained the taluk lands as trespassers or by purchase from the Choudhuris as nishkar lands. If the lands in fact belonged to the taluk, as against the purchasers of the taluk the defendants' possession was equally adverse in either case. I hold therefore that the defendants acquired a title by adverse possession to these lands if, as shown by the settlement records, they belonged originally to the taluk.

In this view it becomes necessary to ascertain whether, in respect of these lands, notices under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, had been properly served. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed this question exhaustively, and is I think right in holding that the notices were not served as provided for the service of summons in such cases in the Civil Procedure Code. Under the rules framed by the Government of Bengal which have the force of law the service of notices under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, must be as provided in the Civil Procedure Code. The notices were therefore not legally served. The learned Judge in appeal though he did not discuss the evidence of service agreed with the finding of the trial Court in this respect. It must be taken therefore that if any of the lands in suit are not included in the nishkar lands of Ex. F or in the agat lands of Ex. D, or if the so-called nishkar lands are really taluk lands, the defendants' holding of them would be encumbrances, and since these encumbrances have not been annulled, proper services of notices under S. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, not having been made, the appellants claim must fail as regards all the lands in suit. The appeal is therefore allowed with costs, the decree of the first Court being restored.

rent is not illegal either under S. 3 of the Regulation or under Contract Act, S. 23.

A contract to do gratuitous service for a certain number of days in a year in lieu of rent for the land occupied is not illegal as being against public policy, nor is it illegal for being indefinite and arbitrary under S. 3 of the Regulation. [P 224 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 74—Contracts

Contracts to do gratuitous service in lieu of rent are governed not by Bengal Tenancy Act but by Transfer of Property Act. [P 224 C 2]

Judgment.—These two appeals are by the defendants and arise out of two rent suits commenced by the plaintiffs respondents. The plaintiffs prayed for recovery of rent at the rate of Rs. 6 and damages at 25 per cent. The case of the plaintiffs is that their predecessor took settlement of the choukidari chakran lands to which the disputed lands appertain and that the defendants are in possession of these lands by doing gratuitous work or begar for 12 days every year in lieu of rent. The defendants contested the suit and amongst other defences they raised the contention that the suit for rent could not be maintained as the stipulation to work for 12 days in the year was arbitrary and indefinite and is opposed to the provisions of S. 3, Regn. 5 of 1812. The trial Court held that the agreement to do begar work for 12 days has been established in both the cases and decreed the suit at the rate of Rs. 2-4-0 a year in each of these suits. The lower appellate Court has taken the same view.

In second appeal by the defendants it has been contended that such an agreement, namely, to do begar in lieu of rent is contrary to public policy and should not be given effect to. It is said that such a contract contravenes the provisions of S. 23, Contract Act. It is also argued that as the contract to do work for 12 days in the year is indefinite and arbitrary such an imposition cannot be made under S. 3, Regn. 5 of 1812. All that S. 3 lays down is that no arbitrary and indefinite imposition could be made in addition to rent, such impositions being in the nature of abwabs. S. 74, Ben. Ten. Act, says that :

"all impositions upon tenants under the denomination of abwab, mahtut or other like appellations in addition to the actual rent, shall be illegal, and all stipulations and reservations for the payment of such shall be void."

There is nothing in Regn. 5 of 1812 to suggest that there cannot be a valid agreement by which in lieu of rent the tenant may agree to perform certain services. There is nothing indefinite in the contract for all that is required of the tenant is work for 12 days in the year. It is not known, it is true, whether 12 days are at the option of the tenant or at the option of the landlord. It has been contended, as I have already said, that S. 3, Regn. 5 of 1812, should be so construed as not to legalise the imposition of the arbitrary rent of this description. It appears, however, that the section of the regulation to which I have referred altered certain of the provisions of Regn. 8 of 1793 which laid down that where abwabs were consolidated with the asil jama into one specific sum, such abwabs could be realised. Besides, there is authority for saying that cases of this description are governed not by the Bengal Tenancy Act but by the Transfer of Property Act. The tenures are really in the nature of service tenures and I am not satisfied that they are contrary to public policy and are in any way illegal. Such contracts are not unknown in this country. In the circumstances, I think, the view taken by the Courts below is right and these appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. Applns. Nos. 568 and 569 of 1928, Decided on 21st August 1928, from decision of Munsif, Naogaon, in Money Suit No. 1536 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 60—Debtor agreeing that sums due to him be realized direct by creditor—Sums attached by another creditor—Objection by first creditor should be allowed.

A contractor incurred a debt for the security of which he agreed that the creditor would be entitled to receive direct, the sums due to him from the person for whom he was executing the contract till its completion and the final adjustment of the whole amount.

Held: that a judgment-creditor of the contractor could not attach the sum which was to be paid not to the contractor but to his creditor, as the judgment-creditor stands in the shoes of his debtor who could not have claimed the amount against his creditor. [P 226 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 115—Mistake upon fact or law on merits e. g., not properly following provisions of O. 21, R. 60 can be revised.

The High Court can interfere in a case of mistake by the lower Court upon the fact or law on its merits, occasioned by not directing proper attention to O. 21, R. 60, to find out whether the attached property was in the judgment-debtor's possession and whether objector was entitled to resist the claim of the decree-holder: 46 Cal. 962, Dist. Judgment.—In this case it appears that one Asutosh Chakravarti was a builder and he had a building contract with the Naogaon Ganja Cultivators' Co-operative Society for the construction of a charitable dispensary. He had other works in hand and in order to finance the building work he proposed to take a loan from the Naogaon Loan Office. He submitted a petition to the Naogaon Ganja Cultivators' Co-operative Society saying that he desired to take a loan and asking them to enter into an arrangement that when their bills were certified as due they would pay the money to the Loan Company direct. In that way a certain amount of security for the loan would be made realizable to the Loan Society. This arrangement has been held by the Munsif to have been an arrangement that the builder would borrow sums up to Rs. 5,000 but it is quite clear from the agreement which was entered into with the building owners the Ganja Cultivators Co-operative Society, that the authority to pay the money to the lenders would not be withdrawn except by the consent of the Loan Society until the completion of the works and the final adjustment of the whole amount.

Now, two creditors of the builder for Rs. 313-8-9 & Rs. 349-14-0 respectively attached money in the hands of the building owners the Co-operative Society for the debt of the builder Asutosh Chakravarti and thereupon the lenders put in a claim. The proceedings were under an attachment before judgment and the effect of the judgment of the Munsif is shortly this. Looking to the original proposal he has come to the conclusion that the original intention was to borrow the sum of Rs. 5,000 and the builder having borrowed the sum of Rs. 5,000 and having paid it back under the arrangement he has held that the contract was exhausted. In my judgment he has taken an entirely erroneous view. When the question is as regards a claim one is to have regard to the directions contained in R. 60, O. 21 of the Code and has to find whether or not the property was in possession of the judgment-debtor or of some persons in trust for him. No doubt when an attachment is of a debt it is difficult to apply the notion of possession but one has in that case also to consider the matter upon the basis that the judgment-creditor the attaching creditor can have no right except his right as one standing in the shoes of his debtor. One has to ask oneself whether between Asutosh on the one hand and the lender on the other hand, Asutosh could possibly maintain that he had a right to take this money direct from the building owners or whether the position was that the lender was entitled to say:

"the building owners are to pay me and I shall have the security for the amount advanced."

It is quite clear on the finding of the learned Judge that this transaction did not stop with one sum of five thousand rupees. The learned Munsif found that the lender had taken from the Ganja

Cultivators' Co-operative Society directly some 16 or 17 thousand rupees. It is quite clear, therefore, that whatever be the construction of the original document whether it be for one sum not exceeding five thousand rupees or whether it be that the loan at any one time would not exceed Rs. 5,000 these parties were acting under the original arrangement which was continuing and it is impossible to say that Asutosh, who had never withdrawn the authority to the lender to take the money direct from the Ganja Cultivators' Co-operative Society and who had promised not to withdraw it until the completion of the work could claim this money as against the Loan Society. In these circumstances I have no doubt whatever that the Munsif was wrong in rejecting this claim.

The question then arises whether this is a case that can be interfered with under S. 115, Civil P. C., I have great difficulty on that point, because it is not a case like the one cited before me: Hindley v. Joy Narain Marwari (1), where the error of the Court below consisted in the misconstruction of its own power. This is in some sense a case of mistake upon the fact or law on the merits. At the same time having considered this matter and examined some of the cases in this Court I think it is open to me upon this occasion to hold that the Munsif has not directed his attention properly to the rule in question and that under R. 60, O. 21, Civil P. C., he should not merely have applied his mind to the question whether the original contract existed or not. In my judgment that would not end the matter at all. The Munsif ought to have applied his mind to the question whether this was a property which was in the judgment-debtor's possession so that the creditor of the judgment-debtor would be entitled to resist the claim. On the whole it appears to me that these applications should succeed. I desire to say that there is no doubt or difficulty in applying R. 63, O. 21 to a case of attachment before judgment. The matter is the subject of a Full Bench case of the Madras High Court: Mallikarjuna Prasad Nayadu v. M. Virayya (2). So far as I can see that has been the law of this Court also since Sir Barnes Peacock's time.

In these circumstances the rules should be made absolute, the orders of the Munsif should be set aside and both the claims should be allowed with costs both in the lower Court and in this Court. Hearing fee one gold mohur in each case.

The order rejecting a plaint is a decree. An order passed in appeal from that order that no appeal lies amounts to dismissal of the appeal. Even such order is a decree and is open to a second appeal and not a revision to the High Court: 8 C. W. N. 64, Rel. on. [P 227 C 1]

Judgment.—This revision petition is directed against an order of the District Judge of Rajshahi dated 30th January 1928, dismissing the petitioners' appeal on the ground that no appeal lay from the order of the trial Court to him. The plaintiff-petitioners brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi for a declaration that the sale held in execution of a decree obtained by the opposite party was null and void. The Subordinate Judge ordered the petitioners to put in Court-fees sufficient to cover the value of the claim. The petitioners instead of doing that applied for amendment of the plaint. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected the petition for amendment and thereafter rejected the plaint under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. That order is according to the definition of 'decree' as given in S. 2, Civil P. C., a decree and was open to appeal. The petitioners appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him.

This Rule has been obtained against that order and a preliminary objection is taken that S. 115, Civil P. C. does not apply as in the present case the order of the Court below was open to appeal. We think that the preliminary objection should prevail. The order rejecting a plaint is a decree. An order passed in appeal from that order is also a decree and is therefore open to a second appeal to this Court. The learned vakil for the petitioners argues that where the lower appellate Court holds that no appeal lies to him, there is no appeal to this Court and his only remedy is to proceed with the help of S. 115, Civil P. C. This is not a correct view of the law. Whatever the order of the lower appellate Court may be and on whatever ground it may be based, the effect of it is that the plaintiffs' appeal is dismissed, and if from the original order there was an appeal to the District Judge a second appeal to this Court is also available from the order of the District Judge. In support of this view we may refer to the case of Mathura Mohan Pal v. Amiruddi (1). In this view we think that this Rule is incompetent. It is therefore discharged with costs—2 gold mohurs.

A suit for declaring a person as secured creditor of land is a suit for land and if the land in question is outside the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court, the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction cannot try the suit: 19 Cal. 361 Note, Foll. [P 227 C 2]

W. W. K. Page—for Defendants.

Judgment.—This case started as an originating summons which was originally heard by my learned brother Costello, J., who made an order on 6th July transferring it to the list of suits for hearing, and giving certain orders, with regard to discovery and evidence, and reserving the question of jurisdiction.

The direction asked for under R. 1, Ch. 13, Rules of the High Court, comes under sub-S. (e) of that rule or alternatively under (b), the one directing executors, administrators, etc., to do or abstain from doing a particular act and the other concerning the ascertainment of any class of creditor and the principal direction asked for by the plaintiff in this case is a direction to the defendants the executrix and executor to admit him the plaintiff as a secured creditor of the estate of C. M. Sarkies deceased.

I am of opinion that this procedure if allowed would simply amount to a way of avoiding the limitations imposed by the Letters Patent for the High Court of Calcutta 1865 which under Cl. 12 ordain that the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to try suits for land if such land shall be situated within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court.

The property in question in this suit is situated outside such local limits. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in the case of Kante Chunder v. Kissory Mohan Roy (1) that a suit for declaring any interest in land is a suit for land, and with this decision I agree.

Before I could give the direction asked for, I should have to decide that the plaintiff was a mortgagee of the property which would be a decision declaring an interest in land and I am satisfied that such a decision would be beyond the powers conferred by the Letters Patent. Therefore I have no jurisdiction to entertain this suit which is accordingly dismissed with costs on scale No 2.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession of land in the following circumstances : In 1876 the plaintiffs' predecessors granted a permanent heritable lease to one Beni Madhab in respect of land purported to be used for habitation. After Beni Madhab's death the land was enjoyed by his widow, Matangini. In 1913 Matangini transferred the leasehold right in the land to one Ambika. In 1918 Ambika's son Dharendra transferred it to the present defendant. In the lease granted to Beni Madhab there was a condition or a covenant that the lessee should not be entitled to transfer the lease. The plaintiffs have accordingly brought the suit on the allegation that the covenant in the lease was broken and that the defendant was a trespasser on the land. The trial Court gave a decree to the plaintiffs but the lower appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit mainly on the ground of estoppel and waiver. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that Ambika, the transferee from Matangini was recognized by the landlord who received rent from him. He accordingly thinks that as the plaintiffs waived the right under the lease of objecting to the transfer by the lessee, subsequent transferees of the interest were led to believe that the plaintiffs did not intend to enforce the covenant or that the lease was transferable by custom. The plaintiffs appeal ; and it is argued on their behalf that the lease granted in favour of Beni Madhab continued operative in the hands of his widow and of Ambika whom they recognized as their tenant till Dharendra committed breach of covenant by selling the land to the defendant. The defendant accordingly is liable to be ejected. The case in the plaint, however, is differently made. There it was said that the holding was abandoned on the death of Beni Madhab's widow Matangini and that Dharendra son of Ambika not having been an heir of Beni Madhab had no interest in the land to pass to the defendant and the cause of action was based upon these allegations. These allegations have not been accepted by the Courts below since they concurred in finding that the landlord accepted Matangini's transferee, Ambika as his tenant. The plaintiffs' suit was accordingly misconceived and he cannot get the relief in the suit as it was brought.

Nextly, the plaintiff's contention that the lease in favour of Beni Madhab continued operative with all its conditions and the right to recover possession accrued on Dharendra's transferring it to the defendant, cannot also be supported. According to the facts mentioned by the plaintiffs in their plaint and accepted by the Courts below the lease came to an end as soon as Matangini committed the breach of the covenant against alienation. All the subsequent holders of the land were either plaintiffs' tenants being recognized by them or trespassers. Ambika was recognized by the plaintiffs. He purchased nothing according to the plaintiffs' case from Matangini because she had no right to sell. Whatever status he had in respect to the land was derived from the recognition by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot sue the defendants for ejectment on the ground of violation of the covenant against alienation.

Then again in the lease in favour of Beni Madhab the lessor did not reserve the right of re-entry on breach of a covenant. It has been held in a number of cases that where the lessor does not reserve to himself the right of re-entry the covenant against alienation is not enforceable and the lessor cannot sue the holder of the leasehold for recovery of possession on the breach of the condition: Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Mokbul Ali Chowdhury (1), Mohammad Reajuddin Ahmad v. Basuda Sundari Dasi (2), Mahananda Roy v. Saratmani Debi (3) and Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (4). The plaintiffs cannot in this case rely for their right to re-entry on the lease in favour of Beni Madhab. In my opinion the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the plaintiffs by their conduct created an impression on the mind of the defendant that they would not enforce the condition against alienation by accepting Ambika the transferee from Matangini as tenant: Doe v. Rowe (5); Doe v. Sutton (6).

I should like to say a word with regard to the decision in Safar Ali Mia v. Abdul Rashid Khan (7). The Munsif was obliged to rely upon this case in holding in favour of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge finds it difficult to distinguish this case on the ground that there was no reservation of the right of re-entry by the lessor. It does not, however, appear from the report that no right of re-entry was reserved and the point does not seem to have been argued at all. It may be said as has been held in Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (4) that the condition restraining a permanent lessee from alienating his interest is void in law as enacted by S. 10, T. P. Act. When a lessor grants a permanent lease he carves out a major portion of his interest and bestows it upon the lessee. He has no possessory interest left in the property unless he reserves to himself a right of re-entry. For these reasons, in my judgment the decree of the lower appellate Court should be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Mukerji, J.—This Rule has been issued to show cause why a commitment to the Court of Sessions should not be quashed on two of the grounds set forth in the petitioner's petition of motion. The commitment has been made for the trial of the petitioner on a charge under Ss. 211, 193 and 194, I. P. C. The two grounds on which the Rule has been issued are :

"First for that in view of the fact that the judicial enquiry in respect of which the petitioner is alleged to have committed the offence with which he has been charged was in regard to a prosecution which was not legally instituted, no judicial notice could be taken of the complaint made or of the evidence given by the petitioner both of which are non est in the eye of law, and the commitment made on the basis thereof is not sustainable in law."

Second : For that the order of commitment is vitiated by the fact that the complainant was not examined at the enquiry before the Magistrate.

Now the relevant facts are these : The petitioner lodged a complaint in the Court of the Magistrate at Howrah against five persons including one Mr. Mould. It was stated in the complaint that on 7th March 1928 a lock out was declared by the authorities of the East Indian Railway against 14,000 men, working in their Lillooh Workshop who had gone on strike, that on 28th March 1928, when some of the strikers were proceeding homewards they were held up by some Police Officers, some Goorkha guards of the Watch and Ward Department of the Railway and some men of the Railway Volunteer Rifles. It was stated that offences punishable under various sections of the Penal Code were committed by the accused persons. The specific allegation made against Mr. Mould was in these words :

"While all this was going on Mr. Mould came running from the direction of the Loco quarters and snatching off a gun from a Goorkha guard, fired it without any previous warning on the strikers. One man was hit and fell down by the side of the road."

On being examined on oath on the said complaint the petitioner said :

"Then Mr. Mould came running from the Loco quarters, snatched up a gun from a Goorkha and shot a man who was standing under a banian tree on the side of the road and the man dropped down and did not move again."

On this complaint a judicial enquiry was held by Mr. G. S. Dutt, the District Magistrate, in which a number of witnesses were examined, and the complaint was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P.C. Mr. Mould then moved the District Magistrate for proceeding against the petitioner under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The petitioner showed cause but eventually the District Magistrate preferred a complaint against the petitioner for having committed offences under Ss. 193 and 211, I. P. C. On the basis of this complaint an enquiry preliminary to commitment was held by Mr. H. C. Bose, Deputy Magistrate, who eventually made the order of commitment against which this Rule is directed.

The second of the two grounds set forth above may be disposed of quite soon. It rests upon the words of S. 208, sub-S. (1) which says :

"The Magistrate shall, when the accused appears or is brought before him, proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take . . . evidence etc."

It is said that the subsection means that if there is a complainant his evidence must be taken, and that in this respect the provision contained in this subsection is very different from the provisions contained in S. 200 Proviso (aa) which dispenses with the examination of the complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties, and in S. 244 (1), proviso and S. 252 (1), proviso which say that in the case of a complaint by a Court the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant. It is said that the omission in S. 208 of a proviso of this character to be found in Ss. 244 and 252 and on the other hand the deliberate use of the words referred to above in S. 208 is significant, and that this difference has been made in view of the importance and seriousness of the offences to which the procedure in Chap. 17 is applicable. I am of opinion that the argument though specious is not sound. In the first place there is a palpable difference between hearing the complainant and examining him, so that what S. 200, Proviso (aa), means is that the complainant need not be examined on the complaint while S. 244 (1), proviso and S. 252 (1), proviso mean that he need not be heard, but on the other hand S. 208 (1), enjoins that the complainant (if any) shall be heard. It is not the examination of the complainant that is necessary under S. 208 (1), but only that he shall be heard. In this case it is not suggested that the complainant was not heard. What reason there is for making this distinction in this respect between the procedure in trials before Magistrate on the one hand and enquiries by them preliminary to commitment on the other need not be speculated upon ; probably it was a case of pure oversight so far as the enactment of S. 208 is concerned, or it may be, though it is hardly likely that the distinction was deliberate. Be that as it may, it is clear beyond doubt that the examination of the complainant was not obligatory.

The first of the grounds is based upon the view that the complaint was not sustainable because of the bar imposed by S. 132 of the Code. It is said that if the Court could not entertain the complaint by reason of the bar, no offence was committed by the petitioner under S. 211 or S. 193 or S. 194, I. P. C. In the present case I do not desire to express any opinion on the question whether the offences could be held to have been committed by the petitioner if his contention that S. 132 of the Code barred the complaint was well-founded ; because in the view I take of the applicability of S. 132 it is not necessary for me to go into that question. S. 132 is worded very differently from S. 195. The words in S. 132 are :

"No prosecution against any person for any act purporting to be done under this chapter shall be instituted in any criminal Court," while the words in S. 195 are :

"No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under section etc."

In connexion with S. 132, therefore, two matters have to be considered : first whether the filing of a complaint against Mr. Mould amounted to an institution of a prosecution against him ; and second whether the complaint was in respect of any act of his purporting to be done under Ch. 9. There is authority for the proposition that the prosecution of a person does not commence till he is summoned to answer a complaint : Golap Jan v. Bholanath Khettry (1). Whether the institution of a prosecution as contemplated by S. 132 is synonymous with the commencement of a prosecution for the purpose of a suit for malicious prosecution is a matter on which I have my doubts but it does not call for any decision here. I would rather rest my judgment on the second matter which I have already referred to, namely the question whether the acts alleged against Mr. Mould fall within Ch. 9 of the Code; in other words to quote the words of S. 127 whether a Magistrate or an officer in charge of a Police Station had required the assistance of Mr. Mould, and Mr. Mould had done the acts attributed to him on such requisition. There is a passage in the order of the District Magistrate on which a good deal of reliance has been placed on behalf of the petitioner, so far as this question is concerned. The passage runs thus :

"It appeared from Mr. Sturgis' evidence that he considered the assembly of strikers to be an unlawful one and that he purported to act under the provisions of Ch. 9, Criminal P. C., in dispersing the assembly. He admitted that he had directed the police under him as well as other accused persons named in the complaint to assist him in dispersing the assembly which he considered unlawful and that, in so dispersing the assembly, these persons had, under his order used force."

The passage seems not to be entirely borne out by the evidence of Mr. Sturgis and is evidently loosely worded in so far as it refers to all the other accused persons. It is not the complainant's case anywhere that the assistance of Mr. Mould was requisitioned by Mr. Sturgis and it cannot also be the case of Mr. Mould. I am of opinion, therefore, that the acts attributed to Mr. Mould can by no means be regarded as falling within Ch. 9 and consequently S. 132 has no application to this case. The rule must therefore, be discharged. Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Graham, J.—In my opinion the rule should be discharged on two grounds : 1. Firstly, because the case instituted by the petitioner Santiram Mandal had not reached the stage at which it became a prosecution, there being merely an inquiry which resulted in the dismissal of the complaint (1) (I. L. R. 38 Cal. 880), and 2. Secondly, because, even if S. 132, Criminal P. C., be held to apply, it seems to be clear that it can have no application so far at all events as Mr. Mould is concerned. I agree that the rule should be discharged.

(a) Registration Act, S. 17, Cl. (6)—Unregistered solenama filed at the mutation proceedings before Collector is not a part of the decree of the Land Registration Collector and is not admissible in evidence—Transfer of Property Act, S. 54.

Where an unregistered solenama was filed before the Collector in proceedings taken under the Land Registration Act for mutation of names and name of a cosharer was registered in respect of certain property and it was stated in the solenama that he was in exclusive possession for over 30 years and the other cosharer gave up all rights to the property on payment of some money :

Held : that the solenama did not form a part of the decree of the Land Registration Collector. That there should have been a deed of sale which in order to be effective was necessary to be registered having regard to the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Judgment.—In this appeal by the defendants several points of law have been raised. The case of the plaintiff-respondent is that they acquired the property in suit including cadastral survey plot 1304 of defendant 7 in January 1922. The property in suit belonged to the father of defendant 7 and to Pakija who is defendant 1 in the suit and it is said that three keras and odd land was inherited by the sisters from their parents. Shortly after the death of the father of defendants 1 and 7 a solenama was filed before the Collector in proceedings taken under the Land Registration Act for mutation of names and the name of defendant 1 was registered in respect of the disputed plots and it was stated in that solenama that for over 30 years defendant 1 was in exclusive occupation of the disputed lands. It was also stated that on payment of Rs. 250 defendant 7 gave up whatever right she had in the disputed properties to defendant 1. This solenama was in the year 1914. There were partition proceedings, however, between defendant 1 and defendant 7 in which the disputed lands were included. The contention of the defendants is that whatever rights plaintiffs' vendor defendant 1 had in the disputed properties have been extinguished both by adverse possession and the solenama which was executed in 1914. Both the Courts below have decreed plaintiffs' suit and have held that the solenama was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. Against the decision of the lower appellate Court affirming the decree of the Munsif in favour of the plaintiffs, now respondents, a second appeal has been taken to this Court and it has been contended by the learned vakil for the appellants that the Courts

below have erred in law in rejecting the compromise petition from evidence on the ground that it was not registered. His argument is that as it formed part of the mutation proceedings and the solenama was referred to in the order-sheet of the Collector no registration was necessary having regard to the provisions of S. 17, Registration Act. It is conceded that the solenama did not form a part of the decree of the Land Registration Collector. It was not incorporated in the same and even assuming that the decree of the Land Registration Collector was a decree of a Court within the meaning of S. 17, Cl. (2), sub-Cl. (6) as the solenama was not incorporated in the Land Registration decree or order S. 17, Cl. (2), sub-Cl. (6) did not apply to the present case and as for the extinction of the right of defendant 1 to the disputed properties of defendant 7 it was necessary that there should be a deed of sale which in order to be effective was necessary to be registered having regard to the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, the solenama has rightly been held not to be admissible in evidence. It is said next that at any rate there are admissions in the solenama which would go to show that defendant 7's title to this property has been extinguished and the title vested in defendant 1 sometime before the execution of the deed of sale in favour of the plaintiff in 1922. The admissions, however, are to the effect that defendant 1 has been in exclusive occupation of the disputed lands. That alone would not create adverse possession as against the cosharer, namely, the plaintiffs' vendor, that is defendant 7. After the solenama which was executed in 1914 more than 12 years had not elapsed when the deed in favour of the plaintiff was executed. Consequently the title of the plaintiffs or the plaintiffs' vendor cannot be said to have been extinguished by that date.

It has next been argued that no deed was necessary to effect the transfer as defendant 1 was put in possession and reliance has been placed on the class of cases of which the case of Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (1), is a type. That case, however, is distinguishable. There, the possession was transferred long before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation. There were actings and conduct of the parties for over half a century and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in those circumstances laid down that although a deed was not executed having regard to the long course of the actings and conduct of the parties the defect of the non-existence of the deed was immaterial. I think, therefore, that the contention raised by the appellants on this part of the case cannot be sustained. A special ground has been taken with regard to the C. S. plot 1304 which is said to be a homestead on which there is a dwelling house. It is said that by reason of S. 44, T. P. Act no decree for joint possession could be given to the plaintiff in respect of this dwelling house. The learned District Judge in appeal has given the following reasons for coming to the conclusion that S. 44 does not apply to the facts of the present case. He says:

"There must be joint management in an undivided family to save the bari and allow the other occupants of that bari the privilege of S. 44, T. P. Act. No one is going to contend with any degree of reason that joint possession is to be denied to a purchaser in a case like this, where the vendor is living away with her husband for many years. Any jointness of management ceased with her severance from home at marriage. Appellant therefore relies in vain on Pranjivan Dayaram v. Bai Reva (2), and it is not necessary to refer to Khirode Chandra v. Saroda Prosad (3), for definition of family which was only mentioned as showing that the sister living away was a part of the family. This is not denied, but there is no presumption of jointness unless it is shown."

I think the learned District Judge has taken a somewhat narrow view of the scope of S. 44. The dwelling house is the paternal property of two sisters, defendants 1 and 7 are entitled to live in this house as member of the joint undivided family. It is said that defendant 1 is actually living in this house. It is true that defendant 7 is living away. But the requirements of S. 44 is satisfied if it is shown that the house is an undivided house and that occasionally the members of the family, namely, two sisters in this case reside in the house. It is unnecessary to constitute an undivided family for the purpose of S. 44 that the members of the family should have constantly resided in the dwelling house nor it is necessary that they should be joint in mess. Reference may be made to the cases of Sultan Begam v. Debi Prosad (4) and Vaman Vishnu Gokhale v. Vasudev Morbhat Kale (5). In the latter case Farran, C. J., pointed out that it is ownership of the dwelling house and not its actual occupation which brings the provisions of S. 44, Partition Act, into play. It will be noticed that the same words "undivided family" which occur in S. 44, T. P. Act also occur in S. 44, Partition Act (Act 4 of 1893). In this view, I think so far as plot 1304 is concerned the decree of the Courts below in favour of the plaintiff for joint possession cannot be sustained. The title of the plaintiff to the half-share in plot 1304 is established but the decree for joint possession given in his favour is set aside. It will be open, however, to the plaintiff to institute a suit for partition in respect of the same.

The result is that the decree of the lower appellate Court is affirmed except with reference to the C. S. plot 1304 in respect of which the decree for joint possession given in favour of the plaintiff is set aside. Subject to this small variation the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was instituted by the plaintiff for recovery of possession after declaration of title to the lands of Sch. 2 of the plaint. These lands form a part of plot 1, Sch. 1, of the plaint. One Balaram Acharjya, the predecessors of defendants 5 to 8 executed a simple mortgage of the lands of Sch. 1 in favour of one Krishna Mangal Sen, the predecessors of defendants 11 to 13, on 10th November 1893. In December 1893 the said Balaram Acharjya executed a usufructuary mortgage of the lands in suit in favour of the predecessors of defendants 1 to 4 and thereafter in June 1894 sold the said lands to them. In 1900 Krishna Mangal Sen sued on his mortgage. In that suit defendants 1 to 4 or their predecessor were not parties. Krishna Mangal obtained a decree on 19th January 1901, which was made absolute on 31st November 1903. At the execution sale that followed the father of defendants 9 and 10 purchased the lands of Sch. 1 on 8th June 1904 and they obtained delivery of possession through Court on 13th October 1904. On 25th June 1908 defendants 9 and 10 sold plot 1, Sch. 1, to the plaintiff and put him in possession thereof. Defendants 1 to 4 then instituted a suit against the plaintiff for recovery of possession of the disputed lands and obtained a decree on 16th August 1918 and succeeded in recovering khas possession by eviction of the plaintiff. In the decree passed as aforesaid a reservation was made in favour of the plaintiff in the following words :

• "This decree will not, however, affect any equitable right of the defendant (i. e., the present plaintiff) to which he may be entitled under his prior mortgage."

The plaintiff then instituted the present suit on 13th August 1921.

The Munsif dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision and has decreed the suit declaring the plaintiff's title to the land and ordering that defendants 1 to 4 will be at liberty to redeem the property on payment of Rs. 229-12-0 within two months and that in default of such payment within the said period the right of the said defendants to redeem would be barred and the plaintiff would be entitled to obtain khas possession. Defendants 1 to 4 have then preferred this appeal.

The validity of the decree is challenged on various grounds which may be broadly classed under two heads : 1st, as regards the maintainability of the plaintiff's prayer for khas possession ; and 2nd, as regards the basis on which redemption has been allowed.

To deal with the first contention it is necessary to consider the rights of the parties, that is to say, those of the plaintiff as transferee from a purchaser at a sale held in pursuance of a decree for sale under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882) and those of the contesting defendants, namely, defendants 1 to 4 who are the owners of the equity of redemption but were not impleaded in the suit. As regards the rights of a purchaser at a mortgage sale where the suit is properly constituted, that is to say, where all persons having interest in the property comprised in the mortgage are parties thereto two views fundamentally different from each other, may be taken : he may be regarded as having acquired the equity of redemption as it stood at the date of the mortgage together with the lien of the mortgagee or he may be looked upon as having acquired the property as it stood at the date of the sale, that is to say, the property discharged of the mortgage lien. If the suit is properly constituted as aforesaid the title of the purchaser will be absolute and relate back to the time of the execution of the mortgage and it will make no difference to the rights of the purchaser whichever of the aforesaid two views be proceeded upon. The difference arises where the constitution of the suit is defective, that is to say, where all persons having interest in the property mortgaged have not been joined as parties in the suit. In such a case different results follow according as one view is taken, or the other, of the rights of the purchaser at the sale, and this has led to a divergence of judicial opinion in this country. This conflict has been summarized in the judgment of Suhrawardy, J., in the case of Kristopada Roy v. Chaitanya Charan Mondal (1), and the cases that have been noticed in that judgment are the more important of those that have been cited on behalf of the parties before us. On behalf of the appellants reliance has been placed on the two Full Bench decisions of the Allahabad High Court, namely, the cases of Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (2) and Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (3). In the former of these cases a part of the mortgaged property was sold by the mortgagor, after the execution of the mortgage, to some third parties but the vendees were not made parties to the suit, and it was held that the auction-purchaser at the mortgage sale had no title to possession as against the vendees.

In the latter case the aforesaid decision was re-affirmed and applied to a case in which in a prior mortgagee's suit on his mortgage the puisne mortgagee and the purchaser at the sale on his mortgage decree to which the prior mortgagee was not a party were not made parties. To these may be added the case of Entholi Kizhakki Kandy Kanaran v. Vallath Koylil Unnoli (4), in which the Allahabad case first mentioned above was followed and applied to a case where a mortgagor, subsequent to the mortgage, sold the mortgaged properties to another person, who, however, was not impleaded in the mortgagee's suit. The appellants also rely on the case of Agore Nath Banerjee v. Debnarain Guin (5), in which the aforesaid Allahabad decisions were applied to a case where a person who had purchased a portion of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage was not impleaded in the suit. They also rely upon the decision of this Court in the case of Kristopada Roy v. Chaitanya Charan Mandal (1), in which Walmsley, J., appears to have expressed himself as approving of the principle of the Allahabad decisions abovementioned. Reference has also been made on behalf of the appellants to such cases as Habibullah v. Jugdeo Singh (6), in which it was held that a purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree has no right to retain possession of the property obtained through civil Court against a purchaser of the equity of redemption, who was not a party in the suit on the mortgage, and who had obtained and remained in possession till the sale in execution of the decree in the mortgage suit and Girish Chunder Mandal v. Iswar Chunder Roy (7), in which also the position was similar-cases which have been disapproved of in the more recent decisions of this Court, e. g., Kalu v. Abboy Charan (8), Bhagaban Chandra Kundu v. Tarak Chandra Basu (9), and Bhodai Shaikh v. Barada Kanta (10). On behalf of the respondent reliance has been placed upon the Bombay decisions of which Dadoba Arjunji v. Damodar Raghunath (11), is the type, and which lay down that the auction-purchaser is entitled to a conditional decree which allows the party excluded from the suit an opportunity to redeem. Special reliance is also placed on behalf of the respondent upon two decisions of this Court, namely, the cases of Jugdeo Singh v. Habibullah Khan (12), and Gangadas Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitter (13), in both of which cases there are observations which are clearly in conflict with the decisions of of this Court upon which the appellants have relied, though the former of these two cases was one in which all the owners of the equity of redemption except one were made parties to the suit, and what was actually held in the latter case was that it was not obligatory on the auction-purchaser to institute a fresh suit for enforcing his security against the party who was left out of the previous suit but that he might sue for possession giving the omitted party an opportunity to redeem.

The respondent further relies upon cases of which Protab Chandra v. Ishan Chandra (14), is a specimen in which the auction-purchaser seeks to retain the possession which he has obtained in consequence of his purchase as against the owner of the equity of redemption who was excluded from the suit. To go back to the two views stated above and to consider the aforesaid cases in the light of these views, according to one of them the purchaser acquires the property subject to the rights of the parties omitted from the suit, and according to the other view he acquires title to it only as against those parties who are parties to the suit. I have referred to the more important of the authorities that have been relied upon on this point and do not see any use referring to others which are either irrelevant or of lesser importance. The appellants have tried to distinguish some of the decisions on which the respondent relies on the ground that the ratio decidendi of those cases was that the mortgagee had no notice of the assignment of the equity of redemption at the time when he instituted the suit on his mortgage whereas in the present case the transfer in favour of the predecessor of defendants 1 to 4 having been by means of a registered instrument the mortgagee must be held to have had notice in view of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Hetram v. Shadiram (15) and Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (16). They also seek to distinguish other cases cited on behalf of the respondent on the ground that in those cases the purchaser was within time in enforcing his security while in the present case he has no such remedy available to him. The respondent has on the other hand made an attempt, though somewhat vain, to distinguish the decision of this Court upon which the appellant has relied. I do not propose to go into further details but desire to state that I agree generally with Suhrawardy, J., as he expressed himself in the case of Kristopada Roy v. Chaitanya Charan Mandal (1) in so far as he was of opinion that an attempt to reconcile the conflicting decisions of this Court is futile, and if the case had not presented some exceptional features which obviate the necessity of a reference to a Full Bench I should have been prepared to adopt that course in order to remove the conflict that exists.

The exceptional features of the present case are two: they are that in the mortgage suit the equity of redemption was entirely unrepresented and that any remedy which the purchaser or the present plaintiff could have on the basis of the mortgage was barred long ago. The Judicial Committee have authoritatively explained the meaning of S. 89, T. P. Act

(4 of 1882) in the cases of Hetram v. Shadi Ram (15) and Matru Mal v. Durga Kunwar (17). It is now plain beyond controversy that an order under S. 89 of the Act for the sale of the mortgaged property has the effect of substituting the right of sale thereby conferred upon the mortgagee for his rights under the mortgage and the latter rights are extinguished. I do not feel called upon in the present case to express any opinion on the question whether this proposition applies to a decree obtained in a suit in which the equity of redemption is entirely unrepresented. If it does the purchaser at the sale did not acquire any rights under the mortgage the same having already been extinguished by the order and substituted by the right of sale. On the other hand it is possible to take the view that the decree is to be treated as a nullity, as on general principles it would be, having been passed in respect of property which was entirely unrepresented and so to hold that the purchaser acquired nothing. In Jones on Mortgages the following passage occurs:

"Section 1406. The owner of the equity of redemption by purchase from the mortgagor is of course an essential party to a bill to bar the equity by foreclosure. Such owner is in fact the only necessary party defendant. Equally with the mortgagor he is unaffected by any foreclosure proceeding to which he is not made a party, and moreover the decree is generally regarded as void . . ."

Sir Rashbehari Ghose in his Law of Mortgage 4th Edn., Vol. 1, pp. 620-621, observes thus:

"If the owner of the equity of redemption is not a party to the suit the purchaser cannot claim the position of an assignee of the security, as it would still remain in the mortgagee. And this seems to be the law even in America where the general rule that the security is transferred to the purchaser does not hold good if the owner of the equity of redemption, who is said to be the only necessary party, is not made a defendant. In all other cases the security passes to the purchaser; for the sale though it fails to be effectual in every other respect, operates as an assignment of the mortgage to the purchaser who may, if he chooses, proceed de novo to foreclose those who were, not represented in the suit."

Whatever difference S. 89, T. P. Act, may make in the latter class of cases there is nothing in the Act which militates against the view expressed in the other part of these observations as regards the rights of a purchaser at a sale in pursuance of a decree in the equity of redemption is entirely unrepresented. Then again, assuming for a moment that the sale had operated as an assignment of the security, the rights of the purchaser at the auction sale, and of the plaintiff as assignee from the said purchaser in the present case is irretrievably barred. The result is that whatever view may be taken of the rights of a purchaser at a sale under circumstances such as are disclosed in the present case, the plaintiff's suit must necessarily fail. It is therefore unnecessary to consider any other matter in connexion with this appeal.

In this view of the matter, this appeal must succeed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge being set aside, that of the trial Court dismissing the suit should be restored with costs in this and the lower appellate Court.

Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhuri and Birendra Kumar De — for Respondents

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was instituted by the plaintiffs for certain reliefs which are of a somewhat unusual character. The plaintiffs' case shortly stated was that their grandfather, Raj Krishna Ghose and Sri Ballav Ghose, the grand father of the defendants 1 to 8 and Kali Charan Ghose who was the great-grandfather of defendant 10 and grandfather of the husband of defendant 9 were three brothers whose ancestor had installed a deity in their ancestral dwelling house, and the deity according to the plaintiffs went by the name of "Dayal" and according to the defendants "Sridhar," that the deity is a Saligram Bigrha and there is daily worship of the deity at the place where it was installed and that the said three brothers used to worship the deity every day as well as on special occasions, according to their shares which were equal. The plaintiffs alleged that in consequence of certain events that took place it is they and the principal defendants and one Rama Nath Ghose who are now solely interested in the said "Deity" and that they exercised their right of worship of the deity down to 1327 when the principal defendants denied their right and interfered with the exercise thereof.

The prayers that were made in the plaint were very unusual in their character and purported to treat the deity as a moveable chattel, in the nature of property which is capable of being owned and possessed by them and also of being partitioned in accordance with their respective shares. There was a prayer which was of a more reasonable character, namely, for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to worship the deity and for an arrangement being made as regards the turns of worship as between the different co-sharers so that the right of worship might be exercised in accordance with such turns. This prayer, however, appears not to have been pressed eventually and the relief that was claimed by the plaintiffs was confined more or less to the deity being treated as moveable property. Defendant 1 who was the only contesting defendant in the trial Court denied the plaintiffs' right altogether.

" That the suit be decreed with costs and future interest at 6 p. c. p. a. Plaintiffs' title to the disputed deity as stated in the plaint be declared, and they be free to bring the deity to their new bari on the occasions of annual parbas and ceremonies such as Puspa Jatras, Puskarni Pratistas, Sradhs, marriages, Kali Pujas, Mansha Pujas, Radhastamis, Durga Pujas, Tulashi offerings in the month of Kartick, Nabannas in Agrahayan, Uttara-yan Sankrantis, Sri Panchamis, Basanti Pujas, Dhaja Dwadasis, Sasthi Pujas, Annaprasans and Griha Prabeshas without interfering with the worship of the deity by the principal defendants and performance of ceremonies at their (meaning the defendants') bari : that a perpetual injunction be issued on the principal defendants not to interfere with plaintiffs' right to worship the deity as indicated above."

The above is an extract from the ordering portion of the judgment ; but in the decree that was drawn up it was clearly stated that the plaintiffs' title to the disputed deity was one-third. There was an appeal preferred by the defendant 1 from the decree as passed by the trial Court and the plaintiffs also preferred a cross-appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal and the cross-appeal and affirmed the decree of the trial Court. Defendants 1, 2 and 3, have thereupon preferred a second appeal to this Court and the plaintiffs have preferred a memorandum of cross-objection.

The appeal of the defendants is pressed upon five distinct grounds. The first of these grounds is to the effect that the decree should be set aside as the suit was not maintainable without the deity being properly represented therein and because the female members of the family who were also interested in the deity were not made parties to the said suit. In support of this ground reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick (1). Now the facts of the present case are that the deity was, upon the allegations of the parties, installed by some ancestor of the parties themselves but it is not suggested that anybody else than the members of the family to which the parties belonged is interested in the deity or that there is any property of the deity which is likely to be interfered with by the arrangement which is asked to be made. The suit in its essence appears to be one for adjustment of the rights as between the parties themselves in relation to the deity. In that way the case seems to be entirely distinguishable from the case of Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick (1). In that case there was an installation of the deity with a fixed abode; and for the idol so established as well as for the other idols ancestral, a fund was created by a will for performing their worship. In such a case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pronounced the opinion that if the idol was not otherwise represented in the proceedings result might ensue which might, conceivably, vitally affect its interests and also that the interest of the female members of the family might need special protection. Upon these considerations their Lordships observed that it would be in the interests of all concerned that the idol should appear by a disinterested next friend appointed by the Court and that the female members of the family should also be joined and a scheme should be framed for the regulation of the worship of the idol. The scope of that suit was entirely different from the scope of the present one.

In the present case it is really and substantially a case of dispute between two contesting parties, one claiming to have a right jointly with the other to perform the worship of the deity and to have the possession of the deity for the performance of such worship and the other party claiming an exclusive possession of the deity with a denial of a right of the former to perform any worship at all. I am of opinion that the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee cannot be said to apply to a case of the present nature and they are not to be treated as authority for the purpose of holding that in the absence of the deity or of the female members of the family the present suit is not maintainable. The female members, who may be interested in the deity and are not parties to the suit, will not be bound by the result of the present litigation. That, however, is quite a different matter; but in so far as the parties who are parties to the suit are concerned it cannot be contended that the suit is not maintainable. This ground, therefore, in my opinion, fails. It may be noted also that this objection does not appear to have been taken on behalf of the defendants in any of the Courts below.

The next ground is to the effect that a suit of this character or rather a prayer of this character is not maintainable. The objection is unquestionably correct and well founded if the wording of the plaint is taken at its face-value. As I have already stated, the plaintiffs appear to have entertained a very curious conception of the deity but the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out in his judgment that although many of the expressions used in the plaint are extremely unhappy what in substance is asked for on behalf of the plaintiffs is a declaration of their right of worship which is a very valuable right and a permanent injunction restraining the principal defendants from interfering with the exercise of that right by and on the part of the plaintiffs. Ground 2, therefore, must also be overruled.

It is urged in the next place that upon the facts found by the Courts below it should be held that the plaintiffs have got no subsisting right or interest in the deity, in respect of which he can possibly get any declaration or relief from the Court. As regards this matter the findings at which the Courts below have arrived, more or less concurrently, seem to be these: that the deity was installed by the ancestors of the plaintiffs as well as of the contesting defendants, that after certain incidents, into the details of which it is not necessary to enter, the ancestors of the plaintiffs and the principal defendants and Rudranath Ghose became the sole worshippers of the deity quite a long time ago and that they all along exercised the said right, giving rise to the presumption that they had acquired the sole right to worship the deity either on a grant or by mutual arrangement: that in 1305 when the plaintiffs removed to their new house in which there was already installed another deity of the name of Lakshminarayan there was an arrangement between the father of defendant 1 and the plaintiffs in which the females of the family or at any rate some of them also took part, and the arrangement was that the plaintiffs would leave the deity at their ancestral house, namely, the homestead of the defendants, liberty being reserved to them to bring the deity to their new homestead according to necessity; that the plaintiffs used occasionally to exercise their right of worship of the deity and to bring the deity to their new house on festive and ceremonial occasions and that they continued to do so till Baishak 1327 after which date their right to worship the deity was denied. On these findings it seems somewhat difficult to conceive how it can reasonably be said that the plaintiffs had no longer any subsisting right or interest in the deity. This contention must also be overruled.

The next contention is to the effect that in any event the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree entitling them to remove the deity from the place where it is to their new house. This contention overlooks the terms of the arrangement which have been found by both the Courts below, the arrangement being that the plaintiffs would be competent to remove the deity on occasions on which such removal would be necessary.

The last ground urged on behalf of the appellants relates to the form of the decree that was passed by the trial Court and has been upheld on appeal by the learned Subordinate Judge. The trial Court, as I have already stated, has declared the plaintiffs' right to the extent of a 3rd share in the deity. Such a declaration is one that can scarcely be passed in a suit of this nature. One could have understood if any question as to turns of worship had arisen in the suit and a declaration limiting the right of the plaintiffs to a certain fraction of the entire worship had been made by the Court. But the Courts below, as appears from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, did not deal with any question of the turn of the worship at all, the plaintiffs having given up the claim they had made on that footing. The declaration which the plaintiffs should get as regards their right in connexion with the deity would be to the effect that their right to worship the deity will be declared. The other declarations that have been made in the decree of the learned Munsif will stand. What the practical effect of these declarations will be is a matter which it is somewhat difficult to comprehend, but with that we are not concerned so long as the plaintiffs would care to have the decree passed in their favour. The plaintiffs no doubt have in their cross-objection sought to get a decree free from certain conditions which appear in favour of the defendants, but we are not inclined to accede to the plaintiffs' request in this connexion.

The result is that the appeal and the cross-objection both fail and they are both dismissed, subject only to this that in lieu of the words in the decree that has been passed in this suit "that the plaintiffs proprietary right to one-third share in the deity be declared" the words "it be declared that the plaintiffs are entitled to worship the deity" be substituted. There will be no order as to costs either in the appeal or in the cross-objection.

Appeal No 1724 of 1926, Decided on 2nd August 1928, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Midnapur, D/- 1st April 1926.

: Limitation Act, S. 5—Revenue Officer by his final order rejecting application by appellant to adduce further evidence and making correction in record against him—He appealing only against first portions of his order honestly believing that he would thereby get full relief but appeal was dismissed—He preferring present appeal against latter portion of order after about 17 or 18 days after dismissal—Under S. 14, Limitation Act, only period during which suit or proceeding was prosecuted will be deducted—As appellant acted bona fide in preferring his first appeal, there was sufficient cause within S. 5—Period of 17 or 18 days is not unreasonable or such as would show that appellant was negligent—His appeal therefore will be protected by S. 5—Limitation Act, S. 14.

Under S. 5 two matters have got to be considered (1): whether there was sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the time prescribed by law, and (2) whether there are circumstances which would justify the Court in exercising the discretion that is granted to it under that section for extending the time for preferring the appeal. [P 241 C 2]

A revenue officer rejected the application of appellant to adduce further evidence and made final order making correction in the record as against appellant. Appellant first appealed against the portion of the order rejecting his application believing bona fide that he would thereby get the whole relief that he wanted. The appeal, however, was dismissed. About 17 or 18 days after the appeal was dismissed he again appealed against the other portion of the order whereby correction in the record was made against him.

Held: that S. 14 constitutes sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, but that section would entitle one to the deduction of the period during which the suit or proceeding was prosecuted: A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 156, Rel. on.

Held further: that S. 14 is not exhaustive of all the circumstances that may constitute sufficient cause. In this case as the appellant acted bona fide in preparing his first appeal, there was sufficient cause for him for not preferring the present appeal within time. And this case is fit for the Court to exercise its discretion under S. 5, since the 17 or 18 days that elapsed between the dismissal of the first and the preferring of the present appeal is not a period which can be called unreasonable or which would show that there was any want of diligence on the part of the appellant in preferring the appeal. Mukerji, J.—The question that arises for consideration in this appeal is whether the appeal which the appellant had filed in the Court below was time barred. The facts necessary to be set out for the purposes of this appeal are these: After a good deal of litigation in connexion with an application under S. 105, Ben. Ten Act, the final order was passed on 18th April 1925 by which the Revenue Officer made certain corrections in the record as against the appellant after rejecting an application which the appellant had made for an opportunity to adduce some further evidence. On 18th May 1925, an appeal was taken from this decision of the Revenue Officer to the Special Judge being Special Appeal No. 2 of 1925. This appeal was disposed of by the Special Judge on 31st October 1925 the learned Judge holding that the appeal was not competent as it had been filed against that portion of the order of the Revenue Officer by which he had rejected the appellant's application for an opportunity to adduce further evidence. He, however, held that an appeal as against the order making the correction would be maintainable and to use his own words, he said "can appeal against the entry now that it is against him". Acting upon this last-mentioned observation of the learned Special Judge, the appellant preferred an appeal on 18th November 1925. It is this appeal that has been dismissed by the learned District Judge upon the ground that it was time barred.

In the application which the appellant filed for getting an extension of the time prescribed for the filing of an appeal, the appellant appears to have relied both upon Ss. 5 and 14, Lim. Act, though neither of these sections was expressly mentioned in the application. S. 14, no doubt, is not in its terms applicable to the present case, the case being one of appeal. But, as has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshiram (1), the provisions of S. 14 are not altogether irrelevant for the purpose of considering a case under S. 5, Lim. Act. It has been held in that case that, though S. 14 may not be applicable to any particular case in its terms, if the circumstances mentioned in S. 14 are made out, they would constitute sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5. The present case, therefore, has got to be looked at from the point of view both of Ss. 14 and 5, Lim. Act. Looking at it from the point of view of S. 14, it seems to me that the learned Judge was right in holding that all that the appellant was entitled to get as deduction of the amount of time taken by him in preferring the appeal was the period during which he was prosecuting with diligence the Special Appeal No 2 of 1925. The argument of the appellant that he is entitled to a deduction of the time that was necessary for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the order which he had to obtain in order to prefer Special Appeal No. 2 of 1925 does not appear to me to be well-founded. It was distinctly laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case to which I have already referred that, upon the current of decisions in this country, the period during which a suit or proceeding was prosecuted is the period of which the appellant would be entitled to a deduction. S. 14, however, is not exhaustive of all the circumstances that may go to constitute "sufficient" cause within the meaning of S. 5, Lim. Act. In order to consider the matter from the point of view of S. 5, the finding of the learned Judge would have to be taken into account. The learned Judge held that the appellant acted bona fide in preferring an appeal from that part of the order of the Revenue Officer by which his application for an opportunity to adduce further evidence was rejected and that the said advice that had been given by the pleader to the appellant was also bona fide. In other words, the learned Judge was prepared to hold that there was sufficient cause on the part of the appellant for not preferring the appeal within the time prescribed by law. Now, under S. 5, Lim. Act, two matters have got to be considered : (1) whether there was sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period and (2) whether there are circumstances which would justify the Court in exercising the discretion that is granted to it under that section for extending the time for preferring the appeal.

Upon the findings of the learned Judge inasmuch as the appellant's appeal from a part of the order of the Revenue Officer was bona fide, it goes without saying that the appellant thought that he would be able to get all the redress that he wanted, by preferring that appeal and that it was not necessary for him to prefer another appeal from the other part of the order by which the correction was made. Sufficient cause, therefore, upon the findings of the learned Judge, has been made out in the case.

Now the other question whether the discretion should or should not have been exercised in favour of the appellant turns upon the view that the learned Judge has taken of the appellant's conduct subsequent to the date on which the Special Appeal No. 2 of 1925 was dismissed and before he filed the present appeal. As I have already stated, the special appeal was dismissed on 31st October 1925 and the present appeal was filed on 18th November 1925. The appellant, therefore, has got to account for the period of 17 or 18 days that intervened. The learned Judge, as appears from his judgment, was prepared to make an allowance in favour of the appellant as regards three days that were taken in obtaining a copy of the order from which the appeal was preferred. He was prepared also to allow the appellant a deduction of 2 or 3 days for taking advice from Calcutta as to whether that appeal should be filed or whether a second appeal should be filed as against the decision of 31st October 1925. He was prepared also to grant the appellant a further deduction of 2 or 3 days for the preparation of the grounds of appeal. These periods added up together would account for 9 or 10 days. There would remain a balance of 8 days which, according to the learned Judge, has not been sufficiently accounted for. Now, in making these calculations, I am of opinion that the learned Judge has applied to the case far too exacting a standard and, although the discretion which a Court exercises in connexion with an application under S. 5, Lim. Act, should not be lightly interfered with, I am of opinion that the delay of 17 or 18 days, under the circumstances aforesaid, is not one that can be considered as unreasonable or in other words, I am not satisfied that, in point of fact, there was any want of diligence on the part of the appellant in preferring the appeal.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the view which the learned Judge has taken of this matter is not right. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree from which it has been preferred and direct that the appeal be sent back to the lower appellate Court to be heard and disposed of in accordance with law.

There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Criminal P. C., S. 195—Propriety of action—Complaint of forgery impleading certain persons—Complaint for the same offence against another is sometimes justified when in public interest—Criminal trial.

In a criminal prosecution a certain document produced in the defence was alleged to be the subject-matter of forgery within the meaning of the Penal Code. Thereupon the complainant in the case applied to the Magistrate to make a complaint against three persons. The Magistrate refused and in appeal the High Court made a complaint against two persons, which came on for hearing before another Magistrate who directed the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Court which had tried the case for a complaint against a third person under Ss. 193, 465, 471 and 109, I. P. C.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal by one Sujauddin against an order directing a complaint to be preferred against him for having committed offences under Ss. 193, 465, 471 and 109, I. P. C. It appears that one Padam Prosad was in August of last year acquitted on a charge under S. 372, I. P. C., of selling a minor girl and that at the trial of that accused a certain certified copy was produced from the register of births at Benares. It is said that the copy which was produced by the defence had been tampered with and that it was a false document the subject-matter of forgery within the meaning of the Code. Thereupon the complainant in the case applied to the Magistrate who tried the matter against three persons two of them were named, Padam Prosad and Behari Lal, and one was unnamed but his character and description were indicated, namely, that he was a clerk in the office of the Registrar of Births at Benares. The Magistrate directed a police investigation and after considering the whole matter made up his mind that he would not prefer any complaint. The complainant appealed to the High Court and the High Court made a complaint against Padam Prosad and Behari Lal. Thereupon the complaint so preferred came on for hearing or investigation before the Chief Presidency Magistrate and he after a lapse of some time, namely, in October last, directed the Public Prosecutor to apply to the successor of the Magistrate who had tried the case for a complaint to be made against the present appellant, Sujauddin and one Kanhaiyalal. On 11th October this complaint was made.

The appellant appeals and he takes his stand upon the circumstance that the question whether any complaint should be made was discussed before the Magistrate who had actually tried the case and the matter having gone to the High Court a complaint was directed against two persons only and not against him.

Mr. Bhattacharjya for the Crown says, first of all, that it is not necessary when once a complaint has been made against certain persons in respect of an offence that another complaint should be made against other persons whom the Magistrate finds to be necessary parties as persons implicated in the offence. He contends before us that complaints are not made against specific offenders but of offences and that once a complaint is made the Magistrate conducting the enquiry has to proceed under S. 200, Criminal P. C., and there is no objection whatsoever to his directing summonses to issue against persons other than those specifically named in the complaint if he finds that this is necessary for the ends of justice. In support of this contention he refers to the decision of a Division Bench of this Court Giridhari Lal v. Emperor (1). He further contends that even if it be not the case that this complaint is supererogatory, the Magistrate in the present case was well warranted in making a complaint against Sujauddin.

It appears that Sujauddin is one of several accused persons who are about to be put on their trial before the present High Court Session, an order of commitment having been made. Mr. Chatterjee has pointed out to us that an order was made to the effect that until this appeal was heard no order of commitment would be made to the High Court Session and, on an examination of that matter, I think the only bearing of it is this that it would not be right, for the purposes of this appeal, to regard Mr. Chatterjee's case as prejudiced on the score of being late. I do not propose to take that fact against the appellant in the present case at all.

Now, the question whether a complaint made as required by S. 195 of the Code by virtue of S. 476, is necessary or not where the same offence has already been made the subject-matter of a complaint mentioning other persons is not an easy one. Had it been necessary to go into that matter on principle and at length I would have required further time to do it justice, and I do not think it necessary in this case to attempt to come to a final conclusion.

The principle that a complaint is in respect of offences and not in respect of offenders is a kind of proposition that may be very sound and at the same time may be pushed too far; and in this matter a very careful examination of the relevant sections of the Criminal Procedure Code would have to be undertaken before the law could be properly laid down. I think it is just possible also that the offences complained of in this case which I have already mentioned at the beginning of this judgment might not all be in the same position for the purposes of this argument. However that may be, I am of opinion that this appeal must fail on the short ground that, assuming another complaint to be necessary, I am not satisfied that there was anything wrong in making a complaint in the circumstances of this case against Sujauddin.

The first principle to be considered in this matter is that it is the public interest which is paramount in the matter. I should be slow to say anything that would encourage a complainant to ask for a complaint against a person and being refused to make another attempt to get the same order. Magistrates would be very well advised to deal with such applications very firmly. In this case the real truth of the matter is that the application to the trial Magistrate was not an application against or in respect of Sujauddin at all. His name came into the matter incidentally and only because the Magistrate having directed a police investigation the question of this man's name with others arose. That Magistrate having refused to make any complaint the complainant appealed to this High Court and I am quite clear that any such appeal would not be regarded as an appeal against the refusal of an order against Sujauddin. The High Court having made an order against two of the three people against whom the complaint was asked for cannot, in my judgment, be regarded as having refused to make a complaint in the circumstances against Sujauddin. When the matter came before the Chief Presidency Magistrate after the High Court's complaint he found that it was necessary, to get to the bottom of this matter, to have other parties added as persons to be charged; and, having regard to principle and to the public interest, I am not of opinion that the previous proceedings at the instance of the complainant afford any reason why the complaint against Sujauddin should be set aside. In my judgment, the appeal must be dismissed.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the accused man was put on his trial before the learned Sessions Judge of Murshidabad and a jury of five upon a charge that about midday on 14th April 1928, he committed culpable homicide by killing his wife. The wife's name was Kiranbala and it would appear that she was a mere girl of some 15 years of age. She had been married to the accused since about 1924.

Now the evidence on the part of the prosecution consists first of all of a considerable amount of evidence to the effect that the accused used from time to time to ill-treat his wife. There is a certain amount of evidence but not of a character which can be said to be in any way substantial to the effect that the accused man was carrying on an intrigue with the widow of an uncle who lived next door and that this might have had something to do with the animosity between the husband and the wife. There is some further evidence as to which it is a matter of opinion whether it is substantial or not to the effect that this girl may have been acting imprudently if not carrying on an intrigue with the witness Srikrishna. But the evidence which matters and which may be regarded as the evidence upon which the prosecution sought to bring the charge home to the accused is, in the first place, the evidence of some 4 or 5 witnesses who say that in the middle of the day on the 14th April as they passed near by to the accused's hut they heard his wife crying out for help saying that she was about to be killed, and one witness at least speaks to words of threat and intention to kill on the part of the accused man. Sometime afterwards it appears that the accused is seen by certain witnesses going on to the top of his kitchen with an instrument what has been called a crowbar and breaking down a part of the wall. When the accused man makes up his mind to call in persons from outside the body of the wife is discovered lying on the floor with certain parts of the earthen wall lying round about her and certain parts lying on her body, and the story that is given out by the husband is this that he was away from the house in the morning but that when he came back in the afternoon he found this state of affairs, and his suggestion was that he knew nothing as to what occurred and that it would appear that a part of this wall had fallen down upon the girl and she had met her death while cooking in that room. It would appear further that a few days before the occurrence a fire in the thatch of this house had taken place and it is suggested that the damage done at that time may have accounted for the collapse of this earthen wall.

The condition of the body of the girl and the clods make it extremely difficult to suppose that any such accident happened as that the wall collapsed on the top of the girl and killed her. It appears that only a small portion of the wall collapsed at all. In addition to that there is the evidence of witnesses who say that the man was seen breaking down a part of the wall with a crowbar. One clod at least was produced in Court and the learned Judge was satisfied that it showed marks that it had been forced off by a crowbar. If, therefore, the question in this case was—whether or not the accused man has shown that this girl had met her death by the wall falling on the top of her—there would be very little doubt of the finding which is against him.

The real question which arises is whether in these circumstances this Court can rely upon the evidence which tends to show that the girl met her death at the hands of the man, that the man was in the hut with her in the middle of the day and was ill-treating her in such a way that she came by her death.

As I have said, there is evidence of 4 or 5 witnesses called to say that they heard the screams and called to say that the man himself was heard to shout. One witness indeed says that he stepped up and peeped in and saw what was happening and that the man threatened him with this instrument or crowbar.

I confess that on reading the evidence of these witnesses for the first time I rather thought that these witnesses were intending to say that they heard sounds of the man beating his wife or sounds that pointed to this. On re-reading their evidence I find that it is not clear that they go so far. They all speak merely to hearing something being cried out or said.

The question is one which requires to be carefully examined in the light of the injury report and of medical evidence. The first thing that one sees from the medical evidence is that it would appear to be equally inconsistent with the view that the wall fell down upon the girl and killed her and with the view that she was beaten to death with any instrument. There is one abrasion below the right angle of the lower jaw. There is another about an inch below the right side of the neck of the dimension of a pice. There are some indications that the girl died from asphyxia and so far as can be seen if this girl met her death she probably died from being suffocated. The back of her legs and other portions of her body and a small portion of the throat are described by the expression "skin removed," but no indication is given of the probable character of the agency by which it was done. The opinion of the doctor is that there was probably an unnatural death and the medical officer who conducted the post-mortem said that all the signs pointed to asphyxial death.

If that were all it would be a somewhat formidable case to leave to the jury against the accused on the basis that the shouts and cries that had been heard at that time were shouts and cries by the man at a time when the man was either strangling her by pressing her throat or otherwise endeavouring to choke her. But most unfortunately and by what appears to be the greatest imprudence no doctor was called before the jury at all. The only thing that was done to satisfy the jury in this case—a case where everything depends upon the medical evidence and upon the jury being able to satisfy themselves as to what the medical facts really were—was that the medical officer Sris Chander Sarkar was called before the Committing Magistrate and his deposition was put in as part of the evidence for the prosecution at the trial. When that comes to be examined one finds that the doctor is recorded to have given the opinion that death might have taken place not less than three days before the date of the post-mortem examination. He does definitely say, taking that sentence, at its ordinary meaning, that in his opinion death could not have been less than three days before the date of the post-mortem examination. Whether that is what he said and, if so, whether that is what he meant is another matter. But at the time this trial was held before the learned Sessions Judge and a jury the prosecution had no right to stand merely upon that deposition in its recorded form and it seems to me to be unpardonable, carelessness in a case of this character that with a statement utterly inconsistent with the prosecution evidence given as a medical opinion by the doctor who held the post-mortem no endeavour was made either to call the medical officer himself or to give any medical evidence in the hearing of the jury.

When one comes to look in detail at the report of the post-mortem one finds that the post-mortem was conducted on the very next day after the alleged occurrence. The girl is said to have been lying dead on the midday of 14th April. The doctor who held the post-mortem on 15th says or appears to say that he thinks that she must have been dead for at least three days. When one examines the injury report one sees that a great many of the organs specified in the usual form are described one after another as "decomposed," and one would presume that what is meant is that these organs are in such a condition that no useful information can be gathered by inspection and one certainly would think from the post-mortem report that there was ample material for the opinion that the girl must on the 15th have been dead for three days. If that be so, then the evidence of the doctor given before the jury was absolutely inconsistent with the witnesses' story as to what they heard on the 15th and the case is left to the jury as appears from the learned Judge's heads of charge without any comment being made upon that circumstance; nor does the learned Judge give it a place in his letter of reference. The charge of the learned Judge and the letter of reference are both lucid and admirable and I have nothing to say against them—excepting this that they in no way say that there is any difficulty arising out of the evidence of the doctor.

In these circumstances we have to regard the verdict of the jury in a manner which is quite different from the way in which we might feel ourselves obliged to regard a verdict which has no basis or justification in the recorded evidence. The jury were, if this was a point present to their minds, quite right to say that they could not be asked to convict the accused man with evidence in that condition. They were entitled to say to themselves:

"Suppose the doctor has been called, suppose he came before us and it had been put to Dr. Sris Chandra Sircar that this girl was alive on 14th April and suppose he had said 'Well, in my opinion, from what I saw on the 15th I say that is quite impossible';

no jury could have convicted upon the evidence in this case. It seems to me that that is exactly the position in which this Court now is upon this reference.

It is true that we have power under S. 307, Criminal P. C., read with S 428, to call further evidence. It would perhaps be possible to have Dr. Sris recalled and the whole matter gone into again. Then the case would come back before this Court after a perfectly proper acquittal by the unanimous verdict of the jury who tried the case. It would come back before this Court on a different state of the evidence and in that case we should have no doubt power to do what we think right. Speaking for myself I am entirely unable to accede to the suggestion that further evidence on this matter should be called.

I wish that it could be impressed upon Public Prosecutors and upon the Sessions Judges that in cases—serious cases of murder or of man-slaughter it is unreasonable to expect the jury to convict if a proper exposition and explanation of the medical evidence is not given viva voce by a doctor who can deal with the matter and satisfy the jury. The jury are quite entitled to be fully satisfied. Indeed not until one has gleaned all the facts, one can from the medical report, is one really in a position to say what parts of the other evidence can be relied upon. In my opinion, it may or may not be a mere mistake in expression of opinion or that the doctor was mistaken or was misinterpreted, but it is impossible for us to do anything save to take this solemn opinion as it is. I do not know, as this is not the first time on which I have had occasion to make this criticism or complaint, whether this will have any effect upon the conduct of cases of this character in the mofussil, but the one circumstance which seems to me to make this case worthy of attention is that it is a very plain illustration of the fact that a jury will sometimes find points which are really against the prosecution but which escape the notice of learned Judges and of Public Prosecutors.

Thinking as I do that in this case the jury were entirely in the right, in my opinion, this reference ought to be rejected and the accused acquitted and if he is in custody he must be released.

If he is on bail his bail bond should be discharged.

Buckland, J.—I agree but I desire to make a few observations as to what has been disclosed at the hearing of this reference.

To me it is shocking that what may be a serious miscarriage of justice should occur by reason of what the learned Chief Justice has described, and I entirely concur, as unpardonable carelessness on the part of those charged with the prosecution. Ordinarily it is the practice to call the doctor as a witness in the Sessions Court when the death of a person is involved. That being so I do not understand why it was not followed on this occasion for the Public Prosecutor must have been fully aware of what the doctor had said. Similarly with regard to the Sessions Judge, who could under S. 509 (2), Criminal P. C., have required the doctor to be summoned and examined as a witness and I am wholly at a loss to understand why he did not insist upon the doctor being called.

We were asked to send the case back to the Sessions Judge to have the doctor further examined or to examine him ourselves. The question as to how long before the post-mortem examination the death had actually occurred is, as regards the doctor, a matter of opinion. The facts upon which the doctor formed his opinion must have been fresher and far more readily present to his mind at the time when he gave his evidence in the Magistrate's Court than they possibly could be now. If he were to repeat his former opinion time and expense would have been wasted. If, on the other hand, he were to give an opinion more favourable to the prosecution it could not fail to be subjected on behalf of the accused to strong adverse comment, in the circumstances I do not think it would be fair to the doctor to send the case back for or to take further evidence and it is extremely doubtful if it would serve any useful purpose.

Finally I desire to make one observation with regard to the post-mortem report. I observe that that it is chiefly confined to facts observed by the doctor but there is, however, a place at the foot where the medical officer is required to record his opinion as to the cause of death. Though my experience of cases of this kind is limited it appears to me that it probably would be useful that he should also be required to record the length of time which in his opinion has elapsed since death took place. This is a matter as to which I apprehend that in every case the medical man who conducts the post-mortem examination should be able to express an opinion, either with or without qualification. It would be preferable that he should be required to record his opinion at the earliest possible moment than that he should be asked to give it at a later stage when he has not the same opportunity to observe the fact upon which he must form his conclusion

Page, J.—This case raises a question of some importance with respect to the rights of auction-purchasers at a Court sale in execution of a decree. The plaintiff obtained a money decree against defendants 1 to 4, the sons of one Pitambar Ari to whom the plaintiff had lent money upon the security of a promissory note, to the extent to which the defendants were in possession of assets belonging to Pitambar's estate. On 16th April 1919 the plaintiff himself purchased the property in dispute at a Court sale in execution of the decree. No objection to the sale of this property was raised by the defendants or any of them under S. 47 or O. 21, Civil P. C., or otherwise and in due course an order confirming the sale was passed under O. 21, R. 92. Thereupon the sale became absolute, and the property was deemed to have vested in the plaintiff as from the date of the sale. (S. 65, and O. 21, R. 92). The plaintiff thereafter took actual possession of the property, but having been ousted by the defendants 1—4 he brought the present suit to recover possession of the property on establishment of his title thereto.

At the trial the defendants contended that the property in suit had been sold in execution of an earlier decree against their father Pitambar; that on 15th December 1915, they had purchased it at a Court sale in execution of that decree; and that the property was not liable to attachment or sale in execution of the decree which the plaintiff had obtained in 1919.

Both the lower Courts have held that the sale to the defendants was proved and that the sale to them was valid, and the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed. The plaintiff, however, in the lower Courts and also in the present appeal has contended that inasmuch as the defendants did not prefer any objection to the sale in the execution proceedings they were precluded from challenging the validity of the sale by way of defence to the present suit by the auction purchaser for possession. Now, although the defendants pleaded that they had no knowledge of the decree or of the execution proceedings which culminated in the sale of the disputed property to the plaintiff, no issue was raised in that behalf and no finding was obtained by the defendants in either Court that they were not aware of the decree and of the execution proceedings, or that their want of knowledge was due to the fraud of the plaintiff, and for the purposes of this appeal it must be taken that at all material times the defendants were fully cognizant of the steps that the plaintiff was taking to enforce his claim against the property in suit. In support of his contention the appellant referred to a number of authorities to the effect that all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit or their representatives must be raised and decided in the execution proceedings, and that:

"the penalty imposed on a negligent judgment-debtor is set out in R. 92, and it is that the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. This amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exists on which the validity of the sale could have been questioned."

On the other hand the respondents relied upon a line of authorities in which the Court, strictly following the language of S. 47, Civil P. C. (5 of 1908) pointed out that the legislature had not prohibited the determination of such questions in but by a separate suit, and therefore, held that all objections to the sale that might have been but were not raised in the execution proceedings by the judgment-debtor might be pleaded by way of defence in a suit by the purchaser for possession of the property that had been sold in execution of the decree. Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth Shaha (9), Nil Kamal Mukherji v. Jahnavi (10), Durga Charan v. Karmat Khan (11) Chandramani Saha v. Halijennessa Bibi (12) *Suradhani Dutta v. On the one hand it would be unjust that a judgment-debtor, who by reason of the fraud of the decree-holder or judgment-creditor had remained unaware of the execution proceedings until after the auction purchaser had brought his suit for possession, should be debarred from raising objections to the sale as a defence to the claim for possession. On the other hand, it would be unjust to an auction-purchaser at an execution sale, who bona fide and in due course of law had obtained an order confirming the sale, that the right to objection to the validity of the sale should depend upon whether the judgment-debtor was the plaintiff or the defendant in a separate suit, or that the validity of the absolute title that had vested in him under S. 65 and O. 21, R. 92 of the Code should remain open to objection by the judgment-debtor until the auction purchaser had obtained possession of the property.

Now, are the divergent rulings upon this subject to which I have referred incapable of reconciliation? I think not. And I am the more disposed to take this view because I find that Mitra, Walmsley and Suhrawardy JJ. have each of them expressed an opinion in favour of the one view as well as of the other. In my opinion when the matter is proved more deeply the true rule will be found to lie between the two extremes.

There can be no doubt as to the object that the legislature had in view when enacting the provisions of the Code relating to execution. It was to provide machinery whereby an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree should be able to obtain an absolute and conclusive title to the property sold in a simple and expeditious manner.

"It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of S. 244." (now S. 47) per Lord Macnaghten in Prosonna Kumar Sanyal v. Kalidas, (16) (at p. 687).

"If there was really a ground of complaint, and if the judgment-debtor would have been injured by these proceedings in attaching and selling the whole of the property while the interest was such as it was, they ought to have come and complained. It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property if the judgment-debtor could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached and about to be sold, which he knew well but of which the execution creditor or decree-holder might be perfectly ignorant—that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed, and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated. That, in their Lordships' opinion, cannot be allowed."

(Per Sir Richard Couch in T. R. Arunachellam v. V. R. Arunachellam Chetti (17) at p. 174 of 15 I. A.).

In my opinion, the true rule to be collected from the authorities is this, that all questions between the parties to the suit or their representatives relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree must be raised and determined in the execution proceedings as provided by the Code and not otherwise, and that the parties or their representatives are precluded from raising or canvassing any such question in any separate suit or proceeding, except by way of defence in a separate suit when the defendant has been kept out of knowledge of the execution proceedings until after the suit had been brought by the fraud of the decree-holder or judgment-creditor.

In the circumstances obtaining in the present suit, in my opinion, the respondents were precluded from raising the defence that the property in suit was not liable to be sold in execution of the plaintiffs' decree, and as against defendants 1—4 the appeal succeeds, and the decrees of the lower Courts will be set aside.

The plaintiff is entitled to a declaration of his title, and to a decree for possession as prayed as against defendants 1 to 4. As against defendant 5 the decree of the lower Court stands and the suit is dismissed. The respondents, defendants 1 to 4, will pay the appellant's costs in all the Courts.

Chandra Sekhar Sen—for Appellant.Narendra Kumar Das—for Respondents.

Mitter, J.—The only question argued in this appeal is the question of limitation. The plaintiff, now appellant, purchased in execution of a money decree against Khadim Ali the land in suit on 8th December 1903. The sale was made absolute on 14th January 1910 and symbolical possession was taken on 2nd March 1913. The defendants, now respondents were cosharers with Khadim Ali in the disputed land. They contend that the present suit is barred by limitation as it was not instituted within 12 years from the date of sale. The Munsif held that there was no allegation in the plaint that Khadim Ali was in possession of the disputed land jointly with the defendants and found the issue of limitation against the plaintiff and dismissed his suit. On appeal the learned District Judge of Chittagong held that time should begin to run from the date of the sale and not from the date of delivery of symbolical possession as was contended for by the plaintiff. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal. Art. 138, Sch. 1 to the Limitation Act cannot govern the present case as the article applies only against judgment-debtors and persons claiming through them. The defendants in the present case do not claim through the judgment-debtor Khadim Ali, so Art. 138 does not apply. Art. 144 which is the residuary article applies and the question arises as to when the possession of the defendants became adverse to that of the plaintiff. It is argued by the learned vakil for the appellant that as the possession of the defendants was possession on behalf of their cosharer Khadim Ali at its inception it did not become adverse till the plaintiff who had stepped into the shoes of Khadim Ali was resisted in obtaining actual possession. In other words it is said that the possession became adverse from the date of the delivery of symbolical possession.

In my opinion this contention is not sound for the same rights and privileges which a cosharer has as against his other cosharers are not enjoyed by his assignee. It is true that in the case of a cosharer the possession of one cosharer is the possession of all and that if one of them sets up a prescriptive title against the others he must prove that his possession was openly hostile but it is difficult to understand how an assignee can by mere fact of assignment become a cosharer if his rights are denied by the other cosharers. It is beyond controversy that if the assignor has not transferred possession of the property assigned to his assignee the latter in order to succeed in a suit for possession must sue within 12 years from the date of his assignment and that a suit against his assignor would be barred if he comes into Court after that period. It would seem logically to follow from this position that the claim which would be barred against the assignor would also be barred against the other cosharer for otherwise an absurd position would be created. It would indeed be absurd to hold that a claim which would obviously be barred against the assignor would not be barred if brought against the other co-sharers who do not even recognize the right of the assignor to assign in favour of a third party. This view receives indirect support from the case of Bhivrao v. Rukmin (1). Adverse possession depends upon the claim or title under which the possessor holds and not upon a consideration of the question in whom the true ownership is vested whether in a single person or in many jointly. Adverse possession is possession by a person holding the land on his own behalf or on behalf of some person other than the true owner. See the observations of Markby, J., in the case of Bejoy Chunder Bannerjee v. Kali Prosonna Mukherji (2). Although the possession of the defendant was not adverse to that of Khadim Ali it became adverse to the plaintiff for it was possession on behalf of some person other than the true owner.

The ownership had passed on the date of the sale from Khadim Ali to the plaintiff and defendants' possession was adverse possession to that of the plaintiff from the date of the sale, for even if he was holding possession for Khadim Ali, he was holding possession on behalf of some person other than the true owner for Khadim Ali's right had been extinguished by the sale either from the date of the sale or from the date when the sale became absolute both of which happened more than 12 years before suit.

No doubt it is true that co-sharers in possession do not exclude each other and that possession of co-sharers is not adverse to the other co-sharers. But an alienee of a co-sharer is not a co-sharer. He is a stranger and he does exclude the others and his possession is adverse : see Lakshman v. Moru (3). Although the present case is the converse of the Bombay case, just referred to, the same principle applies for the reasons which I have already given. For the reasons given above the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Leave has been asked for and is granted. I consider that it is a fit case for appeal.

Mukerji, J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen relates to seven plots of land. The plaintiff's allegation was that out of these seven plots, plot 1 belonged to one Neamat Ali and defendant 1 in equal shares and plots 2 to 7 belonged to one Khadem Ali and defendant 1 also in equal shares. His case further was that he had purchased the shares of Neamat Ali and Khadem Ali in execution of a decree for money against them on 8th December 1909, and took delivery of possession against those persons through Court on 2nd March 1913, and when he went to take actual possession Neamat Ali and Khadem Ali went away, but defendant 1 in collusion with some other persons including the defendants 2 to 4 opposed him. He alleged further that the defendants had made certain excavations in and were about to do further damage to the lands. The suit was instituted on 27th February 1923 with prayers for declaration of title, joint possession with defendant 1 and injunction.

The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and raised some dispute as to the extent of their own title as amongst themselves.

The Munsif held that the plaintiff had failed to make out that Neamat Ali had any title to plot 1, or that Khadem Ali had any title to plot 7. He held that Khadem Ali and defendant 1 were co-sharers in respect of plots 2 to 6. He was able to find the extent of Khadem Ali's share in only two out of these five plots, that is to say, in plots 2 and 6, and he found that share as 1/7th. As regards plots 3, 4 and 5 he was unable to find the extent of Khadem Ali's share. He held that the plaintiff had made out his title to plots 2 to 6 and to the shares mentioned above. He, however, dismissed the suit as in his opinion Art. 138, Sch. 1, Lim. Act applied and the suit had not been instituted within 12 years from 14th January 1910, the date of confirmation of the sale at which the plaintiff had made his purchase. He did not arrive at any finding as regards the extent of the shares, if any, of the different defendants. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who affirmed the Munsif's view on the question of limitation and held further that even if Art. 144 applied the same result would follow.

The plaintiff then appealed to this Court. My learned brother Mitter, J., held that Art. 144 applies to the case. Applying that article he held that, as by the sale the title of Khadem Ali was extinguished, the possession of the co-sharers of Khadem Ali became from that point of time adverse to the plaintiff who had by the said sale become the true owner, and such adverse possession having continued for over twelve years the suit was barred under Art. 144. The suit, it may be said, was instituted beyond twelve years from 8th December 1909 which was the date of the sale and also beyond the like period from 14th January 1910, which was the date of its confirmation. Mitter, J., accordingly dismissed the appeal and from his decision the plaintiff has preferred this appeal under Letters Patent.

I have examined the evidence in the case and I may state here that if it is to be determined as a question of fact when the defendants' possession became adverse to the plaintiff the question has to be decided in only one way, namely, by holding that such adverse possession commenced only after the plaintiff went upon the land after obtaining possession against the judgment-debtor Khadem Ali through Court on 2nd March 1913. It will have to be seen, however, whether upon any principle of law the possession of Khadem Ali's cosharers became adverse to the plaintiff from and by reason of the sale itself.

Now, to constitute a tenancy-in-common, there must be an equal right to the possession of every part and parcel of the subject matter of the tenancy; joint possession is not necessary, unity of right of possession being all that is required. As a general proposition the entry of one co-tenant, in the absence of clear proof to the contrary, enures for the benefit of all. The law makes a presumption that the relation between co-tenants is amicable rather than hostile; and regards the acts of one co-tenant as being in subordination of the title of all the co-tenants, for by so regarding they may be made to promote the interest of all. This rule prevails not merely on behalf of those who are co-tenants when the entry was made, but extends to all who afterwards acquire undivided interests in the property. In Freeman on Co-tenancy and Partition, 2nd Edition, S. 167, the following illustration appears:

"If A and B together own (personal) property of which A is in actual possession, and B sells his moiety to C, the possession of A immediately becomes the possession of C also."

My learned brother Mitter, J., has referred to certain cases to which it is necessary to advert in order to see whether they in any way militate against the aforementioned view. In one of these cases, Bejoy Chunder Bannerjee v. Kally Prosonna Mukherji (2), Markby, J., said:

"By adverse possession I understand to be meant possession by a person holding the land on his behalf or of some person other than the true owner, the true owner having the right to immediate possession."

But with the extinguishment of the right to possess the unity of the right to possession ceases, and as soon as the title passes to the purchaser, it is the latter in whom vests the right to possession, and the purchaser becomes a tenant-in-common with the vendor's co-tenants. It would be a fundamental misconception to think that one co-tenant in the absence of any thing to the contrary is, in any sense, in control or possession of the share of his co-tenants. The case of Lakshman v. Moru (3), explains what is meant by "adverse possession," but does not profess to touch the present question. The case of Bhivrao v. Rukhmin (1), has also little bearing upon this question as it was a case where certain members of a joint Hindu family alienated by sale and mortgage specified plots of lands "out of their share," giving boundaries of the plots and covenanting for title; and what was really decided was that the purchaser entered as owner and not as a co-sharer, and being in such possession for over twelve years was able to defeat under Art. 144 the title of the coparceners of the vendors or mortgagors.

With all deference, I am of opinion that the view taken by my learned brother Mitter, J., is not correct. I would accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the decisions of all the Courts below direct a decree to be entered in plaintiff's favour declaring his right by purchase and awarding him joint possession with the defendants in plots 2 to 6 mentioned in the plaint, the share of the plaintiff being  $\frac{1}{7}$ th in plots 2 and 6, and the extent of his share in plots 3, 4 and 5 not being determined. The other reliefs asked for by the plaintiffs in respect of these plots should be refused as there are no materials on which they may be granted. The suit in respect of plots 1 and 7 should be dismissed in toto. The plaintiff will get half his costs in all the Courts.

Rankin, C. J.—I agree.

Appeals Nos. 1787 and 1788 of 1926, Decided on 9th August 1928, from decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, Tipperah, D/- 11th May 1926.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 22 (2) (amended by Act I of 1908)—Transferable occupancy holding purchased by cosharer landlord—He holds it not as raiyat, but as tenure-holder subject to payment of fair rent to other cosharers.

If a cosharer landlord purchases a transferable occupancy holding, he is entitled to hold it not as a raiyat, but as a tenure-holder in the right which he has in the tenure, subject to payment of a fair and equitable rent to the other cosharer: A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 210, Rel. on. [P 254 C 1]

(b) Occupancy holding—Nontransferable holding—Cosharer landlord purchasing nontransferable occupancy holding—Another cosharer subsequently purchasing same and obtaining possession—Latter's possession is wrongful and former can recover possession of holding except latter's share.

When a cosharer landlord takes an unlawful possession of the holding, another cosharer purchaser of the holding is entitled to recover possession from him except to the extent of the share of the cosharer.

A cosharer landlord purchased a nontransferable occupancy in execution of a money decree. Subsequently another cosharer landlord purchased the same holding in execution of his money decree and obtained possession:

Held: that the possession of the latter was wrongful and the former was entitled to recover possession of the holding except to the extent of the share of the latter: 42 Cal. 172 (F.B.); 26 Cal. 553 and 21 C. C. 144, Expl.* [P 254 C 1]Jogesh Chandra Roy and Sasadhar Roy—for Appellants.Basak and Bepin Chandra Basu—for Respondents.Suhrawardy, J.—These are appeals by defendants 4 to 7 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah dated 11th May 1926. Defendants 1 to 3 had a jote under a sikmi taluk in which the respondents, the appellants and some others are jointly interested. In execution of a money decree the plaintiffs purchased the holding in 1912. But it appears that they did not get possession of the same. In 1914 the appellants obtained a money-decree against the same tenants and sold the holding and obtained possession thereof. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought these two suits for recovery of possession of the lands included in the holding from the defendants. The defence was that the plaintiffs had no right in the sikmi and that the plaintiffs being part-owners of the sikmi were not legally entitled to evict the defendants who were also proprietors of the same taluk and were in possession by virtue of their auction-purchase. It was also pleaded that the tenancy being nontransferable the plaintiffs had acquired no right to it. Both the Courts below made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs minus the defendants' share which is two annas three gandas.Defendants 4 to 7 have appealed and it is argued on their behalf that the view of the law taken by the Courts below is wrong. It is contended that the tenancy being a nontransferable occupancy holding, S. 22, Ben. Ten. Act, does not apply and that the plaintiffs by virtue of their purchase have acquired no right. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy (1) and Lakhi Kanta Das v. Balbhadra Prosad Das (2). These cases were, however, decided on the law as it stood before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1908. The law as is now laid down by the authorities on this point will be considered later. Though the defendants in their written statement said that the tenancy was a nontransferable occupancy holding, the trial Court proceeded upon the assumption that S. 22 applied to the case. This was due to the fact that in the Record-of-Rights on which the defendants base their claim the defendants were recorded as being in possession as cosharer maliks under S. 22, Ben. Ten. Act. In this state of things the case proceeded under S. 22 and the judgment of the Court below does not give any indication whatsoever that the question of transferability or nontransferability of the holding was ever mooted. The case in the lower appellate Court seems to have been argued on the basis of S. 22 and the decision arrived at by that Court is also passed with reference to that section. I will, therefore, first of all examine the correctness of the decision of the Court below with reference to S. 22, Ben. Ten. Act. Cl. (2) as amended by Act 1 of 1908 East Bengal and Assam is :

(1) [1900] 27 Cal. 473=4 C. W. N. 569.

(2) [1914] 19 C. L. J. 400=25 I. C. 546.

"if the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, such person shall have no right to hold the land as a raiyat, but shall hold it as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, as the case may be, and shall pay to his cosharers a fair and equitable sum for the use and occupation of the same."

It means in simpler language that if a cosharer landlord purchases an occupancy holding which should be a transferable occupancy holding, he is entitled to hold it not as a raiyat, but as a tenure-holder in the right which he has in the tenure subject to payment of a fair and equitable rent to the other cosharers. The object of the amendment has been explained in Purna Chandra Roy v. Mathura Mohan Saha (3), where the law is thus stated :

"The effect of the amended section is that the occupancy holding disappears, and the purchaser holds the land as a joint proprietor or joint tenure-holder, as the case may be. To put the matter briefly, the purchaser enjoys the land in his character of proprietor or tenure-holder and not as a raiyat. But, as upon the disappearance of the tenant right, all the holders of the superior interest would prima facie be entitled to possession, that one amongst them who is allowed to keep exclusive possession of the land is made to pay his cosharers a fair and equitable sum for such use and occupation."

By the plaintiffs' purchase in 1912 they acquired the holding divested of its character as an occupancy holding and also obtained under S. 22 the right to possess the land subject to payment of a fair and equitable amount to their cosharers. By their purchase of the same holding in 1914 the defendants did not purchase anything because whatever interest the tenants had in the land had already been sold to the plaintiffs in 1912. The defendants must, therefore, be taken to be trespassers and this position has not been seriously denied. Under S. 22 the plaintiffs had the right to the recovery of possession of the entire land from the defendants. But the Courts below have given them a decree in respect of the land less the defendants' share and they were satisfied with it.

Now, assuming that the holding was a non-transferable occupancy holding, according to the decision of the Full Bench case of Dayamoyee v. Ananda Mohan (4), the plaintiffs by their purchase acquired a good title to the land against every person except the landlord. The Full Bench decision does not particularly deal with the case of a cosharer landlord, but it cannot be disputed that by 'landlord' is meant 'the entire body of landlords' or 'the 16 annas landlord.' A cosharer landlord can only object to the sale of the holding to the extent of his own share. By the sale of a nontransferable occupancy holding a raiyat is not entitled to question the legality of the sale; the only person who can challenge its validity is the landlord. It is hardly to be presumed that a cosharer landlord is entitled to object to the sale of the entire holding for it is possible the other cosharers have acquiesced in the sale or accepted the transfer. It has been held that where a cosharer landlord purchases a holding, another cosharer has a right to recover possession of the property to the extent of his own share. Dilbar Sardar v. Hosein Ali Bepari (5) and Kanchan Mandar v. Kamala Prosad (6). In the last case the law is thus stated :

"In the event of a sale of a nontransferable occupancy holding, the purchaser can be evicted by any of the cosharer landlords to the extent of his own share, and if possession of the entire holding has been acquired by some of the cosharers the other cosharers are entitled to joint possession thereof."

The logical conclusion from this view is that when a cosharer landlord takes an unlawful possession of a holding another cosharer purchaser of the holding is entitled to recover possession from him except to the extent of the share of the cosharer. Looking at the question as it has been raised before us, it does not seem to have been discussed in any of the reported cases. From all points of view the decree of the lower appellate Court seems to be unassailable.

A good deal of argument was founded on same observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (7): at p. 296 (of 51 I. A.) their Lordships say :

(4) [1915] 42 Cal. 172=20 C.L.J. 52=27 I.C. 61=18 C.W.N. 971 (F.B.).

(5) [1893] 26 Cal. 553.

(6) [1915] 21 C.L.J. 441=23 I.C. 734.

(7) A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 144=51 Cal. 631=51 I.A. 293 (P.C.).

"No cosharer can, as against his cosharers, obtain any jote right, a right of permanent occupancy, in the lands held in common. nor can he create by letting the lands to cultivators as his tenants any right of occupancy of the lands in them."

This is a reproduction of Cls. 2 and 3 of S. 22. Later on their Lordships observe:

"Even if the Midnapur Company purchased any jote rights in lands held in common by the cosharers, such a purchase would in law be held to have been a purchase for the benefit of all the cosharers, and the jote rights so purchased would by the purchase be extinguished."

A great deal of stress has been laid upon the word 'benefit' in the passage quoted. What their Lordships meant is that if a cosharer purchases land held in common by him and his cosharers, he would hold by virtue of such purchase the land to the benefit of the other cosharers, namely, he would be liable to pay fair and equitable rent to them; but the jote right so purchased would be extinguished. Even if the word 'benefit' in their Lordships' judgment means 'on behalf of' or 'subject to the right of the joint possession by the other cosharer landlord, the plaintiffs' suit for recovery of possession against the defendants would not be affected by what their Lordships said. The defendants being trespassers and having no right to remain on the land and the plaintiffs claiming recovery of possession of the land under a semblance of title which gives them the right to present possession plaintiffs are entitled to succeed. If in future other cosharers come in and claim possession of their shares from the plaintiffs and if it is proved that the land is a nontransferable occupancy holding, they will be under the law entitled to obtain joint possession with the plaintiffs to the extent of their shares.

The result is that the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Garlick, J.—I agree. The plaintiffs purchased the holding, and the defendants, as cosharers of the taluk, can only object to the plaintiff's possession of the land of the holding so far as their own share of the taluk is concerned.

Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 103-B—Presumption under S. 103-B may be rebutted by reference to proceedings before revenue authorities making entry.

It is quite open to a party who seeks to rebut a presumption arising out of an entry in the settlement records to show by a reference to the proceedings that had been taken by the revenue authorities that the entry itself is wrong or is one which should not be taken at its face value: 27 C. L. J. 107 Foll.; A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 268, not Foll. [P 256 C 2]

Hemendra Ch. Sen—for Appellants.

Harendra Nath Mukerjee—for Respondents.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The plaintiffs have been successful in both the Courts below and the defendants have thereupon preferred this second appeal.

The plaintiffs' case was that the land in suit appertained to a jama which they held under certain zemindar called the Mitras, that they had leased out the land to one Sonatan and that Sonatan had been dispossessed by the defendants in 1919. The defence, on the other hand, was that the land appertained to a jama of the defendants themselves which they held under certain zemindars called the Hatbaria zemindars.

The learned Subordinate Judge in concurrence with the trial Court found that the plaintiffs' case that the land appertained to their jama under the Mitras, that the same had been leased out to Sonatan and that Sonatan had been dispossessed by the defendants had been made out. He came to this conclusion on a consideration of the evidence that there is on the record. This conclusion unquestionably is a conclusion on a question of fact.

The appellants, however, contend that this finding of the learned Judge had been arrived at upon a consideration of a piece of evidence which is not admissible. Their complaint is that the learned Subordinate Judge has referred to and relied upon in his judgment a document (Ex. 12) which was the decision of the Attestation Officer as between the plaintiffs and the defendants in a certain dispute that was filed in connexion with the settlement proceedings. In support of the contention that this decision is not admissible in evidence or that it cannot be relied upon for the purpose of rebutting the entry in the settlement records which is in favour of the defendants, reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Lakhi Nath Bera v. Nabadwip Chandra Nandi (1). The passage in that decision upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants as aforesaid runs in these words:

When the Record-of-Rights has once been finally published, it cannot be attacked on the ground that certain procedure adopted by the revenue authorities in arriving at the final conclusion does not support the entry as finally published. If the party aggrieved by that entry takes objection under the provisions of S. 105 or 106, they might be considered by the Revenue Officer. But when a Record-of-Rights is challenged in a civil Court, the party challenging this record must adduce in evidence, in order to rebut the presumption, matters other than what happened during the proceedings prior to the final publication before the Revenue Officer. It is well known that the settlement authorities may come to certain conclusions at one time of the proceeding which they may modify during the course of the preparation of the record."

The facts on which these observations were made are not very clear from the report of the case as it appears in Lakhi Nath Bera v. Nabadwip Chandra Nandi (1). From the reference that is made in those observations to the procedure which was adopted by the Revenue authorities, it seems probable that what was contended before the learned Judges was that the entry in the Record-of-Rights was not to be given its due effect under S. 103-B, Ben. Ten. Act, because the revenue authorities had not adopted the proper procedure or because there was some defect in the procedure that was adopted by them. In my opinion, whatever may be said as regards the correctness of the aforesaid dictum of the learned Judges as applicable to the facts of the case before them, the proposition cannot be taken as one of universal application. In the case before the learned Judges in which these observations were made, it appears that the Court had not taken into account the presumption which arose upon the entry in the Record-of-

Rights, but, on the other hand, held that no presumption attached to the said entry by reason of what was found to be wrong in connexion with the procedure that had been adopted by the revenue authorities. It further appears that in that case the decision of the Revenue Officer was the only material by which the presumption as to the correctness of the Record-of-Rights was sought to be rebutted. On the other hand, there are decisions of this Court amongst which reference may be made to the cases of Bagha Mowar v. Ram Lakhan (2) and Rama Nath Smt v. Official Trustee of Bengal (3), in which it has been clearly laid down that the presumption under S. 103-B Ben. Ten. Act, may be rebutted either by adducing evidence external to the settlement proceedings or evidence of matters apparent on the face of those proceedings. Upon these authorities, it is clear that it is quite open to a party who seeks to rebut a presumption arising out of an entry in the settlement records to show by a reference to the proceedings that had been taken by the revenue authorities that the entry itself is wrong or is one which should not be taken at its face value. On principle, it is difficult to find how it can be said that the materials upon which the entry has been made cannot be looked into for the purpose of determining whether the entry itself is correct or not. The question of sufficiency or insufficiency of those materials is, of course, different. For these reasons, I am of opinion that this contention that has been urged on behalf of the appellants must fail.

I may mention here that, in the case before us the learned Judge has merely referred to the judgment Ex. 12 to which exception has been taken but his findings are really based upon other materials which he has fully and properly discussed in his judgment, and it is upon a consideration of those materials that he has come to the conclusion that the presumption in question has been rebutted and that the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing their case.

In my opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This rule was obtained on the ground that a certain statement made by the prosecution to the Sub-Inspector of Police at the Park Street Police Station was not allowed to be proved by the defence. It appears that the girl was found in the house of the accused at Utterpara and brought down to the Calcutta Police Station at Park Street where she made a statement to Mrs. Mac Gilchrist who had brought the girl up from her childhood and after having a talk with her made a statement to the Police Sub-Inspector. Thereafter the accused was charged under S. 376, with rape on the girl and under S. 354 for outraging her modesty. The trial Court in its judgment says that the statement was not proved because it was entered in a confidential diary of the Police Sub-Inspector. The Crown has not appeared in this case and I have, therefore, to decide the question raised on the law and facts placed before me by the learned counsel for the accused. He has referred to S. 78-A, Calcutta Police Act (4 of 1866) under which the police Sub-Inspector investigating a cognizable offence may examine orally any person attending at the investigation and may reduce it in writing and such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to the case put to him. That is the only section which deals with the power of the Sub-Inspector to record the statement of a person in connexion with a criminal charge. In the Police Act there is no section corresponding to S. 162, or

S. 172, Criminal P. C., which do not apply to the Calcutta Police. In the Act itself I do not find mention of any confidential diary which is privileged and cannot be reached by any party in a criminal case. This rule was issued on the ground that the trial Court was wrong in not having the diary in which the statement of the girl was entered before it and to have it used in evidence. The learned Sessions Judge on this point only remarked that the complaint of the girl was entered in a confidential diary and since it was not produced it was not necessary to notice it further. If the book was not privileged and there was no justification for holding it back, the defence had legitimate grievance in not being able to get hold of it and use it for its own purpose. That statement was very important as it was the first statement made to a responsible police officer. It has been pointed out to me that the girl was in charge of the Bengal Police for about a day but she made no statement there. The statement which she first made relative to this matter accordingly assumes great importance. If the record of the statement was not privileged, it was the duty of the prosecution to place all the evidence it had in its possession before Court. The withholding of this document naturally suggests that it is not favourable to the prosecution. It is not a private prosecution and I cannot too strongly protest against Crown prosecutions degenerating into private cases. This rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued.

The only question that now remains is whether the matter should be sent back to the trial Court for a retrial of the case after admitting the statement made by the girl to the police. The case has been hanging on for about two years. The accused was originally charged with committing rape upon the girl. According to the girl's story the rape must have continued for a considerable time. During the course of the trial the trying Magistrate before charge was framed held that no case of rape could be made out and discharged the accused under that charge. The girl was examined medically and the result of the examination does not prove that there was any actual rape. All that the medical evi-

vate parts are fairly developed but there was no indication of complete coition. This disproves the charge of rape and the accused was accordingly discharged of that charge. He has now been convicted under S. 354, I. P. C., for outraging the modesty of the girl. In a case where the accused is charged with rape it is possible to convict him only under S. 354, I. P. C., if the charge of rape or attempt at rape fails. But in this particular case the accused was said not to have committed rape on any particular occasion or only once but of having lived with the girl for sometime and ravished her on more than one occasion. According to the girl's story the accused had committed rape upon her. But according to the medical evidence it must be held that so far as the charge of rape is concerned the story was false. I do not say that the evidence on the record directly relating to the charge under S. 354, I. P. C., is not sufficient for a conviction. But I am only considering the desirability of sending the case back to the trial Court to reopen the prosecution from the beginning and to have another protracted trial in this case when the accused has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 only. Considering the nature of the case and that the prosecution has lasted for such a length of time and that the accused is a man of social position and that he has been sufficiently punished, if he has committed any offence, by the ignominy, agony and suspense which must have been caused to him, I think it will not be in the interest of justice to order that the accused should be retried.

I accordingly make the rule absolute and acquit the accused. The fine if paid will be refunded.

Appeal No. 2141 of 1926, Decided on 7th December 1928, against the appellate decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, 24 Perganas, D/- 9th July 1926.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 12—Transferee.

There is nothing in law to make it obligatory upon the landlord to treat as tenant any person of whose interest he may have had notice but who is not a transferee under S. 12. [P 259, C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 12—Release if amounts to transfer.

It is doubtful if a release is a transfer of a permanent tenure by sale, gift or mortgage within the meaning of S. 12 which the landlord would have been bound to recognize: 33 Cal. 967 and 43 Cal. 790, Ref. [P 260, C 1]

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 12—Transferee.

It cannot be laid down as a universal proposition of law that whenever the landlord gets notice of interest of any other than the transferee, even if it is admitted by the transferee, he is bound to recognise such person as his tenant. [P 260, C 1]

(d) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 12—Landlord knowing of other person's interest in tenure but suing transferee for rent—Suit is a rent suit.

Suit for rent brought against the person who is a transferee and of whose purchase the landlord has received notice under S. 12 is a suit for rent properly framed and is binding on the tenure though the landlord may have, subsequently to the transfer, known of the interest of other persons therein. Suhrawardy, J.—The facts of this case are that one Adarmani held the tenure in suit under the landlord defendant 1. The plaintiffs' case that the heirs of Adarmani sold the tenure to the plaintiffs and defendant 2, the conveyance being obtained in the name of defendant 2 alone. Thereafter the landlord obtained a decree for rent against Adarmani's heirs and defendant 2 and in execution of the decree purchased the tenure himself. The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present suit for a declaration of their two-thirds right in the tenure. Defendant 1 contended that the disputed land was purchased by defendant 2 alone and not by the plaintiffs and defendant 2 as alleged in the plaint. Both the Courts below have passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The decision of the lower appellate Court is based on the finding that after the purchase of the tenure the plaintiffs and defendant 2 went to defendant 1 to have themselves recorded as tenants, but he did not acknowledge any one as tenant but granted a rent receipt describing defendant 2 as marfatdar of the original tenant. The learned Judge seems to have been further impressed by the fact that the suit was not brought against defendant 2 alone but also against the heirs of the original tenant showing that the landlord had not fully recognized the transferee as tenant. It has been found that the tenure as a matter of fact was purchased by the three brothers. The question, therefore, that arises for decision is whether the decree obtained by defendant 1 was a rent decree or whether it was a money decree which affected the right, title and interest of defendant 2 only. It is argued on behalf of the appellant defendant 1 that though he had the knowledge of the claim of the plaintiffs to a share in the tenure he was not bound to look for his rent beyond the transferee of the tenure. On the other hand, it has been argued on behalf of the respondents that the landlord having come to know of the interest of the plaintiffs in the tenure and it having been found that the tenure was purchased by all the three brothers he was bound to bring a suit for rent against all the three brothers and that the decree obtained against one of them is a money decree.

It is conceded that there is no legislative enactment compelling the landlord to recognize the interest of any person appearing before him and claiming an interest in the tenure. The question of recorded or non-recorded tenant is not material in the case of transfer of a tenure, unless it arises in connexion with the question of representation. Before the enactment of Ss. 12, 13 and 15, Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord had the option of demanding exorbitant fees to recognize transfers or succession. In order to give relief to a tenure-holder and his successors it was enacted that the transfer of a permanent tenure must be by a registered instrument and that the notice of the transfer should be given to the landlord by the Collector with a fee due to the landlord. Under the law as it stands the landlord has no option left in the matter and from the moment he receives notice under S. 12 the liability of the former tenant to rent ceases to exit. Surapati Roy v. Ram Narayan Mukerji (1). Similarly liability of the transferee arises whether the landlord recognized him as his tenant or not.

Now the question is if the landlord is informed of the interest of any one other than the transferee in whose name the deed of transfer stands is he bound to treat such person as tenant and is he bound in law to bring a suit for rent against the tenure by making such person a defendant? As I have stated there is nothing in law to make it obligatory upon the landlord to treat as tenant any person of whose interest he may have had notice but who is not a transferee under S. 12. To hold that the landlord should or is, in such circumstances bound to treat a person other than a transferee as his tenant would make his position extremely unenviable. A tenure for example is sold to A, subsequently A and B may both go to the landlord and say that B is the real owner of the tenure and A is merely a benamdar. Suppose the landlord brings a suit against B alone and obtains a decree in execution of which the tenure is sold. A may thereafter turn round and say that he was the real owner and that he was induced by fraud or by some other means to acknowledge the title of B. The landlord may in such a case find himself in great difficulty to realize rent from the tenure.

Take another common example. If a person comes to the landlord and tells him that he has some interest in the tenure which stands in the name of another person as transferee, can it be said that the landlord in such a case is bound to treat such a person as tenant? The fact that the person in whose name the property stands admits the interest of another person will not make the matter very clear for the landlord and will not make him immune from future disputes if the transferee chooses to disown the right of another person in the tenure. Besides, the landlord will find himself at the mercy of unscrupulous persons able to command perjured evidence. After a tenure is sold in execution of a decree against the ostensible transferee the latter may defeat the purchaser by colluding with the landlord or by proving that the landlord had notice of other persons' interest in it.

In this connexion one must not forget the well-known doctrine that a release is not a transfer: Jadunath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (2), Mathura Mohan

(1) A. I. R. 1923 P. O. 83 = 50 Cal. 68 = 50 I. A. 155 (P. O.).

(2) [1906] 33 Cal. 967 = 4 O. L. J. 22 = 10 O. W. N. 650.

Saha v. Ram Kumar Saha (3). If in the present case defendant 2 had executed a document (much less by word of mouth) releasing two-thirds of the property in favour of the plaintiffs I doubt very much that it would amount to a transfer of a permanent tenure by sale, gift or mortgage within the meaning of S. 12, Bengal Tenancy Act, which the landlord would have been bound to recognize.

Under the law it seems to me that as soon as a tenure is transferred under S. 12 the outgoing tenant ceases to have any liability for rent and the incoming tenant is the person whom the landlord must look to for realization of rent. If rent is actually due from a tenure and the person in whose name the transfer is made is one who represents the tenure any other person having any title in the tenure cannot compel the landlord to treat him as tenant along with the person who is the ostensible transferee. If this were not so, the landlord may be deprived of his fee in cases of successive oral transfers. The transferee may come to the landlord after selling a portion of his tenure privately and say that another person has also got an interest in the property. In this way he may go on selling parcels of the tenure to others without paying the landlord's fee and getting such persons recognized by the landlord as his tenants. Taking the common sense view of the matter as well as considering the object of Ss. 12 and 13, I do not think that it can be laid down as a universal proposition of law that whenever the landlord gets notice of interest of any other than the transferee, even if it is admitted by the transferee, he is bound to recognize such person as his tenant.

Assuming the plaintiffs' case to be true, they had allowed defendant 2 to represent them in the matter of purchase of the tenure, that they had in fact told the landlord that defendant 2 was the person who would represent the tenure, but they did not pay the landlord's rent and the tenure was put up for sale. They are not in equity or fairness entitled to say that the suit which the landlord has to bring for his rent should also be brought against them.

There is an observation by the trial Court that the plaintiffs paid their share of the rent to defendant 2. But the lower appellate Court has not come to any finding on this point. To my mind even if there were such a finding it would have made no difference in the application of the law for if the plaintiffs were anxious to protect their interest they should have seen that the rent reached the landlord. In my judgment the suit for rent brought against the person who is a transferee and of whose purchase the landlord has received notice under S. 12, Bengal Tenancy Act, is a suit for rent properly framed and is binding on the tenure. In this view of the law this appeal is allowed and the decrees of the Courts below are set aside with costs in all Courts.

Appeal No. 1027 of 1926, Decided on 17th July 1928, from appellate decree of the Dist. Judge, Chittagong, D/- 21st December 1925.

(a) Bill-of-lading — Shipper accepting without protest bill-of-lading different from prior agreement — He is ordinarily bound by such bill-of-lading—Mere production of forwarding note will not suffice to prove that contract made was different from that in bill-of-lading.

Whatever the prior express bargain has been, a shipper is free to accept any bill-of-lading he chooses. If, therefore, he has chosen to receive without protest a bill-of-lading in a certain form he should ordinarily be bound by it: Armour & Co. v. Leopold Walford (London) (1921) 3 K. B. 473, Foll. The mere production of the forwarding note will not help the shipper to prove that the contract actually made was something different from that contained in the bill-of-lading. Judgment.—The plaintiff is the owner of a business in miscellaneous stores in Akyab. In August 1921 he sent a wire to Messrs. Lipton Limited in Calcutta for despatching to his Akyab firm 25 cases of Lipton's white label tea. Messrs. Lipton Limited received the order on 23rd and on the next day i. e., the 24th, they booked at the office of the Rivers Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. at Jagannathghat a consignment of 25 cases, each case containing 64 one pound tins, of tea. The total weight of the consignment as entered in the forwarding note was 34 mds. 31½ seers, and the value was declared to be Rs. 1,850 and it was entered therein that the consignment was to be carried to Akyab via Chittagong. The cases were carried on a ship belonging to the Rivers Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. up to Chittagong, where they were transhipped to a ship belonging to the British India Navigation Co. Ltd. which carried them to Akyab on 14th September 1921. The plaintiff's agent at Akyab was informed by the coolies who carried the goods from the ship to the wharf that the weights of the cases were remarkably low. On that the agent demanded an open delivery which, however, was refused. The agent then approached the Collector of Customs and the Wharf Superintendent, and ultimately the cases were opened and an inspection of the goods held and it was found that of the 25 cases, 6 cases were entirely empty of tea, but filled with various sorts of rubbish, six cases were quite in tact as regards their contents, while the contents of the remaining 13 cases had been partly abstracted. The plaintiff instituted this suit for a breach of the contract of carriage and prayed for recovery of Rs. 931-15-0 being the value of the quantity of tea abstracted and Rs. 207-8-0 being the damages caused by non delivery. The suit was laid against the British India Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. as defendant 1 and the River Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. as defendant 2.

It has been found as a fact by both the Courts below that the goods were lost in transit between Chittagong and Akyab. The trial Court absolved defendant 2 and passed a decree for Rs. 936-4-0 with costs against defendant 1. The latter preferred an appeal with the result that the District Judge who heard the appeal allowed it and dismissed the suit but made no order for costs.

The District Judge, while finding all the facts in plaintiff's favour held that the consignment was covered by a bill-of-lading issued by the British India Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. which contained amongst others the clause:

"The company shall not be liable for loss, damage or delay directly or indirectly resulting from any of the following causes or perils howsoever, occasioned; viz., act of God, King's enemies, piracy, robbery, theft or pilferage with or without violence on board or elsewhere, and whether by persons in the service of the company or not, &c. &c."

The plaintiff has then preferred the present appeal. His contention is that defendants are bound by the conditions that are mentioned on the back of the forwarding note, and it is those conditions and not the conditions in the bill-of-lading that represent the contract of carriage, and that the risks in respect of which the bill-of-lading absolved the companies being different from and somewhat inconsistent with those mentioned on the back of the forwarding note were not those that had been bargained for when the goods were consigned, the bill-of-lading having in fact been delivered to the consignor several days after the goods were consigned. It is also contended that when the goods were consigned a cutcha receipt called the Mate's receipt was given to the consignor which was subsequently taken back in exchange for the bill-of-lading, and as the same was not produced by the defendants, an inference should be drawn against the defendants and it should be held that the goods were consigned on a different contract. Lastly, it is argued that defendant 2 is, in any case liable as the bill-of-lading was issued by defendant 1 only and the forwarding note was the only document that passed between the plaintiff and defendant 2.

The two defendant companies have appeared separately in the appeal and have replied to these arguments.

Now, the goods were consigned on 24th August 1921 and the forwarding note contained the following clause which was signed by Messrs. Lipton, Limited:

"I hereby certify that I have satisfied myself that the description, marks, weight and quantity and class of goods consigned by me and all entries have been correctly entered in the forwarding note and the goods have been marked by the Company's staff on my identification and also that no undeclared jewellery and/ or excepted articles as notified in the Schedule to the Common Carriers Act are contained in these goods and/ or luggage and I agree to abide by the conditions endorsed hereon."

The forwarding note remained with defendant 2 and what was given to the consignor was a Mate's receipt. This Mate's receipt was within two or three days as the evidence shows, returned by the consignor in exchange for the bill-of-lading that he obtained, the bill-of-lading which bore date 24th August 1921 and purported to cover the entire journey from Calcutta to Akyab via Barisal and Chittagong and referred to Invoice No. 78 of 24th August 1921. The bill-of-lading was issued by defendant 1 and expressly stated that the goods were to be carried and delivered "subject to the terms and conditions of this bill-of-lading." It may be said here that the bill-of-lading enlarges upon the forwarding note as regards the risks that are to be excepted.

The first question that arises upon the aforesaid facts is what was the contract between the parties. The abstract question whether the bill-of-lading is a conclusive statement of the contract between the shipper and the shipowner, or is only one piece of evidence, helping with others to show what that contract is—a question which is dealt with in Carver's Carriage by Sea, 7th Edition, S. 56, and is a matter upon which there is some conflict of authority—does not call for an answer in the present case. If it concludes the parties, defendant 1 is at once absolved covering as it does the entire journey. If other or extraneous evidence is admissible to prove the agreement between the parties the mere production of the forwarding note will not help the plaintiff, but some evidence will necessarily have to be given to show that the consignor did not expect the terms and conditions of the bill-of-lading to be incorporated into the contract or that the terms and conditions are out of the ordinary or that the circumstances are such as would indicate that the consignor did not bind himself to abide by all or any of those terms and conditions. It may also be, as has been said in the passage referred to above, that as the bill-of-lading is not usually signed until after the goods have been shipped, it may contain terms not agreed upon at the time of shipping, or that it varies or omits some of the terms as then understood. Of all these, however, there is not a particle of evidence on the record. On the other hand, the consignors being exporters on a large scale must be presumed to have been aware of the terms and conditions, which are nothing but quite ordinary in a bill-of-lading of sea-going vessel. Moreover as observed by McCardie, J. in Armour & Co. v. Leopold Walford (London) (1) at p. 477:

"Whatever the prior express bargain has been, a shipper is free to accept any bill-of-lading he chooses; if therefore he has chosen to receive without protest a bill-of-lading in a certain form he should ordinarily be bound by it."

Further than that, the plaintiff suffers from a further infirmity. Far from repudiating the contract as contained in or at least evidenced by the bill-of-lading, he, as endorsee of the bill-of-lading, produced it as entitling him to the goods and took delivery of the goods on the strength of it. In para 2 of the plaint he set out this through bill-of-lading from Calcutta to Akyab via Barisal and Chittagong and as referring to Invoice No. 78 dated 24th August 1921. Indeed it is on the basis of this of this bill-of-lading that he has instituted this suit, and he cannot be heard to say that he is not bound by its terms. In Glyn v. East and West India Dock Co. (2) at p. 596 Lord Selborne said:

"Every one claiming as assignee under a bill-of-lading must be bound by its terms, and by the contract between the shipper of the goods and the shipowner therein expressed. The primary office and purpose of a bill-of-lading, although by mercantile law and usage it is a symbol of the right to property in the goods, is to express the terms between the shipper and the shipowner."

In the above view of the matter no other contention of the appellant need be considered. The appeal, in our opinion, cannot succeed and must be dismissed, but we do not propose to make any order for costs.

An agreement, creating mutual rights of pre-emption between the contracting parties and their heirs and representatives-in-interest being obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, is one that the law considers to be unlawful and therefore is not capable of being enforced even as between the contracting parties. (Case law discussed). [P 269 C 1]Gunada Charan Sen, Rajendra Chandra Guha and Charu Ch. Chowdhury—

Judgment.—These appeals have arisen out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff to enforce a right of pre-emption. The plaintiff and defendant 2 were cosharers in respect of a homestead, the plaintiff having a 12 annas share and defendant 2 the remaining 4 annas share. Then there was an agreement between the parties, the relevant terms whereof are set out below, and the substance thereof was that neither party would be competent to sell his share in the homestead but to the other. Thereafter defendant 2 mortgaged his 4 annas share in the homestead to the plaintiff and afterwards sold it to defendant 1. The plaintiff then instituted this suit for a declaration that the sale held as aforesaid in contravention of the agreement was ineffectual as against him, and for a sale-deed being executed in his favour on receipt of the value of the share minus the money due on the mortgage, and for other reliefs. The main defence of the defendants was that the agreement was void as being due to undue influence, and misrepresentation and that defendant 1 was a bona fide purchaser for value. The Courts below have decreed the suit in a modified form. The defendants as well as the plaintiff have then appealed to this Court, the appeal of the defendants being S. A. No. 556 of 1926 and that of the plaintiff, S. A. No. 624 of 1926. It will be convenient to deal with the appeals separately.

Appeal No. 556 of 1926 was preferred by both the defendants; but defendant 1 died and his heirs have not come forward to be substituted in his place. The position therefore is that the part of the decree of the Court below which declared that the sale by defendant 2 to defendant 1 was invalid and inoperative as against the plaintiff stands unchallenged. The appeal in so far as it is at the instance of defendant 2 is directed against, and its scope is limited to, the part of the decree which runs in these words:

"Defendant 2 is further directed to execute a deed of sale to the plaintiff in respect of his 4 anna share in the homestead in suit within a month of the deposit into Court by the plaintiff of Rs. 600 as the price of the sale to the credit of defendant 2. One month's time is allowed to the plaintiff for the deposit. On failure to make the deposit, so much of the decree as directs the sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff will be treated as cancelled."

The principal ground on which the decree is challenged on behalf of the appellant, namely, defendant 2, is:

"that the agreement is void as it offends against the rule against perpetuity and is bad on the ground of remoteness."

The plaintiff respondent contends that this contention of the appellant as also his other contentions to which reference will be made hereafter, should not be entertained as his only defence in the trial Court was that the agreement was void as vitiated by undue influence and misrepresentation; but we think we must overrule this objection as, in our opinion defendant 1 being dead, defendant 2 is competent to rely on all such grounds upon which defendant 1 could have resisted and did resist the plaintiff's claim.

To deal with the aforesaid contention of the appellant it is necessary in the first instance to set out the relevant portion of the agreement. It runs thus:

"This agreement shall be binding against us, our heirs and our representatives-in-interest. Any act done contrary to this agreement will be considered ineffectual and will not be acceptable to a Court of Justice . . . . We settle the price of the entire property given in the schedule below to be Rs. 2,400. Any of our cosharers or any cosharers of our heirs willing to sell his or any portion of his share shall be bound to sell it, for a price proportionate to the price fixed above to the other cosharers and the other cosharer shall be bound to purchase the same. The intending seller shall on no account be competent to sell his share to a third party except as provided below. Any sale contrary to this proviso will be invalid and the other cosharer will be competent to nullify the same by suing for a kabala within three years of the sale on depositing in Court the price with interest at 4 per cent per annum."

There were provisions made as to the circumstances under which a sale could be effected in favour of a third party, but they need not be set out here as admittedly those conditions have not been complied with.

Now, it appears that prior to the Transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882) the Indian Legislature recognized that a contract for the sale of immovable property created an equitable interest in the property and made the purchaser the owner of it in equity: See illustration (g) to S. 3, illustration (a) to S. 13, and S. 27, Cl. (b), Specific Relief Act I of 1877; S. 17 Cl. (2), Registration Act 20 of 1866; and S. 17 Cl. (b), Registration Act 3 of 1877; and the judgment of Kanga, J. in Dinakarrao Ganpatrao v. Narayan Vishwanath (1) (at pp. 213 to 215 of 47 Bom). In the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand Choudhury (2), in which case the facts were that the proprietor of a hill had in 1872 agreed with a Society of Jains, that if the society would require a site thereon for the erection of a temple, he and his heirs would grant a site free of cost, and had thereafter alienated the hill in favour of a third party, and the society then sued the alienees for possession alleging that they had given notice to the proprietor requiring the site and further alleging that they had taken possession but had been dispossessed, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows:

"For the appellants (the Society) to succeed it is essential to show that this agreement created in them some present estate or interest which would prevent the Raja from having made the grant. That could only be effected by reading the compromise as creating in the Jains Society a grant in perpetuity of the Parasnath Hill. This cannot, however, be supported, because subject to the provisions of the agreement, the Raja is left in control of the hill, and the Raja has power from time to time to dispose of such portions as he thinks fit, and it would be impossible to challenge the right of any person who took under him unless it could be shown that the covenant upon which the appellants rely was a covenant which was in the circumstances enforceable, not merely against the Raja but against his assignees. Such a covenant as this does not, and cannot run with the land, and could not be so enforced. Further, if the case be regarded in another light namely an agreement to grant in future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple as the only interest created would be one to take effect by entry at a later date, and as this date is uncertain the provision is obviously bad as offending the rule against perpetuities, for the interest would not then vest in presenti, but would vest at the expiration of an indefinite time which might extend beyond the expiration of the proper period."

This pronouncement is sufficient authority for the proposition that a covenant for pre-emption prior to the Transfer of Property Act, at any rate, was within the mischief of the rule against perpetuities. It was said by Bhasyam Ayyangar, J., in the case of Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (3), though the question did not directly arise or at any rate was not argued in that case, that though under S. 54, T. P. Act, a contract for the sale of immovable property does not of itself create any interest or charge on such property, and in S. 17 Cl. (b), Registration Act, the same view is adopted and S. 14, T. P. Act formulating the English doctrine of perpetuities with some modifications is not applicable to a covenant for pre-emption, yet Cl. (d), S. 2, T. P. Act, expressly provides that nothing in Ch. 2 of the Act, in which S. 14 occurs, shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu law. The learned Judge pointed out that in the matter of making a gift inter vivos or by will, the power of a Hindu is, under the Hindu law, more restricted than under the English doctrine of perpetuities and the corresponding provision enacted in S. 14, T. P. Act. He pointed out that in the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Chundi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (4) the doctrine that no Hindu can either by act inter vivos or by will make a gift in favour of a person not in existence at the time when the gift is made or at the death of the testator as the case may be. Jotindra Mohun Tagore v. Ganendro Mohun Tagore (5) was held applicable to transferees for consideration. He was doubtful whether the English doctrine of perpetuities and S. 14, T. P. Act, which applied only to transfer of interest in land would apply to contracts for sale of land in India and ultimately observed:

"But it must be admitted that there is really no substantial difference between English and Indian law in respect of contract of sale of immovable property and it does seem reasonable and in accordance with the principles of general jurisprudence that there should be some limit of time beyond which the performance of contracts for the transfer of property by way of sale, pre-emption or otherwise must not be allowed to be held in suspense or postponed. Although S. 14 deals only with transfers, the provisions of that section could in some cases be practically defeated if covenants are not held to be void for remoteness on the ground that by themselves they create no interest in property. But the result of extending the rule against perpetuities to covenants may possibly be that, in the case of Hindu, a covenant which would not necessarily vest the future interest, contemplated to result from the covenant, in a person who is in existence at the time of the covenant, would be void. I am glad to be able to refrain from expressing any opinion on this difficult and important question of the application and the limits of the application of the doctrine of perpetuities to covenants, as it has not been really argued in the case and as in fact it is unnecessary to consider and decide it in this case."

In India, on the one hand the substantive law of property namely the Transfer of Property Act 4 of 1882 does not recognize equitable interest in land, and the rule of English law that a contract for sale of real property makes the purchaser the owner in equity of the estate has no application to those parts of India where the Transfer of Property Act is in force: see Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (6) while on the other hand S. 27 (b), Specific Relief Act, recognizes that contracts with regard to land can be specifically enforced against third parties in certain cases, and S. 91, Trust Act, also lays down that a transferee taking with notice of a prior contract in favour of another must hold the right obtained under the transfer as a trustee for the previous promisee. The result is that one who has obtained a promise for the conveyance of land as a substantial interest in it, and contracts of this description stand in a class by themselves. A series of judicial decisions have now settled the view that contracts of this description, if they purport to do indirectly what the law forbids to be done directly, are void, and the principles applicable to them are the same in India as in England.

In England what may now be considered to be the leading case on the point is that of L. & S. W. Ry. v. Gomm (7). In that case the facts were these: The plaintiff company in 1865 conveyed a land to Powell in fee, and Powell covenanted with the company that he, his heirs and assignees, would at any time on receipt of £ 100 reconvey the land to the company. In 1879 Gomm purchased the land from Powell with notice of the covenant; in 1880 the company demanded a conveyance and, upon Gomm's refusal, sued for specific performance. Kay, J., took the view that the rule against perpetuities was a branch not of the law of contract but of property and held that and as the contract in that case did not run with the land at law and a purchaser without notice would not be bound by it, he held that it was not within the rule against perpetuities at all and made a decree for specific performance. Gomm thereupon appealed. The Court of appeal (Sir George Jessel, M. R. and Sir James Hannen and Sir Nathaniel Lindley, L. JJ., all of them dealing with the point) reversed the decree holding that the option to purchase gave an equitable interest which was within the rule against perpetuities. The authority of this decision is supreme at the present moment and it is unnecessary to deal with the subsequent decisions which have explained or followed this principle. Of these may be mentioned, Trevelyan v. Trevelyan (8), Woodall v. Clifton (9), Worthington Corporation v. Heather (10), Edwards v.

Edwards (11). Another principle that should be borne in mind is that in construing a covenant from the point of view of the doctrine of perpetuities or to test it on the ground of remoteness it is the invariable practice of the English Courts to pay regard to all possible contingencies and not to actual events only: Gunganon v. Smith (12) and Jee v. Audley (13) and this practice has been followed in Indian Courts, e.g., Srimati Bramamayi Dasi v. Jages Chandra Dutt (14) at 407; Soudaminy v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (15) at p. 268 and Nabin Chandra v. Rajani Chandra (16). As Bacon, V. C., put it in the case of Trevelyan v. Trevelyan (8), in respect of a covenant which provided that certain land should be restored on terms mentioned, at any time during the continuance of the settlement:

"Why is not the settlement to continue? Who can prescribe for me, or help me to guess the time at which the settlement will come to an end? It is said that if there were a tenant in tail he might have barred the continuance of the settlement. No such thing could happen. It was not necessary that it should happen. . . . This is not a lawful covenant: It is a covenant tending to a perpetuity which the law does not allow, and, which, therefore, cannot be enforced."

Indeed in the case of reciprocal promises one forming the consideration for the other, it is impossible to separate the different parts of a promise and treat one part of a promise on the one hand as forming the consideration for the whole or a part of the promise on the other.

Now, contracts of the present nature may be of various kinds according as the promise is made by one person in favour of another, or by one person for himself and his heirs etc., in favour of another or in favour of another and his heirs, etc., and there may be also further varieties caused by the promise on the side being made by one person or by one person for himself and his heirs, and so on. There is nothing inherently wrong or objectionable in a contract between persons tying up property for a limited time for a definite purpose or for the sake of mutual convenience. Phear, J., observed in the case of Radhanath v. Tarruck Nath (17):

"I need hardly say, however, that it is not competent for the owners of property in this country by any arrangement made in their own discretion to alter the ordinary incidents of the property which they possess, for instance in this particular case, to say that the joint property shall remain the joint property of the joint family in perpetuity, but shall not possess the incident which the law of the country attaches to property in such condition, namely, that every independent parcener is entitled at any time to have his share divided off from the rest. No doubt any one member of the family, and therefore all might for sufficient consideration, bind themselves to forego their rights for a specified time and definite purpose by a contract which could be enforced against them personally."

A plain and simple case in which A and B agree between themselves that if either of them is desirous of selling and the other is willing to buy at a proper price or fixed price, sale to a third party shall be invalid, hardly presents any difficulty. To a personal covenant of this nature, the doctrine of perpetuities or of remoteness has no application. Such was the case of Kalimuddin Bhuya v. Reazuddin Ahmed (18). The agreement there was in these terms:

"Any of the parties desirous of selling the lands allotted to his share shall sell the same to the other party willing to buy the same at the proper sale price. Sale to any body else shall be invalid. But if the parties do not purchase at the proper sale price, the other party shall be entitled to sell to others. Let it be known that the value of the property is or will be Rs. 600."

In breach of this covenant one of the parties had sold to a third party and the other party then sued to enforce his right of pre-emption. It was held that it could not be argued that the covenant was invalid against the covenantor himself. So also an agreement by a mortgagor to give the mortgagee a preference of pre-emption in case of sale was upheld and given effect to against the covenantor, it being held, there was nothing in the covenant which was contrary to public policy and the argument that the covenant offended against the rule against perpetuities was ignored: Haris Paik v. Jahruddi Gazi (19). The same view was taken of a covenant giving a mortgagee right of pre-emption in the case of Bimal Jati v. Biranja Kuar (20), it being held on authority of Biggs v. Hoddinot (21),

Santley v. Wilde (22) and Orby v. Trigg (23) that it is prima facie a good covenant and enforceable by the mortgagee, there being nothing in the nature of vagueness, uncertainty or unreasonableness attaching to it.

On the other hand, a covenant binding one party and his successor to sell to another and his successors is a covenant for pre-emption unlimited in point of time and has been held not to be enforceable, in numerous cases in the different Courts in this country. One of the earliest cases was that of Sreemati Tripoora Soonduree v. Juggernath Dutt (24). In that case four brothers on making a partition of their joint property, covenanted with each other that if any one of them, or their heirs, had to sell his share, he should offer to sell the same to one of the co-sharers. One of the brothers having died, his widow sold the share which she had inherited without such an offer to the surviving brothers who thereupon sued her and the vendee upon payment of what they alleged to be the value of the property. Markby, J., (Morris, J., concurring) said :

"We are also desirous not to be understood as in any way assenting to the proposition that this covenant was binding upon the widow to whom a share in the property had descended from the original covenantor. She was not a party to the covenant, and if we hold that she was bound by it, we must then hold that every person to whom this land may pass by inheritance will also be bound by it. But this would be to create a perpetual covenant as to the disposition of land for which we have not been shown any precedent. A similar covenant was before the Master of the Rolls in Stocker v. Dean (25) and he doubted whether it could be enforced after the death of the owner who entered into it. We also consider it extremely doubtful how far such a covenant can be enforced."

It will be observed that the passage aforesaid is no authority on the question whether as between the original covenantors the agreement would be enforceable. In Stocker v. Dean (25) the facts were as follows : Deborah Setchfield was the owner of a shop and premises and of an adjoining cottage and premises called the Globe, both of which were vested in Fisher as trustee for her. By one agreement Fisher with the consent of Deborah Setchfield agreed to sell the shop and premises to plaintiff Stocker for £1,000 and it was further agreed that in case Deborah Setchfield should wish to sell the adjoining messuage (the Globe) she would request Fisher (who thereby promised to accede to such request) to surrender or convey the adjoining messuage (the Globe) to the plaintiff Stocker and his heirs or appointees for £200. By a contemporaneous agreement of the same date and made between Fisher and Deborah Setchfield on the one part and the plaintiff on the other part it was agreed that if the Globe be not surrendered to the plaintiff before a certain date, the same should be surrendered and conveyed to Deborah Setchfield and that she should enter into a covenant, at the expense of the plaintiff and Deborah Setchfield for herself, her heirs and assigns at all times thereafter to give to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, the right of pre-emption of the Globe with the appurtenances, at the price of £200. The purchase of the shop, etc., was completed, and thereafter the Globe was conveyed to Deborah Setchfield. She died leaving her trustee to sell the Globe. The Globe was put up to auction and the plaintiff in ignorance of his rights bid for the property up to £360, but it was ultimately bought in for £450. The plaintiff then sued for specific performance insisting that as at the time of her death Deborah Setchfield was desirous of selling the Globe his right of pre-emption had arisen. The Master of the Rolls construed the first agreement as meaning that it was a right of pre-emption to be exercised during the life of Deborah Setchfield only, because it was manifest that the parties anticipated that something was to be done by Deborah Setchfield personally when the contract was to be carried into effect, and this limited the right to the case of her wishing to sell in her lifetime. Referring to the second agreement he said :

"The other agreement is this. It is at all time thereafter to give the plaintiff, his trustees and assigns the right of pre-emption. It has I think been properly argued, that this is in addition to the first contract or a distinct agreement independent of and superseding it. I think I cannot treat it as superseding the former contract. If I could treat it as a distinct and separate contract, I should require much more argument to convince me that a contract which gives a right of pre-emption "at all times" hereafter is one which could be enforced after the death of the owner of the property . . . . . On the whole I am of opinion that the contract was to be enforced in the life of Deborah Setchfield, in case she should, during that period, wish to sell the property."

Referring to this case Sundara Ayyar, J., said with great nicety in the case of Kolathu Ayyar v. Ranga Vadhyar (26):

"An unconditional contract to sell would no doubt ordinarily be enforceable against the heirs of the covenantor as if he had said: 'I and my heirs shall convey;' but the question is can an agreement in the words, 'I promise to convey to you if I sell the land' be held to bind the heirs as if the promisor said, 'I promise that I or my heirs shall convey to you if I or they sell'? In other words, is an agreement to convey enforceable when the option to sell is exercised by the heirs, when the document says: 'If I sell?' It seems to us that there is much reason in the view that such a contract is not enforceable against the heirs."

Whatever that may be, Stocker v. Dean (25) can hardly be read as an authority for the view that an agreement which as a whole infringes the rule against perpetuities is enforceable as good as against the covenantor himself, and in my opinion there is no justification for regarding it as an authority which may be taken as indirectly supporting such a view.

That a covenant of the description such as we are concerned with in the case before us by which A and B respectively for themselves and their heirs for all times agree to a right of pre-emption for each other and their heirs is bad as offending against the rule against perpetuities and on the ground of remoteness requires no argument. It is a covenant which amounts to an agreement to convey immovable property upon the happening of an event which might occur at a more remote period than the lives in being and eighteen years afterwards.

Instances in which the Courts have refused to enforce such or similar covenants when they were sought to be enforced by or against the successors in interest of the covenantors themselves are common, but those decisions do not really help us in deciding the present case in which the offending covenant is sought to be enforced as between the contracting parties themselves. Amongst such instances may be cited: Nobin Chandra v. Nawab Ali Sarkar (27) in which case in a conveyance executed by the plaintiffs in favour of the defendants' father it was provided that if the latter sold the property subsequently, he would be bound to give preference to the plaintiff and the covenant was sought to be enforced against the defendants who were the sons of one of the contracting parties: Rash Behari Ganguli v. Shatharanjan Samaddar (28) in which the covenant was between the plaintiff and the father of the defendants who were members of a family and it was to the effect that if any member of the family had to sell any portion of the family property, he must offer it for sale in the first instance to the other members of the family and it was stipulated that the agreement would be binding between the parties and their heirs: Nabin Chandra Sarma v. Rajani Chandra Chakravarti (16) in which a Hindu transferred certain immovable property to his son-in-law, reserving a condition that if the transferee or his successor found it necessary to sell the property, he must sell it to the vendor or his nephew or his heirs at a specified price, and the son of the son-in-law having sold the property to strangers, the nephew sued for enforcement of his right of pre-emption; Kolathu Ayyar v. Ranga Vadhyar (26) in which a covenant in respect of a right of pre-emption as between two persons was sought to be enforced against the heirs of one of them; Dinkarrao Ganpatrao v. Narayan Vishwanath (1) in which case the covenant in the sale-deed executed by a vendor was in these words:

"In case you or your heirs have to sell the said plot, the same is to be sold back to me for the above mentioned value. It is not to be sold to any other person. In case you are informed in writing that I or my heirs or vahivatdars or donees from them are not going to purchase it, then only you can sell to any other person if you like. But I do not give right to the purchaser from me. And similarly I do not give this right to purchaser from any of my heirs or vahivatdars or from any donee from them. When you want to sell the building that you are going to build on the same plot, you or your heirs or your vahivatdars are to accept from me or my heirs or vahivatdars or donees the price of that building that may be settled amicably between ourselves or through Panch. The said land is sold to you on the condition that I am to pay as the price of the land only as such amount as is taken from you now. This sale-deed is agreed to by our heirs, representatives, etc."

The suit in this case was between 'the heirs of the vendor and the heirs of the vendee.'

The question with which we are really concerned in the present appeal is whether an agreement of this nature is enforceable as between the contracting parties. Giving the matter all the considerations that I possibly can, I think I must answer the question in the negative, because the covenant itself being obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, it is one that the law considers as unlawful and it is impossible to hold that it is capable of being enforced even as between the contracting parties. As pointed out by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (3):

"the decision in London and South Western Railway Co. v. Gomm. (7) does not proceed on the ground that the covenant cannot be enforced against the legal representative or assignee of the covenantor, but on the ground that it was void for remoteness and, therefore, not binding on the covenantor himself."

South Eastern Railway v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers Ltd. (29) merely decided that if a man promises that he and his heirs will convey, the promise may be enforced against himself, that is to say that the promise may be treated as divisible so as to make it enforceable against the heirs. The case is no authority for the proposition that the rule against perpetuities may be got over by ignoring a part of each of the reciprocal promises and making a new contract for the parties which would not be obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. That a covenant which is affected by the vice of remoteness is void and ineffectual even as between the immediate parties thereto has been held in this Court in 'the case of Anath Nath Meitra v. Keshab Chandra. (30).

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the appellant's main contention must succeed.

In this view it is not necessary to deal in detail with the other arguments that have been advanced on behalf of the appellant which are to the effect first that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree as he did not deposit the price of the property before instituting the suit as she should have done in accordance with the terms of the agreement; 2nd that the sale by defendant 2 in favour of defendant 1 having been found to be collusive should be regarded as no sale at all and so the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree, there having been really no cause of action for his suit: (vide Parsashth Nath Tewari v. Dhanai Ojha (31) and 3rd that the defendant was entitled to the amount of interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on the price between the date of the sale and the institution of the suit. In my opinion there is no substance in the first and second contentions as the omission to make the deposit could not deprive the right which the plaintiff may have under the contract, and the finding as regards collusion does not amount to a finding that the sale was not operative as between the parties. As regards the contention, I am of opinion that it is well founded.

In the view that I have expressed as regards the main contention in the appeal, the appeal succeeds. The result is that the decrees of the Courts below being set aside in so far as they are against defendant 2, the suit as against him is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

S. A. No. 624 of 1926.

In view of the result of the other appeal this appeal which has been preferred by the plaintiff for a decree for recovery of possession must fail. It is accordingly dismissed but without costs.

SUHWARDEY AND JACK, JJ.

Satyabhama De—Appellant.

v.

Jatindra Mohan Deb and others—Respondents.

Appeal No 2676 of 1926, Decided on 6th December 1928, against the appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Dacca, D/- 17th May 1926.

(a) Partition Act (4 of 1893), S. 8—Lower Court allowing sale—Order of appellate Court reversing it is a decree and is appealable.

Where the trial Court allows a sale but the appellate Court refuses to pass an order for sale reversing the trial Court's order the appellate order is a decree and is appealable if the requirements of second appeal under Civil P. C., S. 100 are fulfilled. [P 271 C 1]

(b) Partition Act (4 of 1893), S. 4—Application can be made any time during suit or appeal.

An application under S. 4 can be made at any stage of a suit, even in the appellate Court: 22 C. W. N. 515, Ref. [P 272 C 1]

* (c) Partition Act (4 of 1893), S. 4—Party in partition suit is both plaintiff and defendant—Defendant claiming share may be treated as plaintiff.

A party in a partition suit whether a plaintiff or a defendant is at the same time a plaintiff as well as a defendant. This dual capacity of a party in a partition suit does not preclude even a defendant who claims a share in the dwelling house from being treated as plaintiff for the purposes of S. 4: 12 C. L. J. 525, Ref.; A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 121, Dist. [P 272 C 1]

Prokash Chandra Pakrashi—for Appellant.

Bireswar Bagchi and Jatindra Nath Sen—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is by defendant 9 in a partition suit. The facts are that the plaintiffs brought a suit for partition of a dwelling house and some agricultural lands. In the plaint they prayed that if their share was not allowed in the dwelling house they might be allowed a proportionate parcel of the agricultural lands in lieu of their share. The appellant did not appear at the earlier stages of the suit but her husband defendant 10 appeared and filed a written statement in which he said that the plaintiffs' share in the dwelling house might be valued and defendant 10 be allowed to purchase it, he being a member of an undivided family. In view of the pleadings the preliminary decree, which was passed on 5th December 1921, directed that the plaintiffs could not get any share in the dwelling house but they should get a share in the lands of the value of the share they had purchased in the property. On the same day namely 5th December 1921, defendants 14 to 19, who are respondents in this appeal, filed an application in which they prayed that their possession might be maintained and that they might be given a separate saham including the portion in their possession. These defendants claimed to be in possession of a portion of the dwelling house and asked that that portion might be allotted to them on partition. After the preliminary decree a final decree was also passed in terms thereof. At the instance of defendant 10 the final decree was subsequently set aside. Before another final decree could be passed the appellant appeared in Court on 14th December 1925 and filed an application under S. 4, Partition Act (Act 4 of 1893) praying to be permitted to purchase the shares of the plaintiffs and of defendants 14 to 19 all of them being strangers to the family. The trial Court allowed the application and directed that the appellant should be permitted to purchase the shares of the plaintiffs and of defendants 14 to 19 in the homestead described in Sch. ca of the plaint. Against that order an appeal was taken to the District Judge of Dacca and the Additional District Judge by his judgment dated 17th May 1926 dismissed the appeal so far as it related to the plaintiffs' share but allowed the appeal in respect of the shares of defendants 14 to 19 holding that the lower Court was in error in permitting defendant 9 to purchase the shares of these defendants. From the decree of the District Judge two appeals were preferred to this Court, one by the plaintiffs against the order of sale of their share of the dwelling house and the other the present appeal by defendant 9 against the order dismissing her prayer to purchase the shares of defendants 14 to 19. We have already allowed the plaintiffs' appeal and held that in the circumstances of this case defendant 9 is not entitled to claim relief under S. 4, Partition Act.

Now in this appeal the appellant's contention is that the defendants 14 to 19 are strangers who had purchased shares in the dwelling house from some of the defendants' cosharers and that the appellant should be permitted under the provisions of S. 4, Partition Act to purchase their share in the dwelling house. The learned Judge has disallowed the appellant's prayer on the ground that the Partition Act does not authorise the original shareholder to purchase the share of a stranger to the dwelling house other than the stranger who sues for partition. The effect of this order is that because the respondents are not plaintiffs in the case their shares cannot be purchased by the defendants under the law. We have considered this matter carefully and we have come to the conclusion that the order of the lower appellate Court cannot be supported.

Before entering into the substantial question raised in the suit we should dispose of a preliminary objection which has been taken on behalf of the respondents. It has been argued that under S. 8, Partition Act, an appeal lies from an order for sale made by the Court under S. 4. This appeal is against an order made by the District Judge refusing to pass an order for sale and therefore, it is not open to appeal. We do not think that this contention ought to prevail. The first Court passed an order for sale and that order was appealable under S. 8, Partition Act. The original order being open to appeal any order passed by the appellate Court should be held open to second appeal unless there is anything in law to prevent it. The order passed in this matter is a decree and has been appealed from as such. Under the Code of Civil Procedure a second appeal is allowed against a decree if the other conditions mentioned therein are fulfilled. We hold that the second appeal is competent.

Now we come to the merits of the case. It has been argued on behalf of the respondents that as the respondents have not brought a suit for partition S. 4 does not apply in their case. S. 4 says that where a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition the Court shall, etc. The appellant contends that though the respondents did not bring a suit yet having applied for a share in the dwelling house they should be treated as having sued for partition of the dwelling house.

Section 44, T. P. Act, excludes the right of a stranger purchaser of a share in a dwelling house to joint possession. As has been observed in Kshirode Chunder Ghosal v. Saroda Prasad Mitra (1) S. 4, Partition Act, is a logical sequel of or corollary to S. 44, T. P. Act. The latter Act denies the right of joint possession to a stranger purchaser who is left only with the right to sue for partition. It was felt that the partition of a dwelling house, specially of small dimensions would divide it into unsuitable parcels and may in some cases introduce undesirable neighbours. The Partition Act 1893 accordingly came to the rescue of the members of an undivided family and gave them the right to purchase the shares obtained by strangers to the family. If effect is given to the respondents' contention the result will defeat the object of the legislature to secure indivisibility of a dwelling house. It is possible that two persons outside the family buy two shares of two members of the family and one of them brings a suit for partition making the other a defendant and if his right to purchase the share of the dwelling house fails on any account the stranger defendant may yet be given a share in the dwelling house because he does not happen to be a plaintiff in the suit. This is certainly not what the legislature intended and we must try to put a reasonable construction on the acts of the legislature. This matter came up for consideration in the Bombay High Court in Khanderao Dattatraya v. Balkrishna Mahadev (2). There the plaintiff a stranger to the family brought a suit for partition of a dwelling house making defendant 3 another stranger cosharer a defendant. Defendant 2 claimed to purchase the shares of the plaintiff and of defendant 3 and his application was allowed.

It does not appear from the report if defendant 3 appeared in the suit and claimed a share in the dwelling house as has been done in the present case by the respondents. But he appealed against the order of the lower appellate Court giving permission to defendant 2 to buy him up. The learned Chief Justice held that as defendant 3 cannot be said to be the person who has sued for partition defendant 2 should not be permitted to buy his share. Upon the particular facts of the case the decision seems to be unexceptionable. The learned Judge's view was based upon the fact that defendant 2 having been allowed to purchase the plaintiff's share, if he does so there is an end of the suit and the question with regard to the purchase of share of defendant 3 will not arise. But if defendant 3 wants to have the partition he will be relegated to the position of a plaintiff and his act will then attract the operation of S. 4, Partition Act. That decision does not meet the difficulty that arises in this case for two reasons. In the first place it seems to be the opinion of the Bombay

(1) [1910] 12 O. L. J. 525=7 I. C. 436.

High Court that an application under S. 4, Partition Act should be made before a preliminary decree is passed whereas this Court has held: see Pran Krishna Bhandari v. Keshah Chandra Roy (3) that such an application can be made at any stage of the suit, even in the appellate Court. In the second place, in the case before us the suit has not been dismissed and cannot be dismissed because the plaintiff had been allowed partition of the lands other than the dwelling house and there is a preliminary decree that a partition should be made of the joint properties. The effect of the decree when it becomes final will be that a commissioner will be appointed with instructions given him according to form No. 10 of Sch. 1, Civil P. C., with power to divide all the properties including the dwelling house according to the shares of the parties. If the appellant or defendant 10 had made an application under the Partition Act and bought up the plaintiffs the present question would never have arisen. But the preliminary decree directs partition of the joint properties and there having been no appeal against it, it is binding between the parties.

As has been observed above the plaintiffs' prayer for a share in the dwelling house on partition was disallowed by the trial Court and he was instead given a share in the land other than the dwelling house. The respondents applied for a saham in the dwelling house and it will not be stretching too much the language of the law to treat the respondents as plaintiffs within the meaning of S. 4, Partition Act. This view is supported by the well-known principle that a party in a partition suit whether a plaintiff or a defendant is at the same time a plaintiff as well as a defendant. This dual capacity of a party in a partition suit does not preclude even a defendant who claims a share in the dwelling house from being treated as plaintiff for the purposes of S. 4, Partition Act. By their application of 5th December 1921, the respondents claimed a share in the dwelling house and they should be treated as suing for partition of the dwelling house.

The difficulty in this case may be solved by having resort to a course which seems reasonable. In the final decree which is to be passed in this case a direction may be given that the respondents' share in the joint properties may be allotted to them out of the lands other than the dwelling house; and if it is not entirely covered by such allotment the members of the undivided family may be directed to compensate them for deficiency. The result of these considerations is that the trial Court may adopt any of these two courses. It may either allow defendant 9 to purchase the share of the respondents or direct the commissioner when passing the final decree to allot to the respondents a share out of the lands other than the dwelling house. This appeal is accordingly allowed. The decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside. The appellant will be entitled to her costs in this Court and in the Courts below.

Appeal No. 799 of 1926, Decided on 9th August 1928, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Faridpur, D/- 2nd December 1925.

* (a) Lessor and lessee—Lessee claiming abatement of rent for eviction by title paramount—He must prove not only that he had to leave part of land demised against his will but also that he had to do so at the instance of one having title superior to lessor's—Transfer of Property Act S. 108 (b) and (c).

In order to succeed in getting abatement of rent by the application of the principle of eviction by title paramount, it is essential for the lessee to make out, not merely that he had to leave a part of the land demised, not merely that he had to do so against his will, but that he had to do it at the instance of a person who has a right to interfere with his possession, his title being superior to that of the lessor: Matthey v. Curling (1922) A. C. 180; Mayor of Poole v. Whit, 15 M & W. 571 and A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 532, Rel. on. [P 275 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 108 (c)—Cl. (c) being covenant would entitle lessee for damages but not for abatement of rent.

Clause (c), S. 103, is a covenant on the face of it, and it means that the lessor will be bound in damages, but lessee is not entitled to claim abatement of rent under it: [P 275 C 2]

* (c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 108, Cl. (c)—Cl. (c) includes lawful acts of third persons as well as of lessor or persons claiming under him but not wrongful acts of third party.

The scope of the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in Cl. (c) includes within its scope lawful acts of third persons as well as of lessor or persons claiming under him, but not trespasses or wrongful acts of a third party; for no lessor can guarantee that his lessee will not be subject to trespass or wrongful acts on the part of a third party: 26 C. W. N. 143 and 49 Cal. 948, Foll. [P 276 C 1]

* (d) Transfer of Property Act, S. 108 Cl. (n)—Cl. (n) does not show that lessor owes any duty to lessee—On the other hand it throws duty on lessee so that lessor may protect his interest.

Under Cl. (n) lessor does not owe a duty to the lessee to protect him from legal proceedings which would interfere with his possession, but that clause really throws a duty upon the lessee in order that the lessor may, if he chooses, protect his own interest and may be safeguarded against the results of a collusive eviction submitted to by the lessee.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the plaintiffs appeal from a decree of the learned District Judge of Faridpur modifying the decision of the Subordinate Judge in a suit for rent under a kabuliati dated 9th Aswin 1322 B. S. It appears that the tenant under this kabuliati was really a cosharer in certain lands with the plaintiffs and that the lands having been diluviated and having thereafter reformed the defendant entered into possession in the exercise of his joint title. Thereafter a certain dispute arose between the parties and it was finally accommodated by the kabuliati which is now in suit—a kabuliati whereby the plaintiffs gave a lease of certain lands which were described therein so far as their eight annas share was concerned to the defendant. It will be observed that at the time this kabuliati was entered into, the defendant was a person who had been on the land and was in possession and was in a very good position to know exactly what lands he was in possession of.

The questions which arise in the present suit arise because, first of all, the defendant says that from a certain portion of the lands of the kabuliati he has been dispossessed by the plaintiffs. The learned Judge on that has held that it has not been shown that he has been dispossessed by the plaintiffs but that the amount of land that the tenant has been in possession of has undoubtedly decreased. Accordingly, independently of any question whether or not it is the action of the plaintiffs that has deprived their tenant of this land, he has held that an abatement of rent is to be given under the general provisions of the law. Now, the only question which arises upon that is this: It has been found that the tenant is in possession of certain other lands, namely, 43.68 bighas and the appellants complain before us that the learned District Judge was wrong in giving an abatement for 41 bighas and odd of land by which the amount of land in the possession of the tenant has been reduced without taking into account the additional land of 43.68 bighas. As to that, there can be no doubt that this kabuliati, though it mentions the boundaries, mentions boundaries which are not necessarily the same to-day and to-morrow and a year hence, and if it can be shown that that extra land in question is contiguous to the suit land and is possessed by the defendant under colour of the plaintiffs' right, it would no doubt be unjust to take account of the extent to which the land under the kabuliati has shrunk on one side without taking into account the extent to which it has increased on the other. The finding of fact, however,—I wish it had been more clear and more detailed—is that this area of 43.68 bighas has no connexion with the demised land and Mr. Roy Choudhuri on behalf of the defendant respondent informs us that the commissioner in the suit had made an enquiry and found that it was distant from the boundaries mentioned in the kabuliati. If this land had no connexion with the land of the kabuliati but was an independent trespass upon the land of somebody else, this question of extra land has no bearing upon the question whether the lands mentioned in the kabuliati have decreased as alleged. I am, therefore, of opinion that it is not open to us in second appeal to interfere on this point with the decision of the learned District Judge.

The next point for consideration arises from an allegation by the tenant defendant that the Government in connexion with a certain neighbouring khas mehal has taken possession of an area of 314 big-has—half of which will be 157 bighas which may be attributed to the plaintiffs' share. The question is whether with regard to this fact the tenant is entitled to an abatement of rent. Now, I propose to consider this question upon two lines—I propose to consider, first, whether the tenant has a good case on the principle of eviction by title paramount and I propose to consider, in the second place, whether he can make a good case for abatement of rent by virtue of anything contained in Cl. (c), S. 108, T. P. Act. I would point out that these two questions are really distinct and the principle of eviction by title paramount has never rested upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The covenant for quiet enjoyment at common law does not extend beyond the acts of the lessor or of persons claiming through or under him and the question of eviction by title paramount is entirely independent of any wider express covenant for quiet enjoyment which can constantly be found in leases.

The facts appear to be as follows: In 1915, the tenant took this lease of the land of which at that time he was in possession. He made no complaint at the time to the effect that the lessors had not put him in possession of all the lands to which he was entitled. As a matter of fact, no such claim could be made with any great show of justice in the circumstances. It appears that even before this time the tenant had been in various ways recognizing the right of Government to certain of the lands which are now in dispute. Be that as it may, there is no pleading in this case and there is no contention before us that the defendant is entitled to a suspension of rent on the principle that the landlords have failed to comply with Cl. (b) mentioned in S. 108, T. P. Act. We must, therefore, take it that the tenant got possession in 1915 of whatever he was entitled to get. In 1918, we find that the khas mehal authorities were taking steps to settle the boundary between the khas mehal on one side and the plaintiff's land on the other, under the Survey Act and there was an order by the Collector fixing the boundary in such a way as to lessen the amount of land attributed to the plaintiffs by the area which is now in question. The provisions of the Act are that the Collector is to proceed to determine the boundaries according to actual possession and that the order of the Collector, until it is reversed or modified by a competent authority, is to have the force of an order of any civil Court declaring the party to be in possession of the land in accordance with the boundaries as determined by the Collector. I will take it that the facts are that thereupon the tenant in this case was obliged no longer to trespass on or to exercise any right over the land beyond the boundaries. As a matter of fact, the order shows that at that time he was not in possession of land beyond the boundary. The order does not purport to evict any one. It purports to declare the extent of possession of the parties. The effect of that order is that it is established against the defendant that he was not in possession beyond the boundaries in 1918: why he was not in possession is a question which is not answered by a mere reading of the order. The order having been made, the tenant took no steps to get it set aside; and he now says that because the plaintiffs had taken no steps to get it set aside, because the claim by the Government was a claim to a title paramount and because after the order it was legal for the khas mehal officers to treat the disputed land as part of the khas mehal, he is entitled to the benefit of the doctrine which gives an abatement of rent upon eviction by title paramount.

On the other hand, it is contended by Mr. Chakravarti on behalf of the plaintiffs appellants that the case so made fails on a most particular point because there is no proof before the Court that the Government had in respect of this land a title superior to that of the plaintiffs and had a right to enter upon the land demised. Upon that, it is quite clear to me that there is no proof in this case of any defect in the plaintiff's title. It was open to the defendant to raise that question and to show that the plaintiffs had no title and thereby to show that it would have been vain on his part to seek to question by suit the validity of the Collector's order. Had he done so and had he succeeded in proving that, then, in my judgment, he would have brought himself within the principle of eviction by title paramount because the law requires nobody to bring a vain suit. If it is clear that any suit brought by the defendant to set aside or overcome the difficulty raised by this order would have been dismissed, there could be neither reason nor convenience in requiring him to bring any such suit. The question is whether, in the absence of any evidence at all on behalf of this defendant to show that there was a defect in the plaintiffs' title, he can claim an abatement on the basis of the order and the other facts found in this case. I am clearly of opinion that he cannot. It is essential for the application of this principle that it should be made out not merely that the tenant has had to leave a part of the land demised, not merely that he has done so against his will but that he has done so at the instance of a person who has a right to interfere with his possession. That this has been the law in England is recognized by the judgment of the learned Judge and, in my opinion, there can be no doubt that that is so. Among the cases on the point, I may refer, first, to the case of Matthey v. Curling (1), a decision of the House of Lords where the circumstances were very strong. It was a case where the War Office at the time of the war under the powers conferred by the Defence of the Realm Regulations entered on premises which had been let to the lessee and after occupying them for a substantial time left those premises in a state of very great disrepair and the premises were also burnt down by fire. In that case, the House of Lords laid strong emphasis upon the necessity of showing actual defect in title. Lord Buckmaster said:

"There has been throughout the case some confusion as to what constitutes a defence on the ground of eviction by title paramount. It is assumed that this means by an act which the lessee could not control; but there is no trace of such a doctrine in any of the authorities. Eviction by title paramount means an eviction due to the fact that the lessor had no title to grant the term, and the paramount title is the title paramount to the lessor which destroys the effect of the grant and with it the corresponding liability for payment of rent."

That this doctrine is old and well settled may be found from the case of Mayor of Poole v. Whit (2). In that case, it was said:

"The plea also states that the Sheriff delivered the demised premises to Parr under the elegit and that, by virtue of the delivery aforesaid, Parr entered and expelled the defendant. This bound the defendant to prove that Parr did enter and evict by virtue of that elegit. I doubt if that must necessarily mean that he entered and dispossessed the defendant by the forms of an ejectment, for the party might yield without that pressure if he chose. But the defendant was bound to show that Parr, the party claiming had such a title as conferred a right to eject him."

This is consistent with the law as laid down in this Court by N. R. Chatterjea, J., in the case of Banka Behari Ghose v. Madan Mohan Roy (3). Where the tenant had been ejected by a suit by another party, and his landlord had not been impleaded in that suit, the Court held that that fact by itself availed nothing; it did not even throw the onus of proving title upon the lessor but the onus of proving the lessor's defect in title still remained with the lessee. In these circumstances, it appears to me that the appellants' case must succeed as regards the contention of eviction by title paramount.

I come then to consider whether in India Cl. (c), S. 108, T. P. Act, gives rise to a different result. S. 108, T. P. Act is an endeavour to state in a series of clauses the rights and liabilities of lessors and lessees and I shall endeavour to omit from consideration as far as possible the circumstance that nearly all these clauses are expressions of well-settled principles familiar in the law of England. The first clause with which we are concerned is this:

"The lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption."

That is a statutory form of covenant for quiet enjoyment. It is wider than the covenant in England which is limited under the common law because it is not limited to the acts of the lessor himself or of a person claiming through or under him. It is the equivalent of an express covenant for quiet enjoyment commonly, I do not say usually, put in leases. We have, therefore, to examine its meaning. On the face of it it is a covenant. It is a thing which sounds in damages. It is not a statement that it is the duty of the lessor as between himself and the lessee to take steps actively to protect the lessee's possession. Such a doctrine is wholly alien to the laws of England and it would be wholly unworkable and impracticable. What it means is that the lessor will be answerable in damages if the event contemplated should occur. Cl. (n) has been pointed to as showing that the lessor owes a duty to the lessee to protect him from legal proceedings which would interfere with his possession but this is entirely contrary to its real purport and effect. That clause throws a duty upon the lessee in order that the lessor may if he chooses protect his own interest and may be safeguarded against the results of a collusive eviction submitted to by the lessee. Ordinarily the measure of damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment would not be the amount or a proportion of the rent and it is to take a long step when from this covenant the learned District Judge infers that the tenant can get abatement of rent. Prima facie the two matters are not directly connected and so far as I know there is no authority for connecting them.

The next question is what the events contemplated are: what acts are within this covenant. It is reasonably clear upon the construction which has been put upon it in Indian cases in particular the case to which I have already referred, namely, the case of Banka Behari Ghose v. Madan Mohan Roy (3), that the scope of this covenant is to include lawful acts of third persons as well as of the lessor or persons claiming under him. I do not know that this matter can be expounded better than it was expounded in the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Uday Kumar Das v. Katyani Debi (4). It is clear that what is contemplated by the covenant is lawful entry, eviction or interruption of the lessee. No lessor can guarantee that his lessee will not be subject to trespass or wrongful acts on the part of a third party. What he does covenant is that his title is such that no lawful entry or eviction or interruption will occur.

Now it is said in this case that, as the Collector has made an order which stands good until it is set aside, the possession of the Government in this case is lawful. In my judgment, that contention is entirely unsubstantial. The order of the Collector declared possession as he found it. It shows that the Government prior to this order had got into possession. If the Government had no right to get into possession, the Collector's order operates to prevent the plaintiffs or the defendant from disturbing that possession except by due process of law. But it does not make that possession lawful as against the plaintiffs or the defendant for any of the purposes with which we are now concerned. If a trespasser's possession is confirmed in such a manner, he remains a trespasser for the purposes of the present question. One has to look in all these cases to the real source of injury. One has to see when a man is dispossessed by the process of law whether he is dispossessed by his own fault or by the defect in the title of his lessor. In this case, it is necessary to determine whether the entry by the Government which took place prior to this order was an entry of a person having a better right than the plaintiffs or whether it was a wrongful or tortious act on the part of the Government. Until that question is settled, Cl. (c), S. 108, T. P. Act, is of no use to the defendant. I am, therefore, of opinion that, on that which was the only remaining question in this case, the learned Judge's decision cannot be upheld. The learned Judge has thought that the doctrine as regards eviction by title paramount is different in India from what it is in England and he has relied wrongly upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment in support of his argument.

In my judgment, this appeal must be allowed and we vary his order by disallowing abatement in respect of the area of 157 bighas 9 cattas 13½ chitacks in the plaintiffs' share from which the defendant has been evicted by the Government. The appellants will get their costs in this Court; but in the lower Courts each party will pay its own costs.

(4) A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 87=49 Cal. 948.

(a) Divorce Act, S. 11—Adulterer must be made party.

In an application by husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery the co-respondent should be added as a party to the petition. [P 277 C 1]

(b) Divorce Act, S. 50—Personal service should be tried and if not possible substituted service should be effected.

In an application for dissolution of marriage by husband steps should be taken as regards service both upon the wife and the co-respondent and where personal service is not possible it is desirable that an order should be recorded that the matter should be announced in the village by beat of drum and that the proper notice should be put up at the Court house. [P 277 C 1, 2]

(c) Divorce Act, S. 50—Order dispensing with service must be recorded.

Although under S. 50 the Commissioner has a discretion to dispense with the service in a proper case he must record proper order in the matter. [P 277 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the Deputy Commissioner of the Garo Hills has pronounced a decree for dissolution of marriage, subject to confirmation by this Court, upon a husband's petition. The petition appears to make the wife the defendant and does not appear to have been framed so as to include the co-respondent as a party. It would appear from the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner that summonses were issued upon the wife and the co-respondent, but neither the wife nor the co-respondent could be found in the village. Accordingly, without making any order dispensing with the service, the Deputy Commissioner has proceeded ex parte, and has pronounced a decree for divorce. The case made by the petitioner is that the wife left the village with the co-respondent and neither has been seen or heard of since. The summons to the wife was apparently accepted by her father on her behalf, she being absent. In these circumstances, it does not appear to me that the Deputy Commissioner has proceeded with sufficient formality or has taken sufficient steps to ensure that the proceedings should be brought to the notice of the co-respondent.

It appears to me that the matter must go back, first, in order that the co-respondent may be added as a party to the petition, and secondly, in order that further steps may be taken as regards service both upon the wife and the co-respondent.

The Deputy Commissioner is in a better position than I am to decide as to what steps are practicable. In default of anything else, it would appear to be desirable that an order should be recorded that the matter should be announced in the village by beat of drum and that the proper notice should be put up at the Court house. The case must go back for that purpose. We appreciate that, under S. 50, Divorce Act, the Commissioner has a discretion to dispense with the service in a proper case. He does not appear to have exercised that discretion by recording any proper order in the matter. But apart from that, it does not seem to be right that service should be dispensed with upon the very bare materials laid before the Deputy Commissioner at the time. The case, therefore, will go back for further steps as to service and thereafter, if necessary, for a proper order dispensing with service. The case must be reheard.

A publisher of an article must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard to the character and description of people expected to read them.

Where an article exceeded all the limits of fair and reasonable criticism, vilified the police as a body, in the most opprobrious language and contained a threat or warning to Government that if the police continue to act as they have in the past the Empire will be brought to ruin, it must be concluded that the article was clearly intended to create feelings of hostility to Government and create disaffection : 2 Bom. L. R. 286 ; A. I. R. 1919 P. C. 31 Rel. on. [P 280 C 2]

B. C. Chatterji, Mrityunjoy Chattopadhyay and Bhola Nath Roy—for Appellants.

N. Sirkar—for the Crown.

Graham, J.—The appellants, Satya Ranjan Bakshi and Pulin Bihari Dhar, Editor, and Printer of the newspaper "Forward" which is printed in English and published in Calcutta, have been convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and sentenced to terms of six months and three months simple imprisonment respectively. They were prosecuted in connexion with an article entitled "The Uninformed" which appeared in that paper on 1st December last. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate found that the article taken as a whole clearly refers to the Government established by law, that the words 'imperial bullies' occurring therein refer to that Government and not to the police, and that the entire article was clearly intended to be an attack upon Government, that it was calculated and intended to bring Government into hatred and contempt, and to excite disaffection towards it. He further found that it did not come within any of the exceptions to S. 124-A.

On behalf of the appellants these findings have been challenged, and it has been urged that the article as a whole does not come within the purview of S. 124-A, that the learned Magistrate erred in construing it and interpreting it in the manner he has, and that in doing so he has relied upon isolated expressions and passages, whereas upon a true construction he should have held that it was merely an attack on the police and not upon Government. On behalf of the Crown the learned Advocate-General contended that however much ingenuity might be employed in endeavouring to explain away the language used, the article taken as a whole was plainly an attack not merely upon the police but upon the Government. The words "imperial bullies" he argued, referred to the Government and not to the police, and the warning at the end was given not to the police, but to the Government that, if they continue to employ the methods which they have recently adopted, viz., letting loose police hooligans, they will not save the British Empire from ruin.

Which of these conflicting view is correct can only be determined by an examination of the article itself. The article begins with historical reference to the time of the East India Company before the assumption by the Crown of the Sovereignty of India, and refers to various acts of oppression and repression. It then goes on apparently to refer to the mutiny period, and finally to Jallianwalla of recent memory, whose blood-stained walls and blood-stained earth testify, the article says to this day to the sovereignty of brute force.

After this historical retrospect the police and their lathis are introduced and reference is made to Lalaji and Pundits Jawaharlal Nehru and Gobinda Bullabh Punt, and there occurs this passage :

"Prison cage has done its worst. The hangman's rope has done its good part. The imperial bullies at whose mercy we seem to drag our life have tired with the dilatory processes of law and the caricatures of law. The police hooligans have taken the law into their own hands. On numerous occasions they have answered brick-bats with bullets

"Rough tough we're the stuff

We want to fight and can't get enough these bullies cry."

The writer then goes on to find fault with those who merely profess indignation and continues :

"Time has come when we must be prepared to make it clear that a few uniformed goondas cannot save an empire from ruin. Time has come when we must also learn the much needed lesson that passivity is not always wise, and that protests are only the language of cowardice when they do not emanate from consciousness of strength. We must know to respect ourselves. We must know to respect and love our cause. Freedom is an invaluable treasure. It is only when we shall truly respect our honour and our nation's honour that the foreigner within our doors will hesitate thrice to treat us with contempt. The lathi blow that came upon Lalaji and has smitten Pundits Jawaharlal and Govinda Ballabh should serve for the rough work of awakening."

The learned Advocate-General very properly conceded that the accused are entitled to a fair and generous reading of the article, and there can be no doubt that it should be construed as a whole in a fair, free and liberal spirit without attaching undue importance to isolated passages or expressions here and there. For this reason I have in order to be fair to the accused, quoted the article at perhaps greater length than would otherwise have been necessary, so as to include certain remarks about patriotism and in praise of freedom which in themselves and apart from their context are unexceptionable.

Mr. Chatterjee on behalf of the appellants strenuously argued that the first part of the article is merely a reference to history, and in support of his contention invited us to refer to various historical books and treatises. As to the remainder he urged that it was an attack upon the police and not upon the government. Adverting to the words "imperial bullies" which the learned Magistrate has held to refer to Government, Mr. Chatterjee contended that from the immediate context it is plain that they refer to the police and that they can have no other meaning. Finally he contended that the warning towards the end of the article was addressed to the police and meant that if they persisted in following such methods, they would instead of saving the British Empire bring about its ruin. In other words the passage in question was according to him not a threat to the Government but rather a well-meant warning to the police not to persist in their evil ways.

With every desire to be fair to the accused and while recognizing that the article is in a language which is not their language and making allowance therefor it appears to me that the construction which Mr. Chatterjee has sought to put upon it cannot be accepted. In the first place it seems to be apparent that, if the article was intended merely to be an attack upon the police, the historical references were superfluous and unnecessary. The manner in which the theme has been developed by Mr. Chatterjee seems to me to be a strained interpretation. Moreover the mention of Jallianwalla brings us down to recent times and the reference there and a little later to "the sovereignty of brute force" can only be to the Government, and to the military authorities who acted on behalf of the Government. It is noteworthy too, as pointed out by the learned Advocate-General, that in animadverting upon the Jallianwalla affair the writer has not thought it to make any reference to the subsequent condemnation by Government of the action of the military authorities in connexion with that incident.

Then coming to the passage about the 'imperial bullies' Mr. Chatterji urged that, if it is loosely read, it can only refer to the police, and he laid emphasis on the words "these bullies" as referring back to the aforementioned "police hooligans" and "imperial bullies." The references, however, to the "prison cage" and "hangman's rope" seem to make it clear that the words 'imperial bullies' cannot mean the police or at all events cannot be limited to them.

The fact moreover is that it is not always easy to disassociate the Government from the police which represents one of the chief agencies of Government, and, as representing law and order, a most important agency. The term Government is in itself an abstraction, but Government can only work through human agency. To the man in the street and more particularly to the villager (and it may be supposed that a paper like Forward has a circulation in the mofussil) the term Government is vague. But the policemen or parawallah as he is sometimes called is no abstraction, but rather the outward and visible emblem of Government and is in the public mind often associated with Government. Indeed he may be said to represent Government in a concrete form.

Then there is the passage about saving the Empire from ruin. Mr. Chatterjee reads it as merely a warning to the police that they cannot save the Empire from ruin by such methods of violence. But taken in conjunction with the context it appears to me that it contains a threat or incitement and that the meaning intended to be conveyed in that, if the people ceased to be content with mere professions of indignation and adopted more forcible methods, then a few thousand uniformed goondas would not be able to save the Empire from ruin. To interpret this passage as a benevolent hint or exhortation to reform seems to me to be reading into it a meaning which it does not fairly bear. It appears to me too that it is addressed not to the police but to the Government.

Finally there is the reference at the end of the article to "the foreigner within our doors" which serves . . . to emphasize the same point of view, and to show that the article is aimed not at the police but at the Government.

Reading the article as a whole it seems to me to be impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that it is directed against the Government and that it cannot be explained as being merely an attack on the police. Even, however, assuming for the sake of argument that the article does refer only to the police, I think that it would still come within the purview of the section since the police is one of the human agencies, and as I have said a very important agency, through which Government acts.

As was observed by Batchelor, J., in the case of Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Emperor (1) at p. 264 :

"The Government established by law acts through human agency, and admittedly the civil service is its principal agency for the administration of the country in times of peace. Therefore where . . . you criticise the civil service en bloc, the question whether you excite dissatisfaction against the government or not seems to me a pure question of fact. You do so if the natural effect of your words, infusing hatred of the civil service, is also to infuse hatred or contempt of the established Government whose accredited agent the civil service is. You avoid doing so if, preferring appropriate language of moderation, you use words which do not naturally excite such hatred of Government . . . It is . . . a mere question of fact."

Substituting the police for the civil service it appears to me that these observations apply to the present case with equal force.

As it appears to be now well settled that intention is a necessary ingredient of the offence it remains to be seen whether the intention of the accused was to bring or attempt to bring the Government into hatred and contempt or to excite or attempt to excite disaffection towards the Government. Reading the article as a whole it appears to me that there is no room for any doubt on the point and that the writer was clearly animated by these intentions. As Jenkins, C. J., tersely said : Queen-Empress v. Luxman (2) at p. 296 :

"To determine whether the intention of the accused was to call into being hostile feelings, the rule that a man must be taken to intend the natural and reasonable consequences of his act must be applied ; so that if on reading through the articles the reasonable and natural, and probable effect of the articles on the minds of those to whom they are addressed appears to be that feelings of hatred, contempt or disaffection would be excited towards the Government, then it is justifiable to say that the articles are written with that intent and that they are an attempt to create the feelings against which the law seeks to provide."

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have also laid down that in judging the question of intent the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard among other things to the character and description of the part of the public who are expected to read the words : Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of Madras (3).

Judged by these tests it seems to me that the intention of the article was clearly to create feelings of hostility to Government, and to excite disaffection. Indeed no other conclusion is possible. The article exceeds all the limits of fair and reasonable criticism. It vilifies the police as a body in the most opprobrious language, and contains a threat or warning to government that, if the police continue to act as they have in the past, the Empire will be brought to ruin. It is difficult to calculate the amount of harm which may be caused by an article written in language so intemperate and so devoid of all sense of restraint. It is no doubt perfectly true, as the writer has said, that "Freedom is an invaluable treasure" and so too is liberty of the press which forms part of that freedom. But freedom must not be abused and cannot be allowed to degenerate into license.

For the reasons I have stated I am of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed. The appellants must surrender to their bail and serve out the remainder of their sentences.

Sarat Chandra Ganguly and others—Accused—Opposite Party..

Criminal Revn. No. 1345 of 1928, Decided on 16th January 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 200—Cross-complaints—No rule as to which should proceed first can be laid down.

The question as to which of the counter cases should proceed first or whether both of them should proceed simultaneously and contemporaneously is one which has to be decided according to circumstances in particular case. No absolute rule of law can be laid down that a particular course must be adopted : A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1260, Ref. [P 281 C 2]

There was a collision between the parties which resulted in the petitioner's filing a complaint before the Magistrate against the opposite party under Ss. 147, 447, 352, etc., Penal Code, and the opposite party making a similar complaint against the petitioner for similar offences. After recording the petitioner's complaint the trying Magistrate looked into the counter-case in which the information was first lodged with the police and as he found that there were injuries on some persons of the opposite party he directed that the case of the opposite party should proceed and deferred passing any order on the petitioner's complaint :

Held : that the Magistrate's discretion in the case should not be interfered with.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 200—Four courses are open on receipt of a complaint.

Under the law four courses are open to the Magistrate on receipt of a complaint. He may either order an enquiry under S. 202 or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 or issue process under S. 204 or postpone the commencement of the proceeding under S. 344.

* (c) Criminal P. C., S. 344—Jurisdiction.

Per Graham, J.—The Magistrate has jurisdiction to postpone his enquiry, even apart from S. 344, under inherent jurisdiction.

Mritunjay Chattopadhyaya and Sudhan-shu Sekhar Mukherji—for Petitioner.Surajit Chandra Lahiry—for Opposite Party.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule was issued to show cause why the order complained of in the petition should not be set aside and the petitioner's complaint directed to be taken up and proceeded with in accordance with law. What happened was that there was a collision between the parties on 6th September 1928, which resulted in the petitioner's filing a complaint before the Magistrate against the opposite party under Ss. 147, 447, 352, etc., I. P. C., and the opposite party making a similar complaint against the petitioner for similar offences. After recording the petitioner's complaint the trying Magistrate looked into the counter case in which the information was first lodged with the police and as he found that there were injuries on some persons of the opposite party he directed that the case of the opposite party should proceed and deferred passing any order on the petitioner's complaint. The petitioner moved unsuccessfully before the Sessions Judge and he now contends that he should have been allowed to proceed with his case simultaneously with the case of the opposite party. We have therefore to consider whether in the circumstances of the case the order passed by the trying Magistrate is justifiable. The question as to which of the counter-cases should proceed first or whether both of them should proceed simultaneously and contemporaneously so often arises in the Courts below and has so often come up to this Court that it would be very satisfactory if it should be finally settled either by the authority of rulings of this Court or by legislation. The cases upon this point have been exhaustively discussed in Makham Mapa v. Manindra Nath Bose (1), to which I was a party and I adhere to the opinion expressed in that case namely :

"In this state of the case-law we feel that there is no authority which is absolutely binding upon us. The Code is silent with regard to the procedure to be adopted in such circumstances. It should not, therefore, be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a particular course must be adopted. Each case has to be decided according to its requirements."

It is argued by the learned advocate for the petitioner that after examining the complaint in the petitioner's case the Magistrate was bound under the law either to dismiss the complaint if he was not satisfied with the truth of it or to issue a process or order an enquiry. But he could not after examining the complainant defer passing any order under Ss. 202, 203 or 204, Criminal P. C. His contention is that the Magistrate has no power under S. 344 to postpone an enquiry or the trial of the case at that stage but he can only do it after he has complied with the provision of S. 204, Criminal P. C. This contention has no substance in it inasmuch as S. 344 empowers the Magistrate not only to adjourn an enquiry or trial but postpone its commencement : and S. 204 is one of the sections which comes under the chapter headed "of the commencement of proceedings before Magistrate." That being so, under the law four courses are open to the Magistrate on receipt of a complaint. He may either order an enquiry under S. 202 or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 or issue process under S. 204 or postpone the commencement of the proceeding under S. 344. In this case it is apparent that the Magistrate has proceeded under S. 344. But under that section he has to state his reasons for postponing the commencement of the proceedings. We have accordingly to see if the Magistrate has stated any reason in support of his order and if the reason given by him is sufficient to justify the order. The reason given by the Magistrate is that on looking into the information given at the thana by the opposite party and the report of the Assistant Surgeon of the injuries on the person of the son of the opposite party, he thought it proper to order that the present case should be put up after the disposal of the counter case.

Mr. Chatterji, the learned advocate for the petitioner, argues that in this case it is proper that both the cases should be tried simultaneously as the point in dispute between the parties is whether the land on which the occurrence took place belonged to the petitioner or the opposite party and that the petitioner as an accused in the counter case will not be in a position to prove his possession or title to the land as he will be debarred from pledging his own oath. As I said in Makham's case (1) every case ought to be considered on its own circumstances. But in the present case there does not seem to be any such circumstance which would make it incumbent on the Magistrate to proceed with it along with the case brought by the petitioner. I can conceive of cases in which it may be desirable that the accused in a case who is the complainant in another case should be given an opportunity of proving his case also during the prosecution of the case against him. But the present case is not one of such a character. It is possible that the dispute may concern land, possession or title to which can only be proved by the accused and there may be documents in his favour which he is not able to prove except by his own examination. In such a case the Magistrate will exercise sound discretion in allowing the accused in a case to proceed with the counter case. Some of the decided cases have proceeded upon the idea that if a complainant who is an accused person in a counter case expresses his desire to proceed with his case, the Magistrate should not prevent him from doing so. In some other cases it has been said that if the accused in a case desires that his counter case should not be proceeded with along with the case against him, he should not be compelled to go on with his case before the counter case is finished. But these are considerations which should not be taken into account in laying down the law on this point, when there is no relevant procedure in the Criminal Procedure Code. These are considerations which may enable the Court to pronounce in a certain case that a certain procedure is proper.

In the present case the only allegation made in the petition before us is that it is eminently desirable that both the cases should be taken up simultaneously as otherwise the petitioner will be seriously prejudiced in his defence in the counter case as he will not be able to give his evidence therein. But he has not given more details as to how the prejudice will be caused and whether such prejudice cannot be avoided by the Magistrate adopting the course which I suggest in cases of persons bringing counter cases against each other. The apprehension which the petitioner entertains about his inability to prove his case before the counter case is decided may be removed by the Magistrate proceeding with the counter case first as he proposes to do and then defer passing orders on it till he has also finished the petitioner's case. He will, of course, not be entitled to refer to the evidence of one case in deciding the other. But he will be in a position to form a correct judgment as to the real nature of the dispute between the parties. In this view I think that it is not a proper case where we should interfere with the discretion of the Magistrate at this stage and I will accordingly discharge this rule.

Graham, J.—In this case a rule was issued to show cause why the order of the Magistrate dated 10th September 1928 should not be set aside and why the petitioner's complaint should not be directed to be proceeded with according to law. The order in question is in these terms:

"Seen copy of the information at the thana by the complainant of the counter case and the Assistant Surgeon's report of the injury on the person of the son of the complainant of the counter case. Put this case up after the disposal of the counter case."

On behalf of the petitioner it has been submitted that this order is illegal, and that after examining the complainant the Magistrate had one of the three alternative courses open to him either firstly to dismiss the complaint, or secondly, to issue process, or thirdly to enquire into the case, or direct an enquiry to be made. It is clear in the present case that the Magistrate did not adopt either of the first two alternatives. What apparently he contemplated was the adoption of the third course. But for the reasons which he has given he postponed his enquiry. The question is whether this procedure is warranted by law. In this connexion reference may be made to S. 344, Criminal P. C. Reading that section in conjunction with S. 202, Criminal P. C., it seems to me that the Magistrate undoubtedly had jurisdiction to postpone his enquiry; and even, apart from this section, the Court must, I think, be held to have inherent jurisdiction to make such an order. In my opinion, the order was in accordance with law and having regard to the particular circumstances of this case, it seems to me, that there can be no doubt as regards the propriety of the order. As the learned Magistrate has pointed out in his explanation he purposely avoided dismissing the petitioner's complaint because he desired to be fair to both parties since it was obvious that, until the counter case had been tried and disposed of, it was not possible to say which version was the true one. For the reasons stated, I agree with my learned brother that this rule should be discharged.

Corporation of Calcutta — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1037 of 1928, Decided on 29th January 1929.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 421—Article ordered to be destroyed—Onus is not on Corporation to prove that the article was intended for human consumption.

It cannot be contended that because S. 418, Cl. (2) puts the burden upon the 'accused' to prove that the article is not intended for human consumption in a case of prosecution under the chapter, it indicates that in all other cases e. g., in a case where the article is ordered to be destroyed under S. 421, the onus will be upon the Corporation to prove that it is intended for human consumption.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 114—Ghee can be presumed to be meant for human consumption.

The Court is entitled to take for granted, when it is not denied, that ghee is an article intended for human consumption. It is possible that it can be employed for remote or extraordinary purposes but the ordinary presumption that ghee is intended for human consumption is not a presumption of law but a supposition based on common sense when there is no assertion to the contrary.

(c) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 418 (2)—"Prosecution" includes proceedings under S. 421.

Graham, J.—The word "prosecution" used in S. 418, sub-S. (2) does not necessarily connote prosecution for an offence, and where it is intended to be so used it is usual to state so in plain terms. Prosecution in its wider or more general sense means a proceeding by way of indictment, or information, and as used in S. 418 (2) it may include such proceedings as those taken under S. 421 of the Act.

N. Sarkar, P. K. Sandell, Mrityunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Sachindra Nath Banerji—for Petitioner.

B. C. Mitter, D. N. Bagchi and Gopendra Krishna Banerjee—for Opposite Party.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been pressed on one point. Some tins of ghee were found in a godown belonging to the petitioner and the article was ordered to be destroyed by the Municipal Magistrate under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923. It is not disputed that the ghee is adulterated and unfit for human consumption. It is also not disputed before us that it was in the possession of the petitioner and that if the contention of the petitioner before us fails it is liable to destruction under S. 420 or 421.

The point that has been argued in this case on behalf of the petitioner is that there is no evidence and that it has not been proved by the Corporation that the ghee seized was intended for human consumption. It is said that under S. 418 read with Ss. 420 and 421 the article to be destroyed must be a thing intended for human consumption. The question therefore is whether the ghee was intended for human consumption. It is argued that under S. 418, Cl. (2) if a prosecution is instituted under Chap. 28, Calcutta Municipal Act, the burden shall rest with the party charged to prove that the article is not intended for human consumption. It is submitted that in a case where there is no prosecution the onus will be on the party who seeks to exercise the power vested in him under Ss. 420 or 421 to prove that the article was intended for human consumption.

It is necessary to refer to the facts of the case in order to see whether it lies in the mouth of the petitioner to raise the point before us. It is admitted that the ghee was purchased somewhere in the Punjab and was being taken to Rangoon. In the course of its transit it was brought to Calcutta to the petitioner's godown for making some repairs to the tins. No question as to what use the ghee would ultimately be put to was raised before the learned Magistrate and it was tacitly admitted before him that it was intended for sale at Rangoon. The learned Magistrate remarks in his judgment "it is rather admitted that the ghee was intended for sale in Rangoon."

The point that has been raised before us seems to be an afterthought. Now to come to the question whether it is incumbent upon the Corporation to prove that the ghee was intended for human consumption. I do not agree with the contention that because S. 418, Cl. (2) puts the burden upon the accused to prove that the article is not intended for human consumption in a case of prosecution under the chapter, it indicates that in all other cases the onus will be upon the Corporation to prove that it is intended for human consumption. Ghee is ordinarily intended for human consumption and it does not require the assistance of Acts or Statutes to presume that it is meant for human consumption. The reason why S. 418, Cl. (2) indicates that it is for the party to prove that the article is not intended for human consumption is probably to meet an argument that may be raised on behalf of the accused under prosecution that the prosecution should ordinarily prove every element constituting an offence. It does not necessarily indicate that a Court cannot make a presumption where there is nothing to suggest otherwise. Sir Binod Mitter on behalf of the Corporation has argued that the action taken by the Corporation in this matter is a prosecution within the meaning of S. 418. There is a great deal to be said in support of this view but I do not think it necessary in the present case to decide the point as I am of opinion that the Court is entitled to take for granted, when it is not denied, that ghee is an article intended for human consumption. It is possible that it can be employed for remote or extraordinary purposes but the ordinary presumption that ghee is intended for human consumption is not a presumption of law but a supposition based on common sense when there is no assertion to the contrary. In this connexion our attention has been drawn to S. 106, Evidence Act, which says:

"When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person the burden of proving that fact is upon him."

It seems to me that this section read with the illustrations under it lays down nothing more than the ordinary rule of reasoning consistent with common sense. In my opinion, there is no substance in the point raised before us and this rule must be discharged. Let the order complained against be executed at once.

Graham, J.—I agree. Ghee comes within the definition of food as given in S. 3 (31), Calcutta Municipal Act, and is ordinarily used for human consumption. That being so, apart from anything contained in S. 418, sub-S. (2) of the Act, the ordinary presumption would be that the ghee was intended for human consumption. If the petitioner alleged the contrary it was for him to prove it. But apart from this view of the matter it may be observed that the word "prosecution" used in S. 418, sub-S. (2), does not necessarily connote prosecution for an offence, and where it is intended to be so used it is usual to state so in plain terms Prosecution in its wider or more general sense means a proceeding by way of indictment, or information, and as used in S. 418 (2) it may include such proceedings as those taken under S. 421 of the Act. I agree that the rule should be discharged.

You will pay the settled saja paddy and straw to me and after me to my heirs every year in the month of Magh without any increase or diminution from the year 1291 B. S.' It contained a clause "Ukta ek kahan vara mulyadin taka dhaner mulya atash taka haibey."

N. C. Sen Gupta and Urukramdas Chakravarti—for Appellants.

Panchanan Ghose and Sailendra Nath Banerjee—for Respondents.

Ramendra Mohan Mazumdar for Biraj Mohan Mazumdar—for Dy. Registrar.

Basu, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Bankura reversing the judgment and decree of the Munsiff at Bankura in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in kind. The learned Munsiff decreed the suit in full. He held that the plaintiff was entitled to the market price of the paddy and not the price stated in the kabuliat. The learned District Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to the price stated in the kabuliyat and not the market price as followed by the Munsiff.

The plaintiffs prefer this appeal. The question involved in the appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to the market value of the paddy and straw reserved as rent in the kabuliat or the price of the same as stated in it. The material portion of the kabuliat is as follows :

"I am making a settlement to you for ever in dar mukarari right at an annual rent of 7 maps of saja paddy on the standard of bankuri pai and 1 kahan straw. You will pay the settled saja paddy and straw to me and after me to my heirs every year in the month of Magh without any increase or diminution from the year 1291 B. S. You will enjoy the said land from generation to generation according to your will in your own jote either by settling the jote or by settling after constructing huts. You will not get reduction of settled rent for any reason such as drought, etc. If you fail to pay saja paddy, you will pay excess at the rate of 2 salis for each map for each year. In future the rent of the said land will never be increased or decreased. On these terms after accepting kabuliat for ever, dar mokerari patta is granted for ever".

The clause in the sentence :

"Ukta ek kahan vara mulyadin taka dhaner mulya atash taka haibey" has been translated on the side of the appellant as 'the price of the aforesaid 1 kahan of straw is estimated to be Rs. 2 and the price of the aforesaid paddy is estimated to be Rs. 28.' On the side of the respondent it is said that it should be translated as

"the price of the aforesaid 1 kahan of straw will be Rs. 2 and the price of the aforesaid paddy will be Rs. 28."

What has been fixed for ever is the paddy rent and not the price of the paddy. No money rent is fixed in the patta nor is there any stipulation in the patta to the effect that in the event of the failure of payment of paddy and straw so much money would be paid. It has been urged on the side of the respondent that if it is held that it was intended by the parties that the market price would be paid then it would be seen that the rent was not fixed as the price would vary from year to year. What was intended by the parties was that the paddy rent would be fixed for ever. It clearly goes to show that the clause regarding the price of the paddy which was inserted towards the end of the patta was for other purposes, namely for the purposes of stamp duty and registration. Reference has been made to several rulings of this Court on this point. But each case must be decided upon the terms of the contract and having regard to the terms of the contract in the present case, we are of opinion that it was intended by the parties that the market price should be paid and that it was never intended that the sum of Rs. 28 as the price of the paddy and Rs. 2 as the price of the straw were fixed for ever. Reference has been made to an unreported decision in appeal from appellate decree No. 2488 of 1923 dated 10th February 1926. The paper-book of that case has been put up before us. The terms of the lease in that case at first sight would seem to be similar to those in the present case. But in the present case the terms are really distinguishable from those in the other case. In that case no doubt it was mentioned that the price of the saja paddy would be Rs. 27. After that clause it was stated that it was to this effect that a dar mukarari patta was granted. In the present case as I have already said there is nothing in the patta after the clause regarding the price of the paddy and straw. In these circumstances we think that we should hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to the market price of the paddy and straw.

Another point has been urged in this appeal to the effect that the decision in Rent Suit Nos. 857 of 1912, 358 of 1916 and 84 of 1920 would operate as res judicata on the question as regards this point. In Rent Suit No. 857 of 1912 and Rent Suit No. 358 of 1916 the question now raised was not raised at all. The subject-matter of the suit in the present case is not the same as in those suits and in rent suits the causes of action are always different. As this question was not raised in the previous suits the decision in those suits would not operate as res judicata. In any of these rent suits there was not a prayer for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to the market price of the paddy as part of the substantive relief and the Court did not declare in these suits that the plaintiff was entitled to the market price of the paddy. In Rent Suit No. 84 of 1920 this question was no doubt distinctly raised but it appears that the present defendant 6 was not a party to that suit. The learned Munsiff has gone into these questions in detail in his judgment. In these circumstances we hold that the decision of the previous suits will not operate as res judicata. For the above reasons the appeal is allowed. The judgment and decree of the learned District Judge are set aside and those of the Munsiff restored. The appellants will get their costs in this Court as well as in the lower appellate Court.

Appeal No. 1602 of 1925, Decided on 25th April 1928, against appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Bankura, D/- 7th April 1925.

Where a person is taking water during monsoon through an artificial channel for nearly 32 or 35 years into his own field for irrigation purposes by cutting an ail of another's field at a particular place during the monsoon, such user cannot be said to be of a temporary nature and the right to take such water can be acquired by prescription: Beeston v. Weate (1856) 5 El. & Bl. 986, Foll. [P 287 C 1]

C. C. Ghose, J.—In this case the main contention that has been advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is that the defendants have acquired no right of easement by the temporary user of water flowing through an artificial channel and in support of this contention reliance was placed on the case of Arkwright v. Gell (1) and the case of Kena Mahomed v. Bohatoo Sircar (2).

Now, the facts involved in this appeal are briefly these: The plaintiffs alleged that there was a dahar (low sunken pathway) contiguous on the east of their Dags Nos. 3032 and 3033 and that during the rainy season there is an overflow of the water of this dahar over Dags 3032 and 3033 towards the west, that in 1328 the defendants cut the northern ail of Dag 3033 and thereby forced the overflow water to their lands on the north. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had

The defendants' case was that, during the rainy season the water from the dahar passed into Dag 3033 through one of the katans in the nala on the south of it, that the water then passed through a katan at station No. 6 in the northern ail of 3033 through a nala on the western boundary of Dag 3032 and thence into the land of one Provas Ghose and thereafter into Dag No. 3057 belonging to the defendants. They contended that they had done this for many years and had acquired a prescriptive right to cut the northern ail of Dag 3033 and take water into their Dag No. 3057 and other lands towards the north-west of Dag 3033.

The lower appellate Court found on the evidence adduced in this case that for nearly 32 or 35 years the defendants had been taking water into their Dag No. 3057 through a katan at station No. 6 into the northern ail of Dag No. 3033 and that this they had done as of right without interruption. The lower appellate Court accordingly held that the defendants had acquired a prescriptive right to cut the northern ail of the plaintiff's Dag No. 3033 and take water into their Dag 3057. On appeal before us it is contended that the dahar in question is an artificial channel and that it was only during the monsoon that water could be had and that the temporary user of water through an artificial channel did not ripen into a right of easement.

Having regard to the facts found by the lower appellate Court it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the user in this case was of a temporary nature. The water which flowed through the dahar was available every monsoon, i. e., during all the months of the year when irrigation operations are ordinarily undertaken by agriculturists and there can be no doubt on the facts in this case that the water in question was used for a long series of years for the purpose of irrigating the defendants' lands. That being so, it seems to me that this case comes within the principle of the ruling in Beeston v. Weate (3) where the facts were as follows :

"Plaintiff and defendant occupied contiguous portions of land. For more than forty years, and as far back as his living memory went, the occupiers of plaintiff's land have been in the habit of passing over defendant's land to a brook which lay on the other side of that land, and of damming up the brook, when necessary, so as to force the water into an old artificial watercourse which ran across defendant's land to plaintiff's land. They did this, for the purpose of supplying their cattle with water, whenever they wanted the water, except when the owners of defendant's land used the water, as they did at certain seasons of the year, for irrigation."

It was held by Lord Campbell, C. J., that the jury in that case were warranted in inferring a user as of right by the occupiers of the plaintiff's land of the easement on the defendant's land and that for the interruption of such easement the plaintiff might maintain an action against the defendant. Lord Campbell distinguished the case of Arkwright v. Gell (1) and pointed out that there could be an easement to conduct water across a neighbour's close by an old artificial watercourse. Lord Campbell observed that the direction of the Judge in the case of Beeston v. Weate (3) that on the facts the jury would be justified in returning a verdict for the plaintiff was correct as such enjoyment and acts, which without the existence of the easement would be tortious were evidence of the right to the water, and the fact of the channel along which the water flowed being artificial did not prevent the right being acquired, there being nothing to show that the artificial channel was made for a mere temporary purpose: See also Carson on Real Property Statutes, Edn. 3, p. 7. In the present case having regard to the findings of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court there cannot be any doubt that the defendants did acquire a prescriptive right to take water in the manner alleged by them. In this view of the matter, the plaintiffs' suit must fail. The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Jury Ref. No. 54 of 1927, Decided on 3rd April 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 307—Verdict not unreasonable — High Court should not interfere.

High Court should not interfere with the verdict of jury, which cannot be said to be unreasonable. To interfere in such a case would mean that the trials by jury would be rendered useless. [P 289 C 2]

Khondkar—for the Crown.

N. K. Bose and Sailendra Mohan Das—for Accused.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case nine accused persons were tried before a jury and the Sessions Judge on charges under Ss. 399 and 402, I. P. C., that is to say, making preparations to commit dacoity and assembling for the purpose of committing the dacoity. Of a jury of five all thought that accused 3 and 8 were not guilty but the verdict acquitting the other seven accused was by a majority of four as against one. The learned Sessions Judge has made this reference thinking that all the accused should be convicted.

The story for the prosecution is that one Monohar Ali prosecution witness 22 who was notoriously a bad character, told the police that a dacoity was about to be committed and that the people were going to assemble in the house of one Sabdar. Thereupon the police got an armed force and went to this man's house at the time of the preparation of the dacoity. When they went there they found a number of torches and other articles, on the strength of which it is said that these people were guilty under Ss. 399 and 402, I. P. C. In answer to that, the defence says first of all that this man Monohar was put up by another man Ananga who had a cause of enmity with Sabdar about a bainapatra and Monohar had been set up by Ananga to cause trouble to Sabdar. It is stated further that accused 1, 2, and 3 are brothers and along with accused 7 who is a nephew of accused 8, were living together, in any case, in that house which is the scene of this occurrence: that of the accused persons five are people who ordinarily would be in that house in any case. Then it is said that accused 4, 5 and 6 were men of a place called Shedlai some 13 or 14 miles away and the accused 9 was of a place called Balina also some miles away. As regards that the defence case is that these people were casual labourers, hired labourers of a neighbour and were being allowed by Sabdar to use the outer house because the man who had employed them had no accommodation for them.

The learned Judge has summed up the matter at very great length and with great ability as though it was a matter of some difficulty and in the end when the jury gave their verdict he asked them some questions to find out the basis of their verdict. Before we come to that we see that the learned Judge cross-examined every one of the accused persons under S. 342, Criminal P. C., a very elaborate cross-examination putting all sorts of specific points to these accused people and the accused people were within the hearing of the jury and in that way they gave a good deal of explanation or evidence whichever it may be called with which the jury were entitled to be impressed if they thought fit. The learned Judge cross-examined them in much detail. The result may have been that the jury found that the answers given were reasonably satisfactory and sufficed to shake off the prosecution case. The jury were asked by the Judge on what basis they came to their verdict and they said that the case was concocted by Ananga and Monohar Ali. They were asked about the alamsats or pieces of evidence and they said that it was possible to introduce the things into the house. As regards the men from Burichang they found that the men came as labourers to work for Jiamuddin. All I have to say on that basis is this that the matter went to the jury, they considered it and they may have taken a lucky or favourable view of these accused persons. But with evidence in this condition why this Court should be troubled with a matter like this I am entirely unable to discover. I do not see why on evidence such as in this case the High Court should be asked to try the case all over, again. If this Court were to interfere in a case of this description it would mean that trials by jury would be rendered useless. There is no doubt that the jury were entitled to come to the verdict to which they did come. I see no reason whatever why this Court should throw aside the verdict of the jury which cannot be said to be unreasonable. In my judgment this reference is an unprofitable employment of public time. I think that the jury's verdict should be accepted and the accused should be acquitted. If they are on bail they should be discharged from their bail bonds.

A person was provisionally appointed as him as one of the staff but owing to financial stringency it decided to dispense with his services from August:

sonable notice or three months' pay in lieu thereof under the circumstances:

Judgment.—In this case the opposite party is a school master. He was appointed by the petitioner who was the Secretary of the Lohajang High School provisionally as a teacher in January 1923 on a pay of Rs. 45 a month and joined his post. In the following March the Committee resolved that owing to financial stringency they could not keep six graduates on the staff and so they determined that the opposite party's services and those of two others be dispensed with.
No action appears to have then been taken in the matter which came up again on 24th July and then the Committee finally dispensed with the opposite party's services resolving that he will not be required after 16th August. He then on 16th August ceased to work and was paid up to that date, at the rate of Rs. 45 a month. He appears to have claimed that he was entitled to some notice and that he only got notice on 8th August but waiting for sometime just within the period of limitation he brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover six months' pay. The learned Small Cause Court Judge gave him a personal decree against the petitioner for three months' pay. A Rule has been obtained on two grounds urged: First, that the decree should not have been a personal one against the petitioner but against the petitioner as Secretary of the School and, secondly, that anyhow the opposite party was not entitled to more than one month's notice. Now, there was no written contract between the parties as to the period of notice necessary before the opposite party's services could be dispensed with.

1929 C/37 &amp; 38

He was, therefore, entitled to a reasonable notice. I have carefully considered the evidence, and the facts of this case and so far as notice is concerned it appears to me not unreasonable to give the opposite party three months' pay in lieu of a reasonable amount of notice. It cannot be said that six or seven days was sufficient notice and it is not likely that he would be able to find some other place where he would earn his livelihood within even one month when he was dismissed in the middle of August. So far as that point, therefore, is concerned, the Rule must fail. As to the other point the learned Small Cause Court Judge appears to me to have fallen into an error. He says that the man was appointed by the Secretary without the authority of the committee and so the committee are not liable and he is personally liable as the Committee refused to confirm him when the matter came up before it. This does not appear to be the fact. It appears that he was appointed (no doubt provisionally) by the Secretary but at the first meeting afterwards of the Committee he was recognized as one of the staff but the Committee regretted that they were unable to retain him as such owing to financial stringency. In my opinion, therefore, this is not a case which comes under
S. 235, Contract Act, so as to make the petitioner personally liable for the pay.
The decree, therefore, will be varied and will be against the Secretary and the Committee of the School instead of against the petitioner personally. In the circumstances I allow no costs.

Santasila Dasi—Applicant.

v.

Narendra Nath Pal—Caveator.

Testamentary Suit No. 15 of 1927, Decided on 27th March 1928.

(a) Will—Testamentary capacity—Attesting witnesses independent and responsible—Will in testator's handwriting—Facts give strong indication of voluntary act.

The fact that a will itself is a holograph will, i. e., written entirely by the testator in his own handwriting is a very strong indication that the testator was fully cognizant of what he was doing and that what he did was an act of his own volition especially when he has called entirely independent and responsible persons to be the witnesses to his will.

(b) Calcutta High Court Rules (Original side), Ch. 35, R. 29—Caveator besides asking executor to prove will also alleging undue influence and forgery—Matter does not come within R. 29—Caveator is liable for costs.

If a caveator merely intends to require the executor to prove the will in solemn form he must not at the same time set up a defence of undue influence or fraud or any matter of that character.

The widow applied for probate of the will. The caveator besides entering a caveat filed an affidavit alleging that the deceased at the time he made the will and up to the time of his death was a man of weak intellect with very imperfect knowledge of English, that the will was procured by the widow by undue influence and that the will was not genuine but was in effect a forgery. In the last paragraph of his affidavit the caveator prayed that the will should be proved in solemn form and for liberty to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will.

Held: that as R. 29 contained the word "merely" the last paragraph of the affidavit was not sufficient to bring the matter within the terms of R. 29. The caveator pleading undue influence was liable for costs: Calcutta Suit No. 4 of 1928, Foll.; Ireland v. Rendall, (1866) 1 P. & D. 194; Cleare v. Cleare, (1869) 1 P. & D. 655, Rel. on.

S. C. Bose—for Applicant.D. N. Basu and K. C. Chakravarti—for Caveator.

Judgment.—This is an application for the grant of probate of the will of one Surendra Nath Pal, who died on 30th April 1927. The will is dated 15th July 1923, and was therefore made more than four years before the death of the testator.

By that will the testator made certain dispositions of his property and he left the whole of the residue of it to his widow whom he appointed to be the executrix of that will. When the widow applied for probate of the will in the ordinary course a caveat was entered by a brother of the deceased (named Narendra Nath Pal) who filed an affidavit alleging that his brother was at the time he made the will and up to the time of his death a man of weak intellect and had a very imperfect knowledge of English. He also alleged in effect in his affidavit that the will was procured by the undue influence of the widow. But there was a still more serious allegation in the affidavit in that the caveator contended, or at any rate, stated that the will was not genuine, and in effect he said that it was a forgery.

In the last paragraph of his affidavit he says :

"I therefore insist upon the said will being proved in solemn form and that I be given the liberty to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will."

When the case was called on, the learned counsel who appeared on behalf of the caveator made it clear that he did not intend to rely on any of the matters set out in the affidavit but that he merely required the plaintiff in this suit to prove the will in solemn form.

If ever there was a case where a will might be said to have been executed under thoroughly satisfactory conditions in my opinion it was this case. The will itself is a holograph will, i. e., written entirely by the testator in his own handwriting. That fact of itself is a very strong indication that the testator was fully cognizant of what he was doing and that what he did was an act of his own volition.

If the caveator had taken the elementary precaution of inspecting the will before he recklessly began making charges with regard to his brother's state of mind he must have known perfectly that the will was actually in the handwriting of the brother. More than that, not only did the testator write out the will in his own handwriting but he took the sensible and reasonable course of getting entirely independent and responsible persons to be the witnesses to his will. Apparently the caveator thinks it is a matter for regret and a fact which ought to cast some doubt on the authenticity of the will that the caveator selected such independent and responsible persons to be witnesses to the will. . . .

I should have thought every reasonably minded person would have seen how much more satisfactory it is to have independent persons to be witnesses to a will. Had the testator adopted the course which the caveator suggests he should have taken, namely, to call in his own relations such as the caveator himself or his sons to witness the will, then it was obvious that some other branch of the family would have immediately alleged that those witnesses had exercised an improper influence on the testator.

The attesting witnesses, who were called, testified that this will is in the handwriting of the testator and that it was duly executed by the testator in the presence of the various gentlemen whose names appear as witnesses.

It is quite clear that all of those witnesses to the will are responsible persons. There is not a shadow of reason, not a scintilla of evidence, for suggesting or for ever having suggested that this testator was not fully cognizant of what he was doing or that this will was not properly executed. A more baseless intervention by a caveator, a more unwarrantable intervention by the caveator than the intervention in this case is to my mind impossible to imagine. There was absolutely no shadow of justification at all for the entering of this caveat.

Now it is argued that the effect of this affidavit is to bring the matter within the terms of R. 29, Ch. 35 of the Rules of this Court. I have had occasion to construe that rule quite recently (In Re the goods of Cohen; Cursinder v. Cohen, Suit No. 4 of 1928) and I pointed out that that rule is a reproduction of the English R. 18, O. 21, of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England.

It has been held that under the English rule that a notice such as is contemplated by the rule must be served with the defence and R. 29, of the rules of this Court provides:

"that a party opposing a will may by his affidavit give notice that he merely insists upon the will being proved in solemn form."

It is to be observed that the rule contains the word "merely," and therefore I do not think that the last paragraph of the affidavit in the present case is sufficient to bring the matter within the terms of R. 29, particularly having regard to the fact that it has been laid down by a very high authority in England that a plea of undue influence or fraud is inconsistent with notice. I refer to the case of Ireland v. Rendall (1), also to Cleare v. Cleare (2), reported in the same volume at p. 655, but especially to the case of Harrington v. Bowyer (3), where at p. 265 Lord Penzance said, referring to the case of Cleare v. Cleare (2):

"That case establishes the proposition that where a party setting up a will has to prove affirmatively a fact not merely to negative a charge made by his opponent, where a proof of such fact forms part of the burden, which the party propounding the will takes upon himself, the other party may cross-examine the witnesses upon such matter without liability for costs if the proper notice has been given. The question is, whether under the circumstances of this case, it is proper that I should exercise my discretion as to costs in favour of the defendant. I think the Court should be consistent in exercising its discretion; and as it has been already decided in Ireland v. Rendall (1), that under similar circumstances a party pleading undue influence is liable for costs, I shall follow that decision."

These cases show quite clearly that if a caveator merely intends to require the executrix to prove the will in solemn form he must not at the same time set up a defence of undue influence or fraud or any matter of that character. Therefore I hold that in this present case notice was not given in such a way as to bring the matter within the terms of R. 29. But I desire to add that in this particular case the circumstances are such that in any event it would be impossible for the Court to do otherwise than come to the opinion that there was no reasonable ground at all for opposing the will and, therefore, even if the matter had fallen within the terms of R. 29, it would not have followed that the caveator would be entitled to escape liability for costs.

I think it is eminently desirable that persons should be discouraged from recklessly launching probate suits or causing probate suits to be brought especially when there is no other foundation whatsoever for the charges which they recklessly make other than the fact that they feel sore or disappointed because they do not happen to be named as beneficiaries in the will in question. This in my opinion is essentially a case where a caveator should pay the whole of the costs of the executrix and I make an order accordingly.

I pronounce in favour of the will and direct that grant of probate do issue.

Appeal No. 1037 of 1926, Decided on 17th July 1928, from appellate decree of 3rd Sub-Judge, Mymensingh, D/- 19th December 1925.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 75—Plea that cause of action accrued on first default and limitation was extended owing to payment of interest is inconsistent with plea of waiver—Practice—Inconsistent plea.

In an instalment bond with the condition of exigibility on one default a plaintiff alleged that cause of action arose on the date of the first default, and that the limitation was saved by payments of interest on subsequent dates, which the plaintiff failed to prove.

Held: that the plaintiff cannot be allowed to set up a plea of waiver: A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 85, Foll.; 41 All. 104, Ref.; A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 146, Dist. [P 293 C 1]

* * (b) Limitation Act, Art. 75—Optional right to enforce payment may be waived—Waiver must depend upon definite act or performance—No waiver when inconsistent plea is raised.

Where in an instalment bond with a condition of exigibility on one default there is an optional right given to the creditor to enforce payment of money, such right may be waived, but when it is not waived, or when there is nothing to show that it has been waived, limitation would run from the date when the right accrues on the first default. Mere abstinence to sue on the part of the plaintiff and the mere fact that he slept over his rights would not constitute waiver. The waiver may be effected in a variety of ways and may be inferred from various circumstances. It must, however, always depend upon some definite act or forbearance on the part of the plaintiff. On the other hand, when the plaintiff puts forth pleas which are inconsistent with the fact of waiver, there can be no waiver: (Case law discussed). [P 293 C 1, 2; P 294 C 2; P 296 C 2]

Bose, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the judgment and decree of Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, affirming the judgment and decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, in a suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of Rs. 1,442-8-0 alleged to be due on a simple instalment bond executed by defendant 1 in her favour on 27th Pous 1324 B. S., for a consideration of Rs. 950. The plaintiff alleged receipt of Rs. 82 on different dates on account of interest, the last payment having been made on 9th Kartik 1328 B. S., and her case in the plaint was that these payments saved limitation.

Defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. The defendants did not admit the payments as alleged by the plaintiff on the dates specified but he said that he had paid Rs. 110 in all, the last payment having been made in Bhadra of 1326 B. S.

Both the lower Courts found as a fact that no payment was made by the defendant after Bhadra 1326 and so they dismissed the suit as barred by limitation.

The instalment bond in question stipulated for payment of the money covered by it in six instalments falling due on the dates mentioned in the bond, the first instalment falling due on the last day of Aswin 1325 B. S. There was a further stipulation in the bond to the effect that in the event of default of payment of any one instalment, the creditors would be entitled to recover the entire amount of principal and interest due on the bond. The default was made in the payment of the first instalment. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the proviso in the bond having been inserted for the advantage of the creditor it was optional with the creditor to sue for the whole amount, i.e., she could sue for the whole, or if she chose might waive her right to sue and so the claim for the last three instalments, viz., Aswin of 1328, Aswin of 1329 and Aswin of 1330 is not barred by limitation. In the present case the plaintiff claimed the entire amount under the bond with interest from the date of its execution. This goes to show that she did not waive the benefit of the proviso. She stated in the plaint that her cause of action arose on the date the first instalment fell due, i.e., on the last day of Aswin 1325 B. S. I have already said that she wanted to save limitation by alleging payments of interest by defendants on certain specified dates. There has been no acceptance of payment subsequent to the first default nor a mere abstinence on the part of the creditor from seeking the benefit of the proviso, but on the contrary, there has been affirmative act done by her showing that she did not waive the benefit of the proviso, but claimed the entire amount. The waiver of such condition may be effected in a variety of ways and may be inferred from various circumstances. It must, however, always depend upon some definite act or forbearance on the part of the plaintiff. Here the plaintiff distinctly pleaded payment of interest to save limitation. The fact of waiver would be inconsistent with such a plea and she could not be allowed to set it up when her plea of payment had been found to be false. I have already said that she stated in the plaint that her cause of action arose on the date of the first default, i.e., Aswin 1325. So I am of opinion that time began to run against the plaintiff from the date of the first default.

Shib Chand Nahar v. Hyder Molla (1) was a case of a mortgage bond executed by defendant whereby a sum of money was made payable by four instalments, and the plaintiff was given the liberty in case of any default to sue either for the amount of that instalment or for the whole amount then due; it was held that limitation ran from the date of the first default. In this case it has been observed that where there is an optional right given to enforce payment of money such right may be waived, but when it is not waived or where there is nothing to show that it has been waived, limitation would run from the date when the right accrues. This decision was followed in Jadab Chandra v. Bhairab Chandra (2), and in Girindra Mohan Roy v. Kuir Narayan Das (3), Abinash Chandra v. Bama Bewa (4) was a case where it was held that mere omission to sue was not such a waiver as was contemplated by Art. 75, Sch. 1, Lim. Act. Such a waiver was not limited to the case of a subsequent acceptance of an overdue instalment, but might be effected in a variety of ways, might be inferred from various circumstances. It must, however, depend on some definite act or forbearance. In the case plaintiff brought the suit on 8th February 1909, alleging that the first two instalments had been duly paid and that the remaining fourteen instalments fell due in April 1903, on which date default was made. The defence was that the allegation of payment of the first two instalments was false, and that the suit having been brought after the expiry of 6 years from the first default, it was barred by limitation. It has been proved as a fact that the first two instalments were not paid. The learned Judges remarked:

"here they distinctly pleaded payment of the first two instalments. The fact of waiver would be absolutely inconsistent with such a plea, and they could not be allowed to set it up, when their plea of payment had been found to be false."

On the side of the appellant reference has been made to Mohan Lal v. Tika Ram (5). There was a proviso in the instalment bond that if there was any default in payment of any of the instalments, then the creditor would have the power to claim the entire amount in a lump sum. The bond was executed on 23rd February 1909. The first instalment would be payable at the end of February 1910. Nothing was paid on account of the first two instalments. The plaintiff brought the suit on 7th June 1917 claiming to recover only the remaining three instalments with interest. It has been held in the case that the plaintiff may, if he so chooses, waive his right and sue for such instalments as remain due and are not barred by limitation. The next case referred to is Pancham v. Ansar Hashen (6). Where there was a mortgage of immovable property for the advance of a sum repayable in 12 years with interest capitalizing in case of non-payment with a further proviso for the payment of Rs. 500 every year, any default which would give the mortgagee an immediate right to realize the whole debt, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that under a clause in the above form, a single default by itself operated eo instanti to make the money received by the mortgage "become due" and limitation began to run therefrom : Held (by the Judicial Committee):

"That in the circumstances of the case, it was unnecessary to decide the point. The decision of the High Court raised a question of grave importance and it was desirable so soon as might be, the Board must finally pronounce whether the principle of those decisions was right, or, even, if it was, whether it had any application to provisos such as that in the suit."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:

"there has been in different High Courts of India a sharp conflict of judicial opinion."

The suit was brought by the appellants as mortgagees to recover a sum of Rs. 34,000 alleged to be due as principal and interest on a mortgage dated 21st February 1893. The principal sum received was Rs. 4,000 with interest at 10 per cent. and provision was made in the deed for repayment of principal and interest at the rate of Rs. 500 per year. There was a further proviso that in the event of default in the payment of Rs. 500 per annum, the mortgagee should be entitled without waiting for expiry of the stipulated period to institute proceedings to realize his security. The plaint was filed on 21st February 1917 and alleged that the cause of action accrued on 21st February 1905. On presentation it was rejected as being barred by limitation and was accordingly amended by a statement that the cause of action accrued on 21st February 1894 and other dates including 10th April 1906 when interest was paid. Their Lordships observe:

"further the allegation now is that the suit which would otherwise have been out of time is exempted from limitation only by the payment of interest specified. That henceforth was the plaintiffs' case, and it would have succeeded if these payments had been proved. But the plaintiffs' attempt to prove them, as has been stated, entirely failed . . . . Having made a finding of fact in the same sense the trial Judge by his judgment of 31st May 1918, dismissed the suit with costs. That was, their Lordships think, his proper course. No other issue was, or is, on the pleadings open to the plaintiffs and their conduct in this matter is not such as to entitle them to claim any more than strict treatment. On their chosen issue they fought: to that issue they directed evidence which was not believed: on it, they therefore failed. And by that failure they must abide."

In the present case, as I have already said, the plaintiff recited in the plaint that the cause of action arose on the date of first default, i. e., Aswin 1325 and that the limitation was saved by payments of interest on subsequent dates.

Plaintiff failed to prove those payments. I don't think the plaintiff can now be allowed to set up her plea of waiver. The ruling reported in Maung Sin v. Ma Tok (7) does not seem to have considered the point in question. It depended upon the construction of a decree. There does not seem to have been any proviso in the decree that in default of payment of any one instalment the entire amount would be recoverable at once. The terms of a decree passed in 1916 were that certain lands were to be left in possession of the appellant who was to pay the respondent Rs. 2,000 annually and in default of payment the said property would be made over to the latter. In 1924, the respondent claimed execution of the decree of the instalments of 1923 and 1924 and as the appellant failed to pay, she prayed for the delivery of the lands to her. It was contended that the claims were time barred inasmuch as no payments had been made since the decree and the right to the possession of the land had never been asserted: Held, that the proper construction of the decree was that each instalment as it became due, gave rise to a fresh claim to the money or to the lands in the alternative and as such no question of limitation arose by reason of the provisions of Cl. 7, Art. 182, Lim. Act.

After consideration of all the circumstances in the case we are of opinion that the suit is barred by limitation.

So the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Mukerji, J.—I agree and desire to add a few words.

The bond in the present suit is a simple instalment bond providing for the payment of Rs. 950 in six specified instalments and stating that in default of payment of any of the instalments interest would be payable thereon at the rate of one per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. There is another stipulation in the bond which runs in these words:

"Be it noted that in default to pay any one instalment, you will be entitled to recover from me the entire amount of principal and interest at the same time by a suit."

In the absence of a stipulation of this character the cause of action in respect of each instalment in default would arise on the date of the default. That is

(7) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 146=5 Rang. 422=54 I. A. 272, (P.C.).

Art. 74. Lim. Act, Sch. 1. If the stipulation in question be read as meaning that if default be made in the payment of one or more instalments, the whole amount shall be due. Art. 75, Lim. Act, Sch. 1 will apply and limitation will run from the default unless there has been waiver. The stipulation in question may, favourably to the creditor, be regarded as giving him an option to treat the whole amount as due on the date of the first default. A long series of decisions of this Court have laid it down that where there is an optional right given to enforce payment of money, such right may be waived, but when it is not waived, or when there is nothing to show that it has been waived, limitation would run from the date when the right accrues. These decisions have engrafted into the Act the principle of Hemp v. Garland (8), in which Lord Denman, C. J. observed that:

"if the plaintiff chose to wait until all the instalments became due no doubt he might do so, but that which was optional upon plaintiff's part would not affect the right of the defendant, who might well consider the action as accruing from the time when the plaintiff had the right to maintain it."

The principle of Hemp v. Garland (8) was adopted in this country so far back as during the days of Act. 14 of 1859: see the Full Bench case of Hurronath Roy v. Maheroollah Moolla (9). While Act 14 of 1859 was in force there was no distinct statutory provision applicable to an instalment bond with a stipulation that on default of payment of any one instalment, the whole debt shall be due. The reported decisions during that period ranged themselves under two heads: viz., those which threw out the claim of the obligee altogether on the ground of limitation, and those which left him to avail himself of the benefit of the doctrine of waiver. The legislature in enacting Art. 75 in Sch. 2. Lim. Acts 9 of 1871 and 15 of 1877 effected a sort of a compromise.

My learned brother has discussed some of the cases under the Limitation Acts of 1871-1908 and I do not propose to deal with them over again. I shall point out only a few of them which may be looked upon as land marks indicating certain definite stages in the course of the decisions.

In the case of Hurronath Roy v. Maheroolla Moolla (9) passed when Act 14 of 1859 was in force a Full Bench of this Court acting on the principle of Hemp v. Garland (8), which though it was not expressly mentioned in the judgment of this Court was cited in the order of reference, held that limitation ran from the time when default was made in the payment of the first instalment in consequence of which the whole amount became due.

In the cases of Nilmadhab Chakravarti v. Ramsodoy Ghose (10) and Chunder Kamal Das v. Bisassurree Dassia (11) the question of limitation arose in connexion with instalment decrees which gave liberty to the decreeholder to realize the whole decree in default of payment of any one of the instalments, and it was held that the option merely enlarges the power of the decreeholder to proceed, should he so desire to realise the whole amount due on the occurrence of default in payment of one of the instalments and that by his not having exercised the election he had simply waived his right to execute the whole decree then and there, but that he was entitled to realize the instalments still due and not barred by limitation.

The view propounded in the last two cases were considered in the case of Mon Mohan Roy v. Durga Charan Gooee (12) as being opposed to and irreconcilable with the current of decisions on the subject. In the case, which related to an instalment decree, Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ., thus recapitulated the law on the subject:

"First, it is a general rule that where a decree or order makes a sum of money payable by instalments on certain date, and provides that on default of payment of one of the instalments, the whole of the money shall then become due and payable and be recoverable under execution then under Art. 179, Lim. Act, 15 of 1877 and under corresponding articles in earlier Acts, limitation commences to run when the first default is made. . . . There has, however, been engrafted upon that general rule an exception in certain cases. That exception I understand to be this that if the right to enforce payment of the whole sum due upon default being made in the payment of an instalment has been waived, by subsequent payment of the overdue instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other, then the penalty having been waived, the parties are remitted to the same position as they would have been if no default had occurred."

A current of decisions followed on the same line. Most of them have been discussed in detail in a comparatively recent judgment of this Court in the case of Girindra Mohan Roy v. Khir Narayan Das (3) and no useful purpose would be served by referring to them individually. One case, however, needs special mention, namely, the case of Mohesh Chandra Banerji v. Prosanna Lal (13) in which an instalment bond gave the creditor the right to sue for the whole amount due on default of payment of a single instalment and upon a consideration of the more important previous decisions of all the Courts it was held that there was no waiver of that right by acceptance of part of an overdue instalment or by receipt of interest.

The only other case that requires mention is that of Surendra Nath v. Reshee Case Law (14) in which it was said that most of the decisions of the point relate to cases coming under Art. 75, Lim. Act, which provides for waiver of default in payment of instalments, or to cases relating to instalment decrees to which the principle had been applied, and then, after referring to the cases of Juggut Mohini v. Monohar Koonwar (15) and Sitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Molla (1) in which the point indirectly arose, it was said:

"Article 132, Lim. Act, does not provide for cases of waiver, and there is no case directly deciding that the principle of waiver would apply to mortgage bonds payable by instalments. . . . We think that in the absence of any provision in Art. 132 with respect to cases of waiver and of any direct authority on the point, we may apply the principle indicated in Art. 75 in determining when the money sued for becomes due within the meaning of Art. 132."

Some doubt has been cast upon the correctness of this trend of decisions by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pancham v. Ansar Husain (6). My learned brother has elaborately dealt with this case in his judgment and I do not propose to do so over again. All I desire to say is that their Lordships' words have to be taken in the light of the facts of the case before them, and should be read in conjunction with the reservation they expressly made refraining to express any opinion on the question. It is, in my opinion, too early at the present moment to say that their Lordships have definitely pronounced the view of this Court as unsound. It should be noted that in the two cases that their Lordships dealt with specifically in their judgment the bonds were of a very different character. The bond in the case of Shib Dayal v. Meherban (16) as appears from the report of the case, provided that:

"the money with interest at the rate of eight annas per cent. per month was repayable within a period of 12 years and would carry interest from year to year, that in case of interest not being paid from year to year the creditor would have the option to add the interest due to the principal and charge interest thereon at that rate and would be able to recover the amount within the stipulated period, and that in case of non-payment the creditor shall have the power to recover the money, principal, interest and compound interest from the debtor, the mortgaged property or from his other moveable or immovable property. It further stipulated that if the debtor was not able to pay the money within the stipulated period, and with the consent of the creditor the money remained unpaid, the interest and compound interest would continue to run at the stipulated rate until the date of realization."

The bond in the case of Gyadin v. Jhumman Lal (17) contained a stipulation that:

"If the mortgagee, in order to get interest, does not bring a suit in default of payment of any instalment, and the debtor be unable to pay, the interest should continue up to the stipulated period of ten years and also up to the date of realization."

On the question of waiver I entirely agree with my learned brother that mere abstinence to sue on the part of the plaintiff and the mere fact that she slept over her rights would not constitute waiver, and further that it was never her case that she had waived the stipulation, but on the other hand she relied upon it and falsely tried to get over the bar of limitation.

Sarat Chandra Basak and Gopendra Nath Das—for Appellants.Braja Lal Chakravarti and Saroj Kumar Maity—for Respondents.Mallik, J.—The facts of the case which has given rise to this appeal are briefly these :

One Kashi Nath was the owner of some property. He died leaving three sons, defendants 1 and 2 and Trailakhya, the husband of the plaintiff. Trailakhya died when the plaintiff was a little girl of 14. And after Trailakhya's death and after defendants 1 and 2 had separated in mess, plaintiff began residing for most of her time at her father's house and would occasionally come to live in the house of her father-in-law. While in her father-in-law's house, she was well cared for by her brothers-in-law and maintained out of the usufruct of the ejmali property and while residing at her father's place, she was given at times some profits by defendants 1 and 2 for her necessary expenses, and she used to be given also according to the direction of defendants 1 and 2 some profits from the bhagchasis of some properties other than those in suit. Plaintiff continued to be in possession of the ejmali property in that manner until 1329 B. S., when defendants 1 and 2 began to ill-treat her and when she with her father's help attempted to possess separately the 1/3 share in the property, the defendants dispossessed her in Jaistha 1330 by refusing to allow plaintiff's father to possess the same and denying the plaintiff's title. Thereafter the plaintiff gradually came to know that defendants 1 and 2 had executed kabalas in favour of defendants 3 to 14 in respect of the property in suit. On these facts, the plaintiff who is a pardanashin Hindu lady, brought the suit for a declaration of her title to a third share in the property and for joint possession of the same.

The defence inter alia was, that the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 were completely separate in 1313, that in 1313, plaintiff surrendered the property allotted to her to defendants 1 and 2 but taking advantage of the absence of a deed of surrender, she again claimed her share in 1315 but was driven out by defendants 1 and 2. The plea of limitation was another point raised by the defence. This defence, however, was negatived by both the Courts below and both the Courts below holding that the plaintiff's suit was in time, gave her a decree. Defendants 3 to 11 have appealed to this Court.

The only point in controversy before us has been on the question of limitation. Dr. Basak for the appellant contended that as the plaintiff had come to Court with a story of possession and subsequent dispossession Art. 142, Lim. Act, was the article applicable to the case and the lower Courts were wrong when they held that it was not applicable. I do not think this contention is sound. Plaintiff no doubt, in her plaint, used the word "dispossession (Bedakhal), but her story was not a story of dispossession of the kind as is contemplated in Art. 142. Dispossession contemplated in Art. 142 refers to actual physical dispossession and there is no dispossession under that article until some one else takes possession. Dispossession is, when a person comes in and drives out of the other from possession. In the present case, as would appear from the facts of the case set out before, the only dispossession alleged by the plaintiff was in the way that the plaintiff's father was resisted in his attempts to possess separately the 1/3rd share of the plaintiff in the property. This dispossession, if it was any dispossession at all, was not, in my judgment, such dispossession as is contemplated by Art. 142. I am, therefore, of opinion, that Art. 142, Lim. Act, was not the article applicable to the present case.

If Art. 142 does not apply to the present case—and I have held that it does not apply—the claim of the plaintiff who was undeniably the 1/3rd cosharer of the property to have a declaration of her title to that extent and to have joint possession of the same could be defeated only if the defendants had succeeded in establishing their adverse possession for 12 years. But here in the defendants, in my opinion, were wholly unsuccessful. There was no assertion by them of any hostile title to the plaintiff and the only thing that there is on the point in the case is, that defendants 1 and 2, plaintiff's cosharers, through whom the plaintiff had been getting her share of the property, began to ill-treat her in 1329 and the attempt of her father to possess separately the plaintiff's 13/rd share in the property was resisted by the defendants in Jaistha 1330. Dr. Basak for the appellant contended that the mere fact that defendants 3 to 14 had entered upon the property and was in possession of the same, was an assertion of hostile title. But such entry upon land, in order to be an assertion of hostile title, must be an entry as an owner. In the present case, there is in the first place, nothing to show that the plaintiff was, until a recent date, even aware of the entry of defendants 3 to 14 upon the land and even when the plaintiff came to know that defendants 3 to 14 were holding the land, it was quite possible, for all that we know, that she took them to be only bhagchasis under her cosharers defendants 1 and 2. I would therefore hold that there was no such adverse possession by the defendants in the present case as could defeat the lawful claim of the plaintiff to a declaration of her 1/3rd share in the property in the suit and to joint possession of the same.

The lower appellate Court, in my judgment, was in these circumstances, right in giving a decree to the plaintiff.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The cross-objection which is not pressed is also dismissed but without costs.

Sailendra Mohan Das—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case ten persons were put upon their trial in connexion with a riot of a familiar type. The complainant Nidon Nath makes the case that on 6th November, 1927, he and certain relations went to cut paddy from plot 273 when the accused armed with lathis (except Mahatab who had a pointed mooli and accused 1 Tota Meah Chowdhury who was carrying a stick) came and objected to the cutting of the paddy. The case is that after the accused Yakub had seized the sickle from Nidon and Moizuddin had seized the sickle from another person of the complainant's party they began beating Nidon; that one Pachikul Huq or Pachu came up and reproved the accused; whereupon Tota Meah Chowdhury, accused 1, who was coming up from the rear ordered his son Mahatab, accused 2, to kill Pachu; and that thereupon Mahatab drove the mooli he held into the stomach of Pachu near the navel, in consequence of which injury the man afterwards died.

It appears that there had been litigation between the complainant and Tota Meah about this plot and it appears also that when Pachu had been taken away to a certain house and then taken thence to a hospital, at about 6-45 on the following morning he made a dying declaration. He made another a little later on at about 8 o'clock. At the same time Nidon and one Kholu went to the thana and lodged a complaint, and a cross-complaint by one Jamiruddi was lodged against the party of the complainant.

The defence case is that there was an occurrence, that the occurrence was on a different field altogether and, in particular that the man Pachu died, not because accused 2 or accused 1 had anything to do with the matter—the defence case is that they were not there—but because another of the accused, namely, Moizuddin, accused 4, had a pointed bamboo and on this being used against him he picked it up and threw it as a missile; that Moizuddin does not know what the result of this missile was but thinks no doubt, that is the way in which Pachu met his death.

That is in the simplest terms the case of either side.

The learned Judge has devoted a good deal of labour and time to a description of the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence. He has gone through the documentary and oral evidence and has endeavoured as best as he could to put the case of either side forcibly and clearly to the jury and we have in this appeal been invited to interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury because of some nine objections which have been very ably urged by Mr. Fazlul Huq on behalf of the appellants. I propose quite shortly to go through each of those objections and to state my view upon them.

I should have mentioned that the jury found accused 1 guilty in respect of Pachu's injury under S. 326 read with S. 109. They found Mahatab guilty under Part 1 of S. 304. These accused 1 and the remaining accused have all been found guilty under S. 147.

The first objection is to the joinder of the charges in the present case. It is said that it was wrong in this case to charge the first accused alternatively under S. 155, I. P. C. It is not here disputed that if the man had been tried by himself the additional charge under S. 155 would have been within S. 236, Criminal P. C., but it is said that if these persons were all being tried together the section which has to be regarded is S. 239 and that under S. 239 there is no provision made by which accused 1 in addition to being charged with rioting and other charges arising out of the riot could be charged in the alternative under S. 155. I cannot see that there is any necessity to read Ss. 239 and 236, in such a way as to produce that result. In this particular case accused 1 has not been convicted under S. 155. The question, therefore, is a pure question whether the trial is vitiated by the joinder in the alternative of the charge under S. 155, and I must flatly refuse to lay it down that where accused persons are being tried together under S. 239 it is not possible to have an alternative charge against one of those accused persons. I see no necessity whatever to read this section in that manner. S. 236 deals with the question of what charges a single person may be made to meet and it says that in certain cases where it is doubtful which offence he has committed you may charge him with all and you may charge him also in the alternative. The object of S. 239, is not to say what charges a man may be called upon to meet but to say what persons may be charged and tried together. I see no difficulty at all in that matter.

Again, it is said that a charge under Ss. 147 and 304 I. P. C., against accused 1 could not be brought under S. 236 or 239, Criminal P. C. The ground of this objection is that the charge under S. 304, according to the charge of the learned Judge, might be independent altogether of the charge under S. 147, because although the prosecution case was that this injury on Pachu arose at the end of the riot and out of the riot still the learned Judge pointed out to the jury that it was possible for them to take the view that the riot had entirely finished and that this killing was after the riot was over. It seems to me that in a case of this character it is quite right that these these charges should go to the jury in the same trial. It is entirely for the jury to say whether they were out of the riot and incidents of the riot or whether one followed upon the other, and I cannot agree that there is any difficulty in theory any more than in practice in the course which has been adopted during this trial.

As regards the second objection, that has reference to what is called a naraji petition or petition of objection to a police report to the effect that Jamiruddin's complaint was a false complaint. What is said is that this naraji petition is relied upon a good deal by the learned Judge in his charge to the jury because it is a story told on the part of the accused and in various respects the defence set up in the present trial is not exactly what was set up in that petition. The objection is that this petition was not properly proved. The witness was witness 9 who was a mukhtear. He said:

"I was the mukhtear for the accused in the lower Court in this case. Jamiruddin filed a counter case to this. After police investigation a naraji petition was filed. This naraji was written by the mohurrir of Babu Bangal Ch. Sen."

and the writing of the mohurrir was identified by the witness. The witness continued:

"The petition was written and read over to the accused."

In cross-examination he said:

"The petition was not written in my presence. One of the accused, I do not remember which, handed it to me."

and it is said that because of this it is not sufficiently proved that this naraji petition in the counter-case emanated from the parties in the dock. It seems to me that if it was going to be maintained that this naraji petition which was said to have been written and read over to the accused was not a petition of the parties in the dock that suggestion should have been carried much further in the cross-examination than it was; and I am not of opinion that there is any reason why this petition should not be used by the learned Judge in the way it was used.

The third objection has reference to the way in which certain dying declarations were spoken to by witnesses 7 and 8 for the prosecution; but this objection has not been pressed and it is not necessary to go into that matter.

Then comes what is the most difficult of the points which have not been raised on behalf of the appellants. P. W. 20, the Sub-Inspector of Police, gave evidence in chief and he gave his evidence about the arrest of Tota Meah and how the other eight accused appeared in Court after service of certain process. He then said this:

"During investigation I met Tota Meah several times and he was looking after the case of Jamiruddin during the time that he was released on bail. Tota Meah did not say to me that Moizuddin gave the fatal blow and not Mahatab. I got no such story at all during investigation."

The objection taken to the admissibility of this evidence is that it offends against S. 162, Criminal P. C. So far as the statement about Tota Meah is concerned, it is the law of this Court that S. 162 is not intended to apply to statements made by accused persons themselves. I was a party to one decision in which that was laid down, and on that footing it does not seem to me that any objection can arise out of S. 162 so far as regards Tota Meah. There remains the simple sentence "I got no such story at all during investigation." Now, so far as any of the accused is concerned the same reasoning will apply as applies to Tota Meah's case; but it may be said that this general statement that no such story at all was obtained during investigation has inferentially reference to any statements made to the police by persons other than the accused in the course of the investigation commenced upon Jamiruddin's complaint a complaint—which really had reference to the same occurrence as the present case refers to. S. 162 is always difficult to apply, but it does seem to me that it would be going beyond the immediate intention of S. 162 to lay down that a police officer in charge of an investigation was not to be at liberty to explain his conduct by making such a statement as this that:

"at the time I did so and so I had received no information to such and such an effect."

If that were to be laid down on the ground that inferentially it has reference to the statement of a witness before the police I think not only would S. 162 in its intention be much exceeded but it would be practically impossible to do justice at all. In the present case the position was that at the Sessions trial evidence was led for the defence in rather peculiar circumstances to show that the death of Pachu was due to the act, not of accused 2, but of accused 4; and in these circumstances naturally the investigating officer would want to explain why a charge was not brought against accused 4 as well as against accused 2. He would want it to be made clear that so far as he was concerned he was doing his ordinary duty properly and without bias against one of the accused rather than another. Again, the fact that this defence was put forward late is a fact which appears on the record itself, and it appears to me that it would be a legitimate comment upon a defence of this character to point out that the first time that it was heard of was at the last stage.

I have considered carefully the question whether assuming for the sake of argument that some of these witnesses may have stated to the police that the blow was caused by Moizuddin, the defence were prejudiced in the sense that they had no means of bringing that fact out. What is put to us is that after this statement by the Sub-Inspector the defence would not care to call any person as a witness who had stated to the police that the blow was given by Moizuddin. Let us consider that because if that can be made out no doubt it would be a matter which would require very great consideration. If it is true that the defence had witnesses who had stated this to the police why should not the defence have called such witnesses? If they called such witnesses and if the prosecution were minded to set up against them that they had not told this to the police, it would have been the duty of the defence to cross-examine this particular police officer when he was giving his evidence. Nothing can be more clear than that the police officer, having given such evidence as that, would have been subject to cross-examination by having it put to him straightaway that it was not true that he got no such information, and if anybody then had endeavoured to use S. 162 to hamper the defence it would clearly have turned out that either the position was that S. 162 prohibits the Court from letting the evidence be given in chief or else it permits the Court to allow the question to be put in cross-examination. I am not satisfied that there has been any miscarriage of justice in this matter.

The fifth objection is to certain passages in the charge where the learned Judge is endeavouring to state forcibly and reasonably the case for the prosecution. The objection is that the learned Judge describing the prosecution case referred to Tota Meah being a person who was steeped in litigation from his youth and always getting into squabbles of a land-grabbing character. That really is the point of the remark. In this case it seems to me to be quite legitimate. Nobody is saying that because Tota Meah was given to having disputes about lands the jury are to assume that he was coming on this land armed with a lathi and that therefore he would likely be guilty of this particular offence. What the learned Judge was dealing with and what the prosecution case was dealing with was the question as to the probability whether one plot of land or the other plot of land was the subject-matter of dispute, and in the course of that question we have to consider what the parties were doing. Various section 145 cases and so on come into question. I am not at all satisfied that because the learned Judge said that the prosecution case was that this was a man who was having squabbles about land that would in any way mislead the jury for the purpose in question.

In the same way comment is made that the learned Judge says that there is nothing in the evidence that directly points to any connexion being possible between the statement made by the deceased in the dying declaration and the statement made in the first information report which was lodged by Nidon and another at the thana, but the objection there I think depends entirely on taking the learned Judge's words too much at the foot of the letter. It is said that if you look into the evidence you will find that one man if not two were with the deceased at the time he received the injury and heard his version of what had happened. It is said that Nidon had had an opportunity of meeting this man and that therefore it is not impossible that the deceased with a sharpened bamboo run into his stomach had by means of these other people done something to induce Nidon and his companions to tell the same story at the thana that he had been telling about the matter. What the learned Judge says is that there is nothing in the evidence which directly points to any connexion between those two things being possible. Of course anything is possible in the widest sense of the words.

What the learned Judge really means is—there is no substance in the evidence directly pointing to that event. It does not mean merely that there is no evidence that the two things are in some way connected; what he says is that he does not see anything in the evidence which gives a basis for suspicion of any such connexion. I do not think that any jury would be misled by those remarks by the learned Judge, particularly in a case which was thoroughly well fought out.

Then again, in the charge the learned Judge has in two places enlarged upon the fact that in the counter-information there is no story to the effect that at the end accused 4 Moizuddin picked up the bamboo and threw it and, that in that way Pachu was killed. In the course of his charge he says that not only is that not in the counter-information but Pachu's name is not there mentioned at all. As far as Pachu's name is concerned, it appears that in an altered form it was there. The substance of what the learned Judge is saying is that the story told by the defence is not to be found in the counter information at all. Very natural mistakes about these names which are frequently spelled differently seem to me to be entirely innocuous.

In the same way I cannot discover that there is any objection in the passage in the charge where the learned Judge says that his view or rather that a very possible view in his opinion is that the prosecution story is weak because it has not got a satisfactory ending and the defence story is weak because it has not got a satisfactory beginning. By this he means that it is difficult to make out from the defence version exactly how these parties were supposed to be facing each other according to the defence in filed No. 417. Our attention has been called to the evidence of the third witness for the defence and the statements made by Yakub under S. 342, Criminal P. C. and I am bound to say that having read those statements it still seems to me to be a reasonable criticism which the learned Judge left to the jury. I would point out that the learned Judge most carefully expressed himself while putting the matter before the jury. I see no objection to it.

We then come to the question whether or not the charge of abetment of culpable homicide against Tota Meah was properly left to the jury. As a matter of fact, the jury have carefully considered this question because we know, that they brought in a verdict of guilty against Tota Meah under S. 326 read with S. 109; and objection is taken to one passage in which the learned Judge says: "The order, if you believe it, was to kill Pachu," and it is said that whereas some witnesses say that Tota Meah shouted to his son "kill the sala" other witnesses say "beat." The very expression objected to contains the caution by the learned Judge "if you believe it," and it is said that if the learned Judge had been more elaborate and had pointed out that the word "beat" was a possible translation of the vernacular word as used by some witnesses, it is possible that the jury, if they convicted at all, would have convicted under S. 324 read with S. 109. Having regard to the facts of this case and the character of the case which the jury have unanimously believed I do not think that there was any cause for the learned Judge to have been more elaborate than he was.

The jury carefully considered this question. They had the evidence before them and they have come to the conclusion that at the time the intention of Tota Meah was such as to justify a conviction under S. 326, I. P. C. In my judgment, while this case requires a good deal of anxious consideration, the charge to the jury was extremely careful, laborious and able and the jury have been unanimous, and it appears to me that this appeal must be dismissed.

The appellants who are on bail must surrender to their bail-bonds and serve out the remaining portion of the sentences imposed on them and appellant 1 will now pay the fine.

Criminal Revn. No. 835 of 1928, Decided on 10th September 1928.

Arms Act (2 of 1878), S. 19 (f)—Before entering house to be searched police seeing some men throwing something from their persons — Police discovering cartridges under Chowki on which accused sat conversing with others—Charge against them resting on suspicion—Their possession or knowledge not proved—They cannot be convicted under S. 19 (f).

Before the police entered the house which was to be searched, certain persons inside were seen throwing down something from their person, and on a search being made certain cartridges were discovered under the Chowki on which the accused were sitting conversing with others. The cartridges were not proved to be in their possession, nor was it proved that they knew that they were there.

Held: that the charge against them rested on suspicion and their guilt not being proved they cannot be convicted under S. 19 (f).

Narendra Kumar Basu and Nasim Ali—for Petitioners.

Judgment.—In this case the four petitioners have been convicted under S. 19 (f) of Act 11 of 1878 and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months each.

The prosecution case is that, acting on certain information, some police officers under a Sub-Inspector and an Assistant Sub-Inspector raided a house in village Sailakandi, P. S. Muradnagar and recovered, among other things, 15 cartridges from under a chowki on which the petitioners were sitting conversing together with two people who lived in the house and were also convicted in the case but whose case is not before us on revision. They were Chand Miah and Keramat Ali, the two sons of the owner of the house. Two of the petitioners are Hindus and two are Mahomedans. When the police officers knocked at the door Keramat Ali came out of the door and through the open door the Sub-Inspector saw those who were standing in the room throwing down something from their person. Subsequently, on a search of the house, these 15 cartridges were found in a parcel in a box under the chowki.

The petitioners have been convicted on the finding that they were in possession of these cartridges. The petitioners from the very first explained that they were residents of Comilla which is about 20 miles from the village in which the house of the other persons is situated and they explained that they had come there in order to attend a musical party in the village.

The only reason to suspect the petitioners if the knowledge of these cartridges is the fact that they threw down something from their person just before the search took place, but the case against them rests merely on suspicion. There is no proof that they were in possession of these cartridges or that they knew about the existence of these cartridges. These cartridges may not have been placed there by them. There is no evidence that they even knew of their existence and there was nothing incriminating in the articles which were found on the floor.

In these circumstances, we do not think that the evidence is sufficient to bring home their guilt against the petitioners and, therefore, the conviction and the sentences passed on them must be set aside and they will be acquitted. The petitioners, if they are on bail, will be discharged from their bail-bonds.

Bengal Tenancy Act, Ss. 52 (b) and 179—Under contract of tenancy, tenant agreeing that rent fixed by contract shall not be more or less at any time or on any account—Land diluviating — Contract precludes tenant from claiming abatement of rent.

Unless the terms of the contract of the tenancy are so clear that it is manifest that the parties intended to exclude the operation of S. 52, the tenant ought not to be excluded from the statutory right given him under the section.

tained in a patta and in a counter-part kabuliat. The claim is for arrears of rent from 1327 to 1320 B. S. at the annual rent fixed in the kabuliat, viz., Rs. 176-8-15. The defence was that the tenant was entitled to a diminution in the amount of rent on account of diluvion and claimed the benefit of S. 52 (B), Ben Ten. Act. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relied upon S. 179 of the Act which runs as follows :

" Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent a proprietor or a holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area from granting a mourashi lease on any terms agreed on between him and his tenant."

He urges that under the terms of the contract of the tenancy the tenant agreed to pay as rent for the lands demised a sum of Rs. 176-8-15 per year in any event. Now, the tenant is entitled to the benefit of S. 52 unless he has contracted to the contrary. In my opinion unless the terms of the contract in question are so clear that it is manifest that the parties intended to exclude the operation of S. 52 the tenant ought not to be excluded from the statutory right that is given him under that section. In each case the question turns upon the true construction of the terms of the contract of tenancy. In the present case a selami of Rs. 300 was paid by the tenant and in consideration of the selami and the rent, it is stated that :

"the landlords have settled with us the land described within the boundaries given in Sch. Ka below in kayemi dar mourashi right fixing the yearly jama at Rs. 176-8-15 and we of our free will do execute this kabuliat on the following conditions :—

(1) For the aforesaid lands in Sch. Ka we shall pay Rs. 176-8-15 as rent. The amount of rent shall not be more or less at any time on any account.

(4) If at the time of the measurement any land in excess of those in Sch. Ka be found to be in our possession then we shall give up the said land to you without any objection.

(5) If any portion of the lands of this jama be acquired by Government, or District Board or Union Committee or by any Company then you and we shall get compensation according to law. For this we shall not be able to get any abatement of the rent fixed.

It is upon a consideration of those provisions in the contract that the issue of this appeal depends. For the tenant it is urged that special stress is laid in the contract upon the quantum of the land demised and the area for which the fixed rent is payable. Dr. Pal has urged us to read the first clause as though the fixed rent was in respect of the whole of the area mentioned in Sch. Ka; but if any portion of the area ceased to be rent paying there should be a proportionate abatement. I am unable to accede to that contention. To my mind the language in which Cl. (1) is couched is too strong for the tenants, and I can see no escape from the conclusion that the parties contracted that in respect of this tenure there should be paid a fixed rent of Rs. 176-8-15 and that the amount of rent fixed should not be altered at any time or on any account. It may be that the contract so construed may work (as circumstances may arise) in favour either of the landlord or of the tenant. In the present case the tenant has proved to the satisfaction of the Court of appeal below that a large proportion of the lands mentioned in Sch. Ka have become diluviated and it is pointed out that in the circumstances disaster may befall the tenant if he is called upon to fulfil the terms of Cl. (1). Sitting in this place, however, we have to administer the law as we find it, and construe a contract such as this according to the plain meaning of the terms into which the parties have entered. In my opinion, it is clear upon a true construction of this contract that the defence based upon S. 52 was not open to the tenant in the suit brought for rent by the plaintiff.

The result is that the decree of the Court of appeal below must be set aside, and a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff for arrears of rent for four years i. e., from 1327 to 1330 B. S., at the contract rate of Rs. 176-8-15 with costs in all Courts.

The condition in a usufructuary mortgage was that the mortgagee was to take the profits in lieu of interest which was fixed. Mortgagee obtained possession of part of the property for two years when a purchaser from the mortgagor obtained possession. The purchaser deposited the principal money in Court, the mortgagee having refused to accept it alleging that he was entitled to interest. In a suit for sale by the mortgagee,

Held : that though a deposit in Court is not valid to stop interest when it does not fully satisfy the mortgage debt, still the deposit by the purchaser who could not have known whether any interest was due was a valid deposit and interest ceased to run from the date of deposit. [P 306 C 1]

Radha Binode Pal and Jitendra Mohan Banerji—for Appellant.

Bansori Lal Sircar—for Respondents.

Garlick, J.—The facts found by the lower appellate Court are these :

On 1st Jaistha 1325 defendant 1 borrowed Rs. 300 from the plaintiff and executed an usufructuary mortgage bond of some 28 bighas of land, stipulating that the plaintiff should possess the land in lieu of interest and should return it on repayment of the principal. The bond also contained an agreement that if the mortgagee failed to get possession, he should be entitled to realize his dues, after deducting receipts by a suit for sale of the property, and that interest should be calculated at Rs. 112-8-0 per annum. In pursuance of the agreement the plaintiff was put in possession of 13 bighas of land, but not of the whole mortgaged property. On 15th Kartik 1326 defendant 1 sold the whole property to defendant 2. The purchaser took possession of 13 bighas of land after plaintiff had been in possession for two years. He tendered the principal money Rs. 300 to the plaintiff, but plaintiff refused it because he claimed interest in lieu of the usufruct of 15 bighas of land. So the Rs. 300 was deposited in Court. There were some negotiations with a view to compromise, but eventually the plaintiff filed this suit claiming Rs. 800 in all after deducting Rs. 100 for two years' possession of 13 bighas. And the lower Courts have decreed that sum and have ordered it to be realized by sale of the property.

The grounds urged in the appeal by defendant 2 are: first that the deposit of the principal money was a valid deposit under S. 62, and interest ceased to run from the date of deposit, as S. 84, T. P. Act, shows ; second, that as the plaintiff was in possession of some of the land he is bound to account for his receipts from it under S. 76, T. P. Act ; third, that an usufructuary mortgagee cannot get a decree for sale. S. 67, T. P. Act, prevents it.

The last point is clearly untenable. An usufructuary mortgagee cannot as such sue for sale. But he can do so if the bond allows him to do so, as it does in this case.

As to the first point, in a usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor has a right to recover possession under S. 62 on payment or tender or deposit of the principal money. But defendant 2 did in fact recover possession at about the time of the deposit. Under S. 84, interest ceases to run when the amount due is tendered or deposited. But the amount due in this case was not merely the principal money. The plaintiff was entitled to interest for two years at Rs. 112-8-0 per annum, minus the interest realized by his possession of 13 bighas of land. If any interest remained due, the deposit of Rs. 300 was not a valid deposit and did not prevent interest from running.

As to the second point, the lower Court has calculated that as the bond stipulated for Rs. 112-8-0 interest per annum if possession of 28 bighas 15 cattas was not delivered, therefore the value of the usufruct of 13 bighas for a year would be about Rs. 50 and that as the plaintiff has deducted Rs. 100 for his two years' possession of 13 bighas, there is no necessity to take any account. The appellant claims an account of the profits of 13 bighas for those two years. Under S. 76 a mortgagee in possession must keep and give accounts. But S. 77 lays that S. 76 shall not apply when the contract is that the mortgagee in possession shall take the receipts in lieu of interest.

In my opinion it is not right to allow the plaintiff to apportion the interest and deduct 50 per cent for possession of 13 bighas of land, for those 13 bighas may have been the most valuable portion of the mortgaged land and may have given the plaintiff a profit of far more than 50 per cent a year. It is quite possible that the plaintiff realized the full interest of Rs. 112-8-0 from those 13 bighas alone. If the plaintiff had been put in possession of the whole mortgaged property, he would have been entitled to all the profits, even if they had far exceeded Rs. 112-8-0. But when the contract to deliver possession was broken, the plaintiffs' right by the terms of the bond was only to receive Rs. 112-8-0 a year as interest. Therefore he was bound to account for the profits he received for his possession of 13 bighas and to deduct his actual profits from the interest due for each year. Until he did this, it was impossible for defendant 2, who was not the mortgagor but a recent purchaser, to know whether any interest was due on the loan.

In my opinion therefore the deposit of Rs. 300 was a valid deposit, and interest ceased to run from the date of the deposit. The plaintiff is entitled to withdraw Rs. 300 and to be paid the balance of interest due to him for the two years preceding the deposit after accounting exactly for the profits which he received in those years.

It is not, however, worthwhile to re-mand the case for taking an account of so petty a matter. The plaintiff deducted Rs. 100 on account of his profit for two years, and there is nothing to show that that sum is inadequate. He was entitled to Rs. 225 as the interest for those two years by the terms of the bond. The amount due to him as interest is therefore Rs. 125. He is also entitled to Rs. 300 in deposit.

The result is that the decree of the lower appellate Court is modified, and the suit is decreed for Rs. 425 (including Rs. 300 in deposit) instead of Rs. 800 with proportionate costs. If the money is not paid within 15 days from the date of the arrival of the record in the lower Court, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part of it will be sold. The appellant will get one-third of his costs in the appeal as the objection to the decree for sale fails.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued for a sum of money against defendant 1 and 2 or, in the alternative, against defendant 3. His allegation shortly stated was that defendants 1 and 2 advanced Rs. 4,000 to defendant 3 on a promissory note. Defendants 1 and 2 at the same time were negotiating for a usufructuary lease to be granted by defendant 3 of certain properties in favour of the plaintiff. Sometime after the money was advanced, defendants 1 and 2 along with defendant 3 came to the plaintiff's house at Asansol and defendants 1 and 2 took a loan of Rs. 4,000 from him with an agreement to pay interest at the rate of Re. 1-4 annas per cent per month and defendant 3 stood surety for the payment of the money. When the plaintiff asked for repayment of the loan from defendants 1 and 2, they made over the promissory note which defendant 3 gave to them with an endorsement that the money should be paid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff attempted to realize the money from defendant 3 but the latter did not pay and hence this suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the story of the plaintiff of his advancing any loan to defendants 1 and 2 at Asansol for which defendant 3 stood surety. The story as to defendant 3 standing surety is absurd on the face of it. Defendant 3 by all accounts was heavily involved in debts; while defendants 1 and 2 are prosperous contractors, and the Subordinate Judge has found that they are very substantial people. The plaintiff produced an account book which the Subordinate Judge has not believed and we cannot also place reliance on it for a single moment. It is a small book in which, it is said, accounts of several years are entered; no balance is struck and the plaintiff himself admits that it does not show that he had any cash in his hand on the date when he is alleged to have advanced the loan to defendants 1 and 2. On failure of the plaintiff to prove his case against defendants 1 and 2, his suit was bound to fail and as his learned advocate has not been able to satisfy us that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in disbelieving the story of the plaintiff having advanced any money to defendant 1 and 2 as loan, this appeal must fail as against those defendants.

With regard to the liability of defendant 3, the Subordinate Judge holds that the money was really advanced to defendant 3 by the plaintiff outside the jurisdiction of his Court. But at the plaintiff's request the promissory note was executed in favour of the defendants, or rather in favour of defendant 2, who is a brother of defendant 1 and is joint with him. The Subordinate Judge finds that when the negotiations about the usufructuary lease to be granted by defendant 3 to the plaintiff failed, defendant 1 as ammuhtear of defendant 2 made the endorsement on the promissory note for the money advanced by the plaintiff to defendant 3 and made it over to the plaintiff. Defendant 3, however, says that the plaintiff, has got no right to sue. On this statement the plaintiff's advocate here contends that defendants 1 and 2 were not his agents but really the agents of defendant 3 and as they received the money from the plaintiff which they paid over to defendant 3, they were personally liable for the money. It seems to be arguing in a circle. Defendants 1 and 2 never said that they advanced any loan to defendant 3 nor did they say that they had incurred any liability to the plaintiff for merely handing over the money as a conduit pipe to defendant 3, and it is impossible to see why defendants 1 and 2 should be made liable. Much stress was laid on the fact that there was an assignment by defendants 1 and 2 of the promissory note of defendant 3 in favour of the plaintiff and it was argued that upon that assignment defendants 1 and 2 made themselves personally liable to the plaintiff. As defendants 1 and 2 never professed to have any right to the promissory note on their own account as they never claimed to have advanced any money to defendant 3, the assignment was simply a declaration that instead of defendants 1 and 2 being the owners of the promissory note, it was the plaintiff who was the real person interested in recovering the money. Therefore, it can hardly be argued that by simply doing what was the right thing to do under the circumstances found by the Subordinate Judge in this case the defendants would be personally liable to the plaintiff.

As to the alternative claim against defendant 3, the Subordinate Judge has found that defendant 3 being a resident outside his jurisdiction and no part of cause of action having arisen within his jurisdiction, he could not pass any decree against defendant 3. It is argued that defendants 1 and 2 acted as agents of defendant 3, because they wrote a letter to the plaintiff and sent a telegram asking him to bring money as defendant 3 was pressing to enter into the transaction of the lease. It is urged that if defendants 1 and 2 were the agents of defendant 3, then a part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court below. The matter, however, stands thus. The plaintiff asked defendants 1 and 2 to secure a lease from defendant 3 as on previous occasions defendants 1 and 2 had secured leases for other persons of lands belonging to defendant 3 and, in pursuance of that request defendants 1 and 2 were acting in the matter. It can hardly be said that defendants 1 and 2 were acting as agents of defendant 3 in the matter of the loan. No part of the cause of action, therefore, arose within the jurisdiction of the Court below. An argument was advanced that, by reason, of the assignment, the plaintiff was entitled to sue in the Court at Asansol, because the assignment says that the money should be paid to the plaintiff at Asansol. No authority has been cited in support of the proposition that a creditor by an assignment to a person living at any other place can give the assignee the right to sue in any Court where the assignee resides and, in the absence of any such authority, it seems to us to be rather a startling proposition to accept. On all these grounds, the appeal is dismissed with costs to be recovered only by defendants 1 and 2. Defendant 3 will bear his own costs in this Court.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 106—Question of title.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title. The plaintiff's case was that he purchased the lands in suit from defendant 3 in August 1906, that in the kobala under which he purchased there was no mention of there having been any tenants on the land, that in the Settlement Record of the Khas Mehal finally published in 1910 the plaintiff was recorded as occupancy ryot in respect of the land, that subsequently in the Record-of-Rights finally published in 1918, the lands were recorded in the names of defendants 1 and 2 under defendant 3. The plaintiff alleged that he had instituted a suit under S. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, for correction of the entry in the Record-of-Rights but withdrew from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. He averred that he was dispossessed by the defendants in July 1922. The prayer for declaration of title was based on the purchase as also on adverse possession for the statutory period. There was a prayer for recovery of possession, and it was further prayed that if it be found that defendant 3 had maliki right, the plaintiff might be given a decree for possession on declaration of his jote right to the land.

It is unnecessary to set out the defence because the only plea on which the suit has been dismissed is that S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, operates as a bar to the maintainability of the suit.

In support of the contention that the present suit is not barred by reason of the provisions contained in S. 109, Ben. Ten. Act, a number of decisions has been drawn to our notice, many of which deal with the question whether a previous application under S. 105, Ben. Ten. Act, did or did not bar a subsequent suit. We do not propose to deal with those decisions because we are of opinion that in the present case we have really to consider only two questions: first: What, in fact, was the scope of the suit under S. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, as framed; and second: How much of that suit was triable by the Revenue Officer acting under the provisions of that section. S. 109, Ben Ten Act, would operate as a bar only to the extent that the suit as laid under S. 106 fell within the purview of the Revenue Officer's functions under that section. Having examined the plaint in the suit under S. 106 we find that it asked for correction of the entry in the Record-of-Rights by inserting the name as niskardar in respect of the lands, on a declaration that the plaintiff's title by purchase from defendant 3 had been established, and also a correction of the said entry by expunging the names of defendants 1, 2 and 3 on a declaration that they had no right to or possession in the lands. It has been urged before us on behalf of the appellant that the prayer for possession, which there is in the present suit, was not and could not be included in the suit under S. 106. This contention cannot be refuted: see, e. g., Pran Krishna v. Trailakhyanath (1), Kali Sundari v. Girija Sankar (2). But then it will not be possible to give him any relief in respect of this prayer unless he obtains a declaration of his title to the lands. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that the Revenue Officer could not have gone into the question of his title as against defendant 3. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon several cases which will now be noticed. The first case relied upon is that of Padmanav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (3). In this case there is no doubt a passage in the judgment of Woodroffe, J., which would seem to indicate that the question of possession alone should be considered in a suit under S. 106; but Coxe, J., observed that "it is evident that in proceedings under the Bengal Tenancy Act no disputes of title between rival proprietors, considered merely as proprietors can legitimately arise. (p. 13)," and again, that suits under S. 106 are

(2) [1911] 15 C. W. N. 974=11 I. C. 184.

"suits between tenant and tenant or between landlord and tenant in which questions other than that of possession may legitimately arise" (p. 15).

The observations of Woodroffe, J., therefore should be taken as limited to the peculiar facts of the case itself, namely, that the dispute concerned two rival proprietors without any question arising as between any of them and the tenants. The case of Ram Chandra v. Nanda (4), in which Padmanav's case (3) was referred to does not really help the appellant because there the question of possession had not at all been investigated and while remanding the case for an investigation of that question, it was observed that the Bengal Tenancy Act deals with relations of landlord and tenants and it is no part of its purpose to regulate disputes between rival proprietors, except in so far as such disputes affect their relations with their tenants, and the view of Cox, J., in Padmanav's case (3) was adopted and affirmed by the learned Judges. The view of Coxe, J., in Padmanav's case (3) was agreed in by Carnduff, J., in Ensar Ali v. Ansar Ali (5). That such dispute does not fall within the purview of S. 106 has also been held in a recent decision of this Court, namely in Asrafunnessa v. Hem Chandra (6). Another case upon which some reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants is that of Aswini Kumar v. Sardar Charan (7). In that case there was an observation to the effect that these matters (meaning prayer for declaration of title and recovery of possession) are entirely foreign to the jurisdiction of the Revenue Officer under S. 106. The fact of that case in so far as it appears from the report was that the suit was between two rival proprietors; but whatever that may be not much weight was attached to these observations in the latter case of Apurba Krishna v. Atarmani (8), in which all these cases were reviewed and it was said that in a suit under S. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, for correction of the Record-of-Rights when the Revenue Officer proceeds to decide the dispute he has to determine not merely whether certain words should or should not remain unchanged in the records but also whether the facts described by those words are correct, and the contention that the scope of the suit should not extend to questions of title was overruled. We are of opinion that the appellant's argument, that the scope of the suit under S. 106 in the present case was or should be confined to questions of possession, must fail.

At the same time we think that the present suit should not be thrown out altogether. The plaintiff's title in so far as it is based upon his allegation of adverse possession for the statutory period was not, in fact, within the scope of the plaint in the suit under S. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. He is fully competent to agitate this part of his title in the present suit and get in it such reliefs, if any, against the defendants as the law may entitle him to. We accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the decisions of the Courts below remand the suit in the limited form indicated above to the trial Court for trial. All costs incurred up till now (including the costs in this appeal) will be costs in the cause.

Rankin, C. J.—The accused Satya Ranjan Bakshi, is the Editor of a Calcutta daily newspaper called the "Forward" and the accused Pulin Bihari Dhar is the printer and publisher thereof. They have been convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under S. 153-A. I. P. C. in respect of certain matter published in the issue of the Forward newspaper dated 13th July 1928. The charge against them is that they promoted, or attempted to promote, feelings of enmity or hatred between two different classes of His Majesty's subjects, to wit the Europeans and Indians.

The statements contained in the printed matter which is now complained of have reference to a railway accident which took place at Belur soon after midnight on 8th and 9th July 1928. It would appear that a train from Howrah became derailed and that many of the carriages of the train were wrecked. It would appear further that in the course of the night a relief train, or trains, with doctors, medical staff and medical appliances came to the scene. The allegations published by the accused in the Forward newspaper are, shortly speaking, to the effect that certain Europeans belonging to the staff of the E. I. Ry., ordered injured passengers to be beaten to death and had the bodies thrown in a heap into a wagon, and that in this way the number of persons killed in the accident was increased to about 300 of whom 50 per cent were done to death with iron rods and other instruments by the staff under the direct orders and in the immediate presence of European members of the railway staff.

It is established by the evidence adduced in this case, and it has not been contested on behalf of the accused at the hearing of this appeal, that there is no truth whatever in these statements. Mr. Arthur Vincent Veneables, Divisional Superintendent of the E. I. Ry., who was one of the first to arrive at the scene of the accident and who was there during the whole of the time from 1-45 a. m. onwards, has given evidence and has explained in detail about his arrival by the patrol train and the subsequent arrival of the relief train shortly after 3 a. m. He has described how the injured were attended to by Dr. Rapper himself, how the injured were made as comfortable as possible in the rear portion of the train and how the bodies of the dead were laid on the slope of the bank and put in charge of the police. It would appear that the number of dead bodies was 19 and that these were taken in a special train to Howrah about 2 p. m. on the 9th in charge of the police. Dr. Rapper has also given evidence explaining in detail the medical work which he had to do and the manner in which it was done. Neither witness was cross-examined to show, or even to suggest, that the statements to which the accused gave publicity have any—even the smallest substratum of truth.

Criminal proceedings against these accused were begun on 17th July and on 28th September 1928, the accused filed a written statement. The evidence does not disclose that the accused, or either of them, in their newspaper or otherwise have at any time expressed regret for their conduct in giving currency to accusations so horrible and unfounded. There is no evidence, and indeed there is no pretension, that the statements complained of were, or could have been printed or published by inadvertence or by reason of mere negligence, whether excusable or inexcusable. Indeed, having regard to the astonishing character of the statements themselves and to the prominent position given to the matter now complained of in the issue of 13th July there is no room for doubt that the statements were published deliberately and with a full knowledge and appreciation of their meaning and contents.

wickedly and wantonly, without taking any trouble to verify and without any belief, reasonable or unreasonable, in the truth of what they published, spread broadcast accusations against certain European officials of the E. I. Ry., so foul as to be on the face of them incredible, there would be nothing to detain this Court on this evidence for more than a few moments.

In the written statement filed by the accused they set up as a defence the stale and ignorant contention that the allegations complained of were published by their newspaper in discharge of its duty to the public, that these allegations had been communicated to the newspaper, that the newspaper could not withhold them from the public and that the publication was with a view to letting the public and the Government look into both versions of the incident, i. e., the version contained in the allegations now complained of and the version of the railway company. This miserable plea may be brushed aside. I am not even prepared to assume, without good proof, that the accused are either so ignorant or so depraved as to imagine that there is anything in this plea. A newspaper, for the present purpose, is in exactly the same position as an individual except for the fact that it has greater facilities of giving publicity to defamatory matter. Not only has it no duty to break the law by publishing libels or seditious matter or matter objectionable under S. 153-A, it has no right to do so. The comments of the Chief Presidency Magistrate upon this plea have been expressed in somewhat pungent terms and he has rightly treated it with contempt.

The question before us, however, is not whether the conduct of the accused deserves to be reprehended, but whether it is proved that this exceptionally objectionable matter was published by them in the attempt to promote, or with the purpose of promoting, feelings of enmity or hatred between Indians and Europeans, which in this case means feelings of enmity or hatred in the minds of Indians as against Europeans. This is indeed the only point raised by learned counsel for the accused in this appeal. He says and says quite rightly that it is for the prosecution to prove that the publication was done with this intention or purpose. The written statement of the accused deals with this question in the following words :

"That the accused never intended to promote or even to attempt to promote any feelings of enmity or hatred between any two classes of His Majesty's subjects and never imagined that the attack contained in the letter in question on the officers and employees of the E. I. Ry. who went to the scene of the disaster in the relief or special trains could be construed in the circumstances by any reasonable or right-minded man to traduce a whole class as suggested in the charge framed against the accused, namely, the European subjects of His Majesty."

It may be here observed that if rumours of horrible and brutal ill-treatment of Indians by Europeans are once started, that they will reach only the ears of reasonable and rightminded men is an impossible and indeed a paradoxical assumption ; and as the accused are clearly shown to have been well aware of what they were publishing, the statement that they never imagined that their conduct would promote class hatred stands in need of a critical examination. The Magistrate's conclusion is that:

"reading it as a whole no one can hesitate to say that it was written in hate and meant and likely to create hatred for Europeans as a class by Indians as a class."

The question is whether the Magistrate was right.

The matter complained of was published in a part of the paper in which a reader would expect to find the most important news of the day. The head-lines are in very large type:

"Railway Smash at Belur—Sufferers' Story—Killed and wounded how many."

I do not know that any importance attaches to the particular words used in the head lines, but the headings as printed are calculated to draw the immediate attention of the reader to the matter now in question. This matter begins by a statement:

"We have received for publication quite a number of letters from those who were in the ill-fated train, who have received serious injuries but have fortunately escaped with their lives. We set out below some of these letters without any alteration. The letters will be intelligible and tell their own tale."

It is the first of the letters printed under this introduction which is the subject matter of the present charge. The letter is signed "A Real Horrified Spectator" and under this nom-de-plume is the word "Howrah" intended apparently as the address of the writer. It will be seen, therefore, that this newspaper contains a statement that the letter with which we are concerned is a letter which has been received for publication. Now, there is no proof on the part of the accused that any such letter was at any time received. It appears from the evidence of G. S. Roy, Sub-Inspector of Police, who executed a search warrant at the office of the Forward on 17th July 1928 (four days after the publication of the letter with which we are concerned) that he asked the accused Pulin Bihari Dhar for the copy of the original letter and was informed by him that he had not got it. That they did not keep copies of letters when they had printed them. No evidence has been given by the accused to show the date on which or the person from whom this letter was received and the Magistrate has pointed out very cogently in his judgment that if the letter was received at all it may or may not have been anonymous. It may also be observed that the letter as printed bears no date and that the question of the date upon which the letter was received is of some importance.

It is quite clear that the accused are not in a position to ask us to hold that the letter which was published was printed by them because it came from a source which they had reason to trust or because it amounted to evidence as to which they were honestly satisfied that an investigation was required. Speaking for myself, I am not satisfied that any such letter was in fact received. Having regard to the allegations contained in the letter it is plain enough that the purpose of the accused in publishing it was a malicious purpose to do damage to some one. The question before us was I think accurately and neatly stated by Mr. Chatterjee himself in the course of his reply—"venom against whom?"

When I scrutinize the letter itself for an answer to this question, I observe that the letter opens with a statement as to the intention of the writer. He claims to be writing:

"so that my mind and heart may be relieved of the horrors that I saw on the ill-fated night."

and he requests the Editor to publish the letter:

"so that the public may know, what was actually done by the 'Relief Train' in that night".

This profession of purpose is necessarily a hollow pretence as the story prefaced by it is a series of inventions. The next paragraph contains a statement that the train was going at a speed of above 40 miles an hour and that the writer and a friend when the accident happened were discussing the speed. It states that the writer was thrown about 10 feet away from the line. Then follow certain passages:

"The dead were being thrown into the covered wagons one after the other and as quick as possible. I could plainly hear weeping and cries of pain and agony. Accompanied with them I could hear heavy thuds and blows being delivered and the cries were diminishing at quick intervals. I could hear the voice of a European, 'Jaldi Karo, Maro Osko' Somebody on my left at a distance of 15 feet cried 'Hai, Jal, Hai Marta, Babu Jal, pani'. A man came, there was a heavy blow and the dying man spoke no more. All was over with him and water had been supplied to him for ever. No more did that Indian voice cry. He had been hushed for ever and carried away, away and thrown over the heap in the wagon."

Another passage:

"Oh, Brothers, Oh, Indians, what a horrible sight it was. My eyes fail to describe it. Search lights were flashing in every direction. The wounded were being searched and 'killed', mind you, 'killed' not saved. Where a cry arose, a Sahib came with a light, somebody delivered a heavy blow and the Royal Indian spoke no more. Oh, Brothers, Indian blood has been lavishly spilt, all the wounded and dying were killed and heaped into the wagons."

The letter then goes on to suggest that a large number of dead having been heaped into wagons, the wagons were not taken to Howrah but were taken somewhere else where the bodies were hidden or thrown into the river or the sea:

"I call upon the noble Indian public to bravely come forward and ask the Government what has become of the wagon loads of dead bodies silently carried away before dawn".

Another passage:

"I am ready to prove to the public that 'more' than 300 are 'dead' and 50 per cent could have been saved if the 'relief train' had not arrived and killed the dying with iron rods etc. . . . As regards proof, I dare say that I can identify 10 men of the relief party, however cleverly too they may be disguised, and even if you shut my eyes, I can recognize the European's voice (his gruff voice is still ringing in my ears)".

The concluding sentences of the letter are chiefly of importance owing to the constant reiteration of the word "Indian"

"Indians, 300 innocent dead bodies (half of whom were alive and cried for aid) have brutally been taken to God knows where and it is up to the Indian public to trace the clue and I shall give the evidence and tell to which side the wagons went. I earnestly call upon all Indians, Barristers, Leaders, public men to whatever political party, religion, or caste they may belong to come forward and demand a public answer to where those over 300 dead bodies of those innocent, those poor, those Royal Indians, been despatched? Why were the wounded killed? If the authorities deny all these, I shall go out to tell the world for the cause of the departed souls. Oh Indian, if you have any Indian blood in you, if you have any self-respect, sympathy, arise then now and come forward now, for your brothers have been treated worse than dogs. I hope all the national papers over and outside the country "will" copy this report."

It is said for the prosecution that the intention of the accused to promote hatred against Europeans is evidenced by the fact that the main point in this tissue of miserable lies is to represent that the injured who were killed were all killed at the order and in the immediate presence of a European. That the constant ejaculation "Oh? Indians" and the use of phrases like "The Royal Indian spoke no more," "Indian blood has been lavishly spilt," "those poor, those Royal Indians, been despatched", "Indians, if you have any Indian blood in you," all disclose and emphasize the attempt to give as the prominent feature of the narrative the brutal European butchering the helpless Indian.

Mr. Chatterjee has pointed out that if one examines the narrative such as it is, one will see that according to the writer Indian coolies or Indians of some sort were carrying out the orders of the European members killing their fellow countrymen, it would appear, as and when required, in fact promptly and industriously using iron rods upon the dying whenever asked to do so. This, it is contended, throws some doubt upon the inference that the motive of the writer (if there was a writer outside the Forward office), and the motive of the accused in giving publicity to the story was to excite hatred against Europeans as Europeans. The point is certainly worth attention and the effect of the letter as a whole cannot be assessed by taking separate points and separate passages. If, however, it is indisputable that the European staff of the relief train were intended by the accused to be exhibited as monsters killing Indians right and left, not doing so with their own hands but making Indian subordinates do the foul work in their immediate presence, it is clear enough that one part of the intention of this lying article is in the first instance to create the bitterest ill-feeling against those particular Europeans. Beyond the fact that the objects of this elaborate malevolence are Europeans, the only other circumstance which is conveyed to the reader with reference to those Europeans is the fact that they belonged to the relief train. Had there been some evidence showing, for example, that the accused had been discharged employees of E. I. Ry. or had, or supposed themselves to have, some special grievance against the railway or its medical staff, the purpose of the accused in publishing this letter might perhaps be taken to be confined to damaging the railway company or some of its employees. I observe that the accused in their written statement speak of :

"the attack contained in the letter in question on the officers and employees of the East Indian Railway who went to the scene of the disaster in the relief or special trains."

The learned counsel for the accused did not succeed in conveying to me any clear idea of the defence contention as to the purpose of his clients in publishing this article, but it seems desirable to consider whether the accused under S. 153-A can escape conviction upon the footing that their purpose was to create ill-feeling against some Europeans as a means of damaging the E. I. Ry. If this line of reasoning affords no defence to the accused, I see no other defence which has any relation to the facts of this case. The circumstance that according to the imaginative narrative complained of, Indian coolies are represented as giving unresisting obedience to the savagery of the Europeans is clearly a weak spot in the invention and it is also clear that the inventor perceived this, touched upon this particular part of the story very lightly and made as little of it as possible :

"A man came, there was a heavy blow and the dying man spoke no "more," "somebody delivered a heavy blow and the Royal Indian spoke no more."

If it cannot be disputed that the intention of the writer was in the first instance to create ill-feeling against the European principals in this imagined brutality, the part assigned to the Indian coolies is of no great importance.

The defence has pointed out that after the letter complained of, several other letters were published and at the end of these is an account of the proceedings of the official enquiry held by the Senior Government Inspector of Railways on Thursday the 12th July. This includes the evidence of Dr. Rapper who was in charge of the relief operations and who stated that the number of dead was 20. It contains also the evidence of the Permanent Way Inspector in which he stated that when he inspected the road with his Divisional Superintendent shortly after the accident, he found that a pair of fish-plates had been removed from the joints on the outside of the curve. Now it is said by the defence that in this issue there was no suppression of the story told by the railway officials and that this is a circumstance tending to show that the publication of the letter complained of was not done with the intention of creating enmity against Europeans. It is said also that in addition to the letter complained of, other letters were being published and that in these other letters there is nothing tending to show the purpose of creating enmity. Some of these letters if inaccurate in important particulars have nothing in common with the story of wholesale murder contained in the first letter. One of these other letters does, however, contain a statement that about 3 a. m. coolies were overheard proclaiming with shovels in their hands an intention to finish the injured. The same letter displays also an anxiety to make out that the number of dead is far in excess of the number given by the authorities and that the accident was due to the negligence of the railway authorities and not to any tampering with the line on the part of train-wreckers. I have not discovered any reasonable ground for thinking that the defence takes any advantage from the contents of these letters upon the question of the purpose of the accused in printing the letter complained of. It is, however, a note-worthy circumstance that the letter complained of was printed in front of the report of the official enquiry by the Government Inspector of Railways. The Magistrate has pointed out that if the letter was really received from an outside source, the date of its receipt would on this question be very interesting :

"If it was received on the 9th, then is it pure coincidence that it was published on the same date as the report of the enquiry, that is on the 13th ?"

As it appears to me to be clear that the accused were knowingly and deliberately publishing a farrago of injurious lies, I am of opinion that whether this letter was received at all or not, and on whatever date it was received, the purpose of its publication as disclosed by the date and manner thereof was really to swamp whatever effect the publication of the official version might be calculated to produce. The pride of place to which the Magistrate has referred is intentional and has an immediate and no mere general purpose. The written statement of the accused represents that "it was thought incumbent on the Forward to publish along with such communications, the version of the railway authorities themselves referring to the identical matter."

In my opinion this is a plain inversion of the truth. The letter was published in a manner deliberately intended to distract from, and to nullify the effect of, the official enquiry, the report of which was little likely to sink into the minds of the ignorant or credulous reader when his mind has been prepared by the excited rhetoric, the horrors and the appeal to national sentiment of the letter complained of.

In P. K. Chakravarty v. Emperor (1), I had occasion to point out that although the internal evidence of the words published will generally be decisive on the question of intention, they are never more than evidence of intention and it is the real intention of the accused that is the test. I pointed out also that the mere fact that ill-feeling may result or may be likely to result from the publication is not in itself sufficient and that there may be circumstances in any such case which would rightly prevent a Judge of fact from holding that the publication was an attempt to promote ill-feeling. I drew attention on that occasion to the statement of an important principle given in In re : Amrita Bazaar Patrika Press (2) at p. 225 by Woodroffe, J.:

"If the words used naturally, clearly and indubitably have such tendency, then it must be presumed that the publisher intended to create the natural result of the words used."

The learned Judge went on to say: "and no other evidence is to say the least likely to rebut the existence of such intention ;"

but each case must be dealt with on its own facts. The present case is one in which the primary intention of the accused to create ill-feeling and enmity is beyond the range of reasonable dispute. For this purpose the means employed were the dissemination of accusations so wild and horrible that their effect would obviously reach far beyond the limited range afforded by the number of persons who could read a newspaper printed in English. No one can suppose that the strongest denunciation of Europeans would if couched in general language have the same effect in the bazaars as a definite story of brutality told with reference to particular European officials. Nor can the accused be supposed to have been ignorant that when the story which they were publishing gained currency in the bazars, it would be far more likely that the object of resentment and ill-feeling would be Europeans as a class than that it would be directed against the railway administration. That it would not stop with the individuals directly libelled is clear enough. In the letter complained of the writer does all that a foolish and vulgar person can to give to his untruths the appearance of a story of outrage and to set them forth in a provocative manner with excited and exciting comment. Much pains are taken to appeal to sentiments characteristically national. It seems to me in the circumstances that the individual Europeans who are the primary victims of the criminal purpose of the accused are used in the same manner as a certain Mr. R. D. Spencer was used in the case of Jaswant Rai v. Emperor (3). As was observed in that case :

"you may tell people that they are being oppressed and that their fellows are being murdered with impunity but you will not carry conviction unless you can give them specific instances of oppression and murder. A concrete fact appeals more to the imagination and creates a more vivid impression on the mind than any number of general statements."

In my judgment neither the fact that the statements complained of amount to a gross libel upon the particular individuals concerned, nor the fact that they are intended to reflect upon and do damage to the administration of the E. I. Ry. militates against or in any way detracts from the further fact that this letter was clearly calculated to promote class hatred between Indians and Europeans and that it was published by the accused with the intention to subserve this wicked purpose. The appeal should in my judgment be dismissed.

Appeals Nos. 1224 and 1398 of 1926, Decided on 25th July 1928, from appellate decree of Addl. Sub-Judge., Khulna, D/- 26th January 1926.

(a) Contribution—Suit is based on equity—Equitable adjustment of all rights and liabilities between parties should be made.

The claim for contribution is based on principles of equity and the Court must adjust the rights of the parties in accordance with rules consistent with justice, equity and good conscience. In adjusting the rights the attention of the Court is not to be limited by the liabilities arising from the claim in the suit but it may go beyond the scope of the suit and enquire into other mutual liabilities: 12 C. L. R. 539; 12 C. W. N. 60, Foll.; 31 Cal. 95; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 657 and 20 C. L. J. 205, Rel. on.

(b) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33—Decree against party to suit can be passed in his absence—Discretion should be used to allow him to be present.

A decree in a suit for contribution was passed against two defendants. One defendant successfully appealed but the other defendant was not made a respondent. Appellate Court passed an additional decree against the absent defendant :

Held: under O. 41, R. 33 the Court could pass an order against a party to the suit in his absence although it would have been sound exercise of discretion to give an opportunity to that party of appearing before him and of being heard: A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 34 Dist.

(c) Limitation Act, S. 4—Application of S. 4 after extending time under S. 14 is allowed—Limitation Act, S. 14.

Section 4 can be applied to a case in which extension of time has been claimed under S. 14 and a plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of S. 14 and S. 4 tacked together: 24 W. R. 26; A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 654 Dist. [P 317 C 2; P 318 C 1]

Suhrawardy, J.—These two appeals arise out of a contribution suit. Jagabandhu the predecessor of the plaintiff, Mathura Nath the predecessor of defendants 1—3, Umesh Chandra the predecessor of defendants 5 and 6 and defendant 4 held a Nim Osat Taluk. The landlord in execution of a decree for arrears of rent in respect of it brought the taluk to sale when one Somoraddi who had a subordinate interest in it deposited the decretal amount under S. 171, Ben. Ten. Act. Subsequently he brought a suit against the Nim Osat Talukdars to recover the amount he had paid on their behalf to satisfy the landlord's decree. He obtained a decree and in execution of it some property belonging exclusively to the plaintiff was sold for Rs. 1,033. The plaintiff, therefore, sued defendants 1—3, defendants 5-6 and defendant 4 to recover from each set of defendants 1/4th share of the sum of Rs. 1,033 with interest thereon. It appears that the decree-holder Somoraddi's debts were not fully satisfied by the sale of the plaintiff's property. Some time after, defendant 4 paid the outstanding amount in another execution case to the decree-holder and thus squared up the liabilities of the defendants under the decree. The different sets of defendants raised various objections in the plaintiff's suit for contribution, some of which will be noticed later. During the pendency of the suit the plaintiff and defendants 1—3 entered into a compromise and thus they (defendants 1—3) went out of the suit. The Munsif in the trial Court gave a decree for Rs. 350-14-8 against defendants 5 and 6 and for the same amount against defendant 4. This amount was arrived at by calculating the 1/4th share of each set of defendants in the sum of Rs. 1,033 realized from the plaintiff alone with interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. Defendant 4 appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit against defendant 4 but passed a further decree against defendants 5 and 6 for Rs. 116-15-6. It should be noted that in the appeal by defendant 4 defendants 5 and 6 were not made respondents.

These two appeals are by the plaintiff and defendants 5 and 6. We will first deal with the plaintiff's appeal which is No. 1398 of 1926. It is argued on his behalf that as he paid the amount which was payable by all the defendants, he is entitled to a decree against defendant 4 also. It is submitted on behalf of defendant 4 that as he has paid his dues in full to the decree-holder, he is not liable to contribute towards the amount realized from the plaintiff. Now the claim for contribution is based on principles of equity and the Court must take an equitable view in the circumstances of each case and decide according to principles of equity and adjust the rights of the parties in accordance with rules consistent with justice, equity and good conscience: Magniram v. Mehdi Hossain Khan (1). The right to contribution though an equitable right arises out of an implied contract of indemnity between the parties liable for the same debt. This contractual obligation attaches to each of the persons liable to satisfy the common debt. But this right is not confined to Ss. 69 and 70, Contract Act, but may be based upon other equitable considerations and these considerations are available as much to the plaintiff as to the defendants. Registered Jessor Loan Co. Ltd. v. Gopal Hari (2) which is authority further for the view that all difference between the parties should be settled and adjusted in one suit.

In Matungini Debi v. Brojeswari Banerji (3) it was held among other things that no contribution can be levied against a person who has paid more than his share of the debt. In adjusting the rights of the parties in a suit for contribution the attention of the Court is not to be limited by the liabilities arising from the claim in the suit but in adjusting the equitable rights of the parties to the suit it may go beyond the scope of the suit and enquire into other mutual liabilities. In Gogun Chand Dutt v. Huri Mohan Dutt (4) the suit was brought by the plaintiff for contribution against the defendant on the ground that he had paid rent in excess of his share under a claim which he and the defendant were jointly liable to satisfy. In that case the defendant proved that he had paid the whole rent similarly on previous occasions and such payments were taken into consideration in adjusting the rights of the parties without the defendants pleading a set off. In Gajadhar Mahto v. Raghubar Gope (5), in a suit for contribution by a cosharer for a certain sum of money paid on behalf of his other cosharer to discharge a decree for rent obtained against them jointly, the defendant claimed a set off on account of previous payments by him under similar decrees for joint debts. The Court upheld the plea and the defendant was allowed to prove payments on behalf of the plaintiff on other occasions and further it held that in such cases no question of limitation arose. That being the law we have to consider how the rights of the different parties in this suit can be adjusted in justice, equity and good conscience.

Before dealing further with this matter it will be convenient to dispose of the appeal by defendants 5 and 6. Their first ground is that as they were no parties in the appeal the Court was wrong in passing a decree against them in their absence. The order passed by the lower Court allowing a decree against them for a further sum was apparently passed under O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C. I do not see why it cannot in a case like the present pass an order against a party to the suit in his absence although it would have been sound exercise of discretion to give an opportunity to that party of appearing before him and of being heard. The limitation to the application of this rule has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Khaleel Shirazi v. Les Tanneries Lyonnaises (6). The present case does not come within the rule of the decision of the Judicial Committee. Here the plaintiff not having appealed, his right to claim a decree for the excess amount against defendants 5 and 6 was barred and in his appeal against the other defendants the Court could not under R. 33 grant a decree against persons not parties to the appeal. But defendant 4 who was one of the co-defendants could very well appeal to the appellate Court and say that he was not liable for the plaintiff's claim; and if in determining the point raised in the appeal the Court finds that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount charged upon the appellant from other defendants the Court may pass a decree against them though not parties to the appeal. It would have been much better if the Court had acted under R. 20, O. 41, instead of R. 33 and added defendants 5 and 6 as respondents to the appeal and heard the matter in their presence. But it is not necessary to discuss the matter any further as all the parties are now before us and we are in a position to adjust their respective rights without giving effect to the decree of the lower Court.

It is next argued on behalf of defendants 5 and 6 who are the appellants in Appeal No. 1224 of 1926 that it should have been held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. The argument is based on certain facts which may be shortly stated. The money was realized from the plaintiff under process of law on 19th July 1920; the plaint was presented in the Munsif's Court at Barisal on 18th July 1923; it was returned by that Court for want of jurisdiction for presentation in the proper Court on 20th March 1924. The 21st, 22nd and 23rd days of March being holidays the plaint was presented in the Munsif's Court at Khulna on the 24th March. On these facts the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by the application of S. 14, Lim. Act, which gives an extension of time to the plaintiff up till the 20th March and S. 4, Lim. Act, which gives him a further period till the 24th March. The learned advocate appearing for the appellants argues that S. 4, Lim. Act, cannot be applied to a case in which extension of time has been claimed under S. 14 and reference in this connexion is made to Abhoy Charan v. Gour Mohan Dutt (7). That case has no application because there the parties did not claim the return of the plaint immediately after it was decided that the suit was filed in a wrong Court and further that the suit was not instituted in the proper Court on the day on which it re-opened but it was instituted on the following day. Then it is argued that the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of S. 14 and S. 4 tacked together. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the case of Ummathu v. Pathumma (8).

(7) 24 W. R. 26.

(8) A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 654=44 Mad. 817.

The question raised in that case requires a good deal of consideration; but I do not wish to discuss the view taken by the learned Judges because on the facts that case is distinguishable from the present. There the plaintiff took advantage of S. 4 before instituting the suit and she instituted the suit in the wrong Court, after the period of limitation had expired during the holidays, on the re-opening day of that Court. It is not clear but probably the proper Court was open when the time expired. The plaint was returned to the plaintiff and the suit was instituted in the proper Court. On the objection on the ground of limitation the Court held that as the suit had already become barred before it was presented in a wrong Court, S. 4 has no application to the case inasmuch as it contemplates the filing of a suit in the proper Court. One of the learned Judges, Ramesam, J., clearly puts the point before him for consideration :

The answer of the learned Judge was in the negative. The fact here is that the plaint was presented and was returned to the plaintiff on 20th March and he should have presented it to the proper Court on the next day. It was impossible for him to do so for the Court was closed. In the Madras case the learned Judges have referred to some other cases of that Court and adopted the view that under S. 4, Lim. Act, the fact whether the proper Court was closed, and not the wrong Court is the matter to be taken into consideration. It may be said on the facts of the case before us that it was not a question really under S. 4. The plaint was returned to the plaintiff and the plaintiff was bound to present it in the proper Court with as little delay as possible and it is evident that he could not do so before 24th March. This objection must accordingly be overruled.

The appellants in Appeal No. 1224 have also argued in the same strain as the plaintiff in the other appeal with reference to the liability of defendant 4. The decision of the question, therefore, will be held to apply to both these appeals. According to the principles that we have enunciated above we have to adjust the rights of the parties in this suit on grounds of justice. It is in evidence that the total amount recoverable under Samiraddin's decree was Rs. 1,380 ; each of the four cosharers was liable to pay Rs. 345 as his share of the debt. Defendant 4 paid Rs. 346 to the decree-holder for the amount which remained unrealized after the sale of the plaintiff's property. He thus paid whatever was due from him and must be held to have discharged himself from the debt ; but it is argued on behalf of the plaintiff that on the authority of the case Matungini Debi v. Brojeswari Banerji (3) if the defendant had paid more than his share he could have claimed discharge. It so happened that in that case the defendant had paid more than his share but we see no reason for holding that if he does not pay more than his share he cannot claim exemption from liability to contribute towards the amount payable in liquidation of the debt of the cosharers. If that be the principle as suggested by the plaintiff, defendant 4 in this case has paid one rupee more than his proper share.

Next we have to look to the plaintiff's claim. He has paid Rs. 1,033 in partial discharge of the common debt. From this amount should be deducted the amount which he was liable to pay under the decree, namely, Rs. 345. This leaves a balance of Rs. 688, half of which is payable by defendants 1 to 3 and the other half by defendants 5 and 6 ; and this amount he is entitled to recover from those defendants. He has compromised the suit with defendants 1 to 3, against whom there can be no further claim. He is accordingly entitled to recover Rs. 344 with interest from defendants 5 and 6. The lower Courts have allowed the plaintiff interest at 12 per cent per annum. In most of the reported cases the rate of interest allowed in such cases is 6 per cent per annum. We should accordingly allow the plaintiff interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from 19th July 1920, the date on which money was realized from the plaintiff, to 18th July 1923, the date on which the plaint was presented in the Barisal Court. This gives us the amount Rs. 62 which the plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendants 5 and 6. Under the decree of the lower Courts the plaintiff has already recovered from these defendants rupees 350-14-6. There will be a decree against them for the balance with interest at six per cent per annum till the date of realization.

As regards defendant 4 he paid a sum of Rs. 346 to the decree-holder on 2nd June 1922. This amount was paid on behalf of the four cosharers including the plaintiff. The plaintiff is entitled to recover interest from defendant 4 from 19th July 1920 to 2nd June 1922 and defendant 4 in his turn is entitled to recover interest from the plaintiff for one-fourth of the amount of Rs. 346 which he paid on 2nd June 1922 on behalf of the plaintiff up to the present date. On making a rough calculation we think no party should have any claim against the other.

The result is that appeal No. 1398 is dismissed with costs; Appeal No. 1224 is partly allowed and the decrees of the of the lower Courts are varied in the way suggested above. We allow no costs in this appeal. Costs of the Courts below in proportion.

SUHRWARDY AND MITTER, JJ.

G. V. Raman—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 3 of 1929, Decided on 23rd January 1929, against order of Chief Presidency Magistrate.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 494 (Mitter, J.) — Order under — Reasons must be given (Suhrawardy, J., contra).

Mitter, J.—Order under S. 494 is a judicial order and the Court should record reasons in order to enable the High Court to judge whether the order of the withdrawal has been rightly made: A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 382; and 26 C. L. J. 203, Foll.; A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 283, Not Foll. [P 320 C 1]

Suhrawardy, J. — It is a matter between the Public Prosecutor and the Magistrate and neither of them need assign any reason to record. [P 322 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 494—Accused discharged under, is competent witness against co-accused—Evidence Act, S. 30.

Section 494 of the Code stands by itself. The effect of the section is that as soon as an accused is discharged under that section he is taken away from the category of an accused person and becomes under the general principles of law a competent witness against his co-accused. [P 320 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 494—Order under —Propriety of—Test is whether extraneous circumstances are considered.

Where the Court is considering whether the Magistrate has rightly made the order of discharge under S. 494 or not, one test and a very important test is whether in coming to a decision it has taken into consideration extraneous circumstances which ought not properly to have been taken into account. [P 321 C 2] * (d) Criminal P. C., S. 337—S. 337 is not exclusive of method of obtaining co-accused's evidence.

Section 337 of the Code does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon with all the safeguards mentioned in the said section. [P 321 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 494 — Allowing withdrawal is discretionary.

The language of S. 494 is very wide and gives a discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he would consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution by the Public Prosecutor—Such discretion to be exercised not arbitrarily but must be based on correct legal principles. [P 321 C 2]

* (f) Criminal P. C., S. 436 — Setting aside discharge—Third party can apply.

An order of discharge of an accused person may be interfered with at the instance of a third party when such an order has the effect of operating to the detriment of such third person. He has in such cases a right to apply in revision against such an order. [P 321 C 2]

B. C. Chatterji, Mrityunjoy Chatterji and Gopal Chandra Mukerji—for Petitioner.

Khondkar—for the Crown.

Mitter, J. — This rule is directed against an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate by which he allowed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw a criminal prosecution pending against Bijoy Bhusan Bose and further allowed him to be examined as a witness. The order discharging Bijoy was made under S. 494, Criminal P. C. It appears that the said Bijoy Bhusan Bose along with several others including Raman who is the petitioner before this Court was sent up to take his trial on a charge of conspiracy to cheat under S. 120-B read with S. 420, I. P. C. On 20th December 1928 before any evidence was gone into the Public Prosecutor wanted to withdraw the case against Bijoy and to examine him as a witness against the petitioner Raman. This prayer of the Public Prosecutor was allowed, Bijoy was discharged and he was subsequently examined for the prosecution.

It is contended in this rule: (i) that the order of withdrawal is bad in law as no reasons have been given by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and (ii) it was not open to the trying Magistrate to permit the withdrawal of the prosecution against Bijoy in order to examine him as a witness against his co-accused viz., the petitioner.

In support of ground 1 taken, two decisions of this Court have been referred to: they are the cases of Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satish Chandra Roy (1), and Jagat Chandra Roy v. Kalimuddin (2). These cases undoubtedly lay down that the order on an application for withdrawal made by the Public Prosecutor under S. 494, Criminal P. C., is passed by the Court in its judicial capacity and the Court must give and record its reason so that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer appearing for the Crown has contended that these decisions are wrong as S. 494 nowhere says that reasons should be recorded and he relies on the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Gulli v. Narain (3). We are bound, however, by the decisions of our own Court and we think that as the order under S. 494 is a judicial order the Court should record reasons in order to enable the High Court to judge whether the order of the withdrawal has been rightly made. In this case, however, the Magistrate has given his reasons for allowing the withdrawal and he states in effect that the withdrawal is allowed in order that Bijoy who was indicated jointly with the petitioner might give his evidence against the latter. This leads me to consider ground 2 raised as to whether this is a sufficient and good reason for allowing an withdrawal. The argument of the petitioner is put in this way:—It is said that S. 337, Criminal P. C., is the only section which lays down the procedure which is to be followed in the case of certain offences with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to the said offences and this provision seems to import the idea that it is only in particular cases that evidence of a co-accused is available against the other and is so available under certain conditions and safeguards and that it could not have been the intention of the legislature to allow a co-accused to depose against another except under the safeguards mentioned in S. 337. We are unable to agree with this contention. S. 494 of the Code stands by itself. The effect of the section is that as soon as an accused is discharged under that section he is taken away from the category of an accused person and becomes under the general principles of law a competent witness against his co-accused. The question is:—Is there anything wrong in law in allowing the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the prosecution against Bijoy in order that he may call him as a witness for the prosecution.

It appears that so far back as 1840 Erskine, J., cited a passage from Hale P. C. 118 that:

"when the accomplice has been joined in the indictment, and before the case comes on it appears that his evidence will be required, the usual practice is, before opening the case, to apply to have the accomplice acquitted: see Regina v. Lyons (4)."

In the same case Erskine, J., cited another passage from Lord Hale which runs as follows:

"Where a party had been joined in the indictment and it was intended to call him as a witness for the prosecution it was formerly the practice to enter nolle prosequi as to him."

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has drawn our attention to the case of Queen v. Owen (5) where three persons were indicted for a rape and were also indicted for the murder of the party alleged to have been ravished and where before the trial on the indictment for rape the counsel for the prosecution asked to have one of the prisoners acquitted in order that he might call him as a witness against the others, Williams, J., held notwithstanding opposition by counsel for the other prisoners, that in cases of this kind the Court will, if it sees no cause to the contrary entrust it to the discretion of the counsel for the prosecution to determine whether he will have a prisoner acquitted before the trial commences to call such prisoner as a witness against the other prisoners. Williams, J., having conferred with Alderson B. said:

"I had little doubt as to the course I ought to take, and my learned brother entirely agrees with me that this is a matter very much of ordinary occurrence. In cases of this kind, the Court if it sees no cause to the contrary, is in the habit of relying on the discretion of the learned counsel who conduct the prosecution."

(5) 9 C. & P. 83.

I shall, therefore, in this case entrust it to the discretion of the learned Sergeant to determine whether he will have the prisoner Owen acquitted before the case is gone into or not. I think it almost of course."

In Winson v. Queen (6), Cockburn, C. J., said :

"In all cases where two persons are joined in the same indictment, and it is desirable to try them separately, in order that the evidence of the one may be received against the other, I think it necessary, for the purpose of insuring the greatest possible amount of truthfulness in the person coming to give evidence to take a verdict of not guilty as to him, or if the plea of not guilty be withdrawn by him, and a plea of guilty taken, to pass sentence ; so that the witness may give his evidence with mind free of all the corrupt influence, which the fear of impending punishment and the desire to obtain immunity to himself at the expense of the prisoner, might otherwise produce."

In this case which was carried to the Exchequer Chamber on a writ of error from the Queen's Bench it was held that where two prisoners are indicated jointly for a felony and plead not guilty, but one only is given in charge to the jury the other is an admissible witness although his plea of not guilty remains on the record undisposed of: See Winsor v. Queen (7).

In Russell on Crimes, p. 2114 (8th Edition) it is stated that it is a common practice after the indictment has been founded on the accused arraigned to offer no evidence against the accomplice and on his acquittal to call him for the Crown. In R. v. Rowland (8) upon an indictment for conspiracy the Court allowed an acquittal to be taken against some of the defendants in order that they might be called as witnesses for the prosecution. In Queen v. Payne (9) Cockburn, C. J., stated that this was a convenient rule and practice: see 354-55. In Phipson on Evidence the learned author states that to render co-defendant competent to be called by the prosecution, each co-defendants must have been acquitted, or have obtained a nolle prosequi or have pleaded guilty: see p. 453, 5th edition. It is the right of the Crown at any stage of a trial but before judgment is pronounced, to enter a nolle prosequi. S. 333 gives the power to the Advocate General in cases tried before the High Court. In other cases the Public Prosecutor performs a similar function (S. 494.)

In the case of withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor the consent of the Court is necessary under the Criminal Procedure Code. The result of the authorities is that where the Court is considering whether the Chief Presidency Magistrate has rightly made the order of discharge under S. 494 or not, one test and a very important test is whether in coming to a decision it has taken into consideration extraneous circumstances which ought not properly to have been taken into account. The present question may usefully be approached with decisions cited in mind.

My conclusions, therefore, are (1) that S. 337 of the Code does not suggest the idea that the only method of obtaining the evidence of a co-accused against another is by tendering him a pardon with all the safeguards mentioned in the said section; (2) that the language of S. 494 is very wide and gives a discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he would consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution by the Public Prosecutor, such discretion to be exercised not arbitrarily but must be based on correct legal principles; (3) that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has not in the present case exercised the discretion wrongly in relying on the discretion of the Public Prosecutor on withdrawing the prosecution against Bijoy in order that his evidence might be available after his discharge against the petitioner Raman who was being jointly tried with him, on charges of conspiracy and cheating. For the reasons given above I think this Rule should be discharged.

It remains to notice an argument of the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that the High Court ought not to interfere against an order of discharge of an accused person at the instance of a third party. It seems to me, however, that when such an order has the effect of operating to the detriment of such third person he has right to apply in revision against such an order.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree with my learned brother in discharging this rule. In my judgment, however, decision of this Court referred to by my learned brother laying down that in giving consent under S. 494 the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons in writing have to be, on a proper occasion, reconsidered.

To hold so would be to improve upon the legislature and to introduce into the section some words not used by the legislature, which seem to have been intentionally omitted as in some other cases expressly used Ss. 204, 249, 250, 253, 344 and other sections. It seems to me that it is a matter between the Public Prosecutor and the Magistrate and neither of them need assign any reason to record. But in this case the reason is given.

On the main question I do not think that Ss. 337 and 494, Criminal P. C., should be read together and held that the former governs the latter and abridges in any way the wide words of S. 494. S. 337 appears in another connexion and deals only with granting pardon to an under-trial prisoner in some serious cases. If he satisfies the condition of the pardon he gets acquitted; if not, he may be tried for the offence. But if a case is withdrawn under S. 494 the accused, if he is discharged, may be tried for the offence which he admits in his examination as a witness to have committed; and if he is acquitted he cannot be retried even though he refuses to give his evidence for the prosecution. The learned counsel for the petitioner concedes that it would be a correct procedure first to withdraw the case against Bijoy and then to put him in the witness-box. The objection, therefore, is to the form and not to the substance of the matter. The Rule is discharged.

Second Appeal No. 1936 of 1927, Decided on 28th February 1928, against decree of Sub-Judge, Murshidabad, D/- 23rd May 1927.

* (a) Civil P. C., S. 105 (1)—In appeal from the final decree the propriety of order setting aside the award can be enquired.

The decision by the trial Court setting aside an award is a decision which affects the merits of the case inasmuch as the rights of the parties relating to the subject-matter of the suit will be differently settled if the award is allowed to stand. The Court of appeal can therefore on appeal from the final decree enquire into the propriety of the order setting aside the award: 14 W. R. 327; and 31 Mad. 345, Foll.; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 766; A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 455; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 466 and A. I. Suhrawardy, J.—The facts upon which this appeal is founded are that the plaintiff-appellant brought a suit for recovery of possession on establishment of title to two cottas of land. During the progress of the suit it was referred to the arbitration of three gentlemen on an application signed by the pleaders of the parties. The arbitrators filed their award on 25th July 1925, the effect of which was to allow the plaintiff's claim in a modified form. On 4th August, the plaintiff objected to the award on the ground that his pleader had no authority under the vakalatnama to apply for arbitration and he also made charges of misconduct against the arbitrators. The Munsif by his order, dated 15th September 1926, held that the pleader had no authority under the vakalatnama filed in the suit to appoint arbitrators and refer the matter in dispute to them. In this view he set aside the award and fixed 10th November 1925, for the hearing of the suit. On that date the defendant did not appear and the suit was decreed ex parte according to the plaintiff's claim. Against that decree the defendant appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad set aside the decree passed by the Munsif on 10th November 1925, on the ground that the view taken by the Munsif that the pleader was not vested with sufficient authority to refer the matter to arbitration was erroneous and remanded the case to the first Court for an investigation into the charges of misconduct made by the plaintiff against the arbitrators. This appeal is against this order of remand and it has been argued in the first place on behalf of the appellant that the Court of appeal below had no jurisdiction to set aside the interlocutory order of the Munsif of 15th September 1925, inasmuch as it is not an order which "affects the decision of the case" within the meaning of S. 105, Civil P. C. On the authorities and after a careful consideration of the questions raised I am of opinion that this contention ought not to prevail. Great stress has been laid on the decision of this Court in Sayma Bibi v. Madhusudan Mohanta (1). There an abatement was set aside by the trial Court. On appeal from the final decree in the suit objection was taken to the order setting aside the abatement. The lower appellate Court held that there was no appeal from an order setting aside an abatement and such an order could not be challenged in appeal from the final decree. The defendant appealed to this Court and it was argued on his behalf that the order setting aside the abatement is an order "affecting the decision of the case" and hence could be challenged in appeal from the final decree.

It was held that an order setting aside an abatement is not an order "affecting the decision of the case" and hence could not be challenged in the appeal from the decree. Upon the same consideration are decided the cases which have held that an order setting aside an ex parte decree cannot be challenged in appeal against the final decree as it is not an order affecting the decision of the case: Dhondu Narayan v. Waman Govind (2), Sundar Singh v. Nighaiya (3) and Babu Ram v. Banke Behari Lal (4). It is not necessary for me to accept the correctness of these decisions in so far as they relate to decrees passed ex parte, but the considerations which apply to cases relating to the setting aside of abatement or ex parte decree are not pertinent in the present case. An order setting aside an abatement or an ex parte decree is an order which far from affecting the merits of the case invites the parties to enter into the merits of the case to enable the Court to come to a decision upon its merits. It may be that if an order of abatement or an order passed ex parte is allowed to stand the parties will stand in a different position and their rights will be differently adjusted; but such an order cannot be said to be an order affecting the decision of the case which have been interpreted as meaning affecting the merits or affecting questions bearing upon the merits of the case. There is ample authority in support of the view that the decision by the trial Court setting aside an award is a decision which affects the merits of the case inasmuch as the rights of the parties relating to the subject-matter of the suit will be differently settled if the award which was a decision on the merits by the arbitrators was allowed to stand. It is not necessary to cite all the cases on the point which are numerous but it is enough to point out that this view was taken so long ago as 1870 in Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindabun Tewaree (5). I cannot express myself on this point any better than what has been said by Sir Richard Couch in that case. The learned Chief Justice after referring to the setting aside of the award by the trial Court and the appeal from the final decree in the suit to the Judge where the objection was taken that the Judge had no authority to reverse the decision of the Munsif setting aside the award observed thus:

"It is true that no appeal is allowable against an interlocutory order, and that the order of the Munsif setting aside the award being an interlocutory order was not open to appeal immediately, but when the Munsif had made his decree in the suit in favour of the plaintiff, it was competent for the defendant to appeal against that decree. He did so, and then he was at liberty to question the propriety of any interlocutory order which had been made, provided that the error in that order was such as to affect the merits of the case. We do not see how it can be said in this case that the error in the interlocutory order of the Munsif was one which did not affect the merits of the case, for if the award was a proper award and one that ought not to have been set aside by the Munsif, the setting it aside would be an act which would necessarily affect the merits of the case, as the award was upon the very subject-matter of the suit and determined it."

It may be noted that in the corresponding section in Act 8 of 1859 under

(5) [1870] 14 W. R. 327.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 766=52 Cal. 472.

(2) A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 455=51 Bom. 495.

(3) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 466=6 Lah. 94.

(4) A. I. R. 1925 All. 426=47 All. 555.

which this case was decided, the words were "affecting the merits of the case." I do not think that the words in S. 105, Civil P. C., 1908, "affecting the decision of the case" have in any way changed the scope of those words, if they have not actually widened it. In this Court there is no case bearing directly on the point except the case in the Weekly Reporter but opinion in support of the view has been expressed in Ambica Dasia v. Nadyar Chand Pal (6), in which an appeal was preferred against an order setting aside the award and it was held that no appeal lay from the interlocutory order which was only liable to revision when the final decree was passed. In Shyama Charan Pramanik v. Prohad Durwan (7), this point was not raised, but the judgment of Banerjee, J., indicates that the learned Judge was of opinion that such an order could be challenged in appeal from the decree. In Damodar Trimbak v. Raghunath Hari (8), the same observation was made in a case in which the appeal was taken against an order setting aside an award, namely, that no appeal lay but that it could be challenged in appeal from the decree. In Achuthayya v. Thimmayya (9), this point was directly raised and it was held that where a Court sets aside an award under S. 521, Civil P. C., 1882, and decides the case on the merits, the Court of appeal can on appeal from the final decree enquire into the propriety of the order setting aside the award.

In Ram Autar v. Deoki Tewari (10), it was held in revision that an order of a Court setting aside an award of the arbitrator and deciding that the case should be tried by the Court is an order affecting the decision of the case within the meaning of S. 105, Civil P. C., and is therefore liable to be challenged in appeal against the decree. To the same effect are the observations in Shah Muhammad Fakhruddin v. Rahimulla Shah (11) and Rudra Prosad Pandey v. Mathura Prosad Pande (12). The observations are no doubt made in cases which came in revision and in which opinion is expressed that the question can be enquired into in an appeal from the decree; but the observations made by the learned Judges in those cases in order to support their order refusing to interfere in revision on this ground are certainly entitled to great weight and cannot be said to be obiter dicta. But the cases that are directly in point are those reported in Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindabun Tewaree (5) and Achuthaya v. Thimayya (9) which I have no hesitation in following. This objection of the appellant must, accordingly, be overruled. It is next argued by Mr. Mitter on behalf of the appellant that the order of the Munsif setting aside the award on the ground that the pleader who referred the matter to arbitration was not properly authorized is an order which decides a matter which happened previous to the arbitration and challenges the propriety or validity of the reference. The defendant, therefore, not having appealed against that order, could not be allowed to agitate the matter in appeal from the final decree. There is no substance in this contention either, as the order of the Munsif was apparently passed under para. 15, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., and it is an order against which no appeal is provided by the Code.

The third contention raised by the learned vakil is that the interpretation put by the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below on the vakalatnama is wrong and that put by the Munsif was right and should be upheld. I am unable to agree with the construction of the vakalatnama by the Munsif. In one clause in the document, the words used with reference to the power to be exercised by the pleader appointed by the vakalatnama are shalishan or solenama kariben and in another clause the words are shalishani adi kariben. The learned Munsif is of opinion that these words mean that the pleaders were authorized to act as arbitrators and they do not mean that they are vested with the right of appointing arbitrators. This interpretation of the words cannot be supported. Shalishani is a Persianised Arabic word loosely used in the Bengali language and must be construed with reference to the context. The first clause begins with the words:

(6) [1885] 11 Cal. 172.

(7) [1904] 8 C. W. N. 390.

(8) [1902] 26 Bom. 551=4 Bom. L. R. 267.

(9) [1908] 31 Mad. 945=18 M. L. J. 228=3 M. L. T. 315.

(10) [1915] 37 All. 456=29 I. C. 411=13 A. L. J. 653.

(11) A. I. R. 1925 All. 458=47 All. 121.

(12) A. I. R. 1925 All. 566=47 All. 916.

"I appoint the pleaders named herein and any one of them who happens to be present may amongst other things shalishani kari-ben."

As the Subordinate Judge observes shalishani is plural of shalish and means arbitrators. It will be unintelligible if one person is authorized to act as "arbitrators." I have no doubt in my mind that the construction put upon this document by the Subordinate Judge is correct and I am fortified in this view by the decision of my learned brother in Civil Rule No. 21 of 1926, decided on 9th March 1926. This objection must also be overruled.

The last ground urged is that as the appeal by the defendant was against the ex parte decree the only point to which enquiry should be directed by the appellate Court was whether the decree passed ex parte in the circumstances of the case was right or wrong. In other words the authority of the appellate Court was limited to the enquiry whether the ex parte decree was passed under the circumstances which might make it binding upon the defendant or otherwise. I cannot agree to this proposition also. It is true that against an ex parte decree the party aggrieved has three courses open to him; he may either make an application under O. 9, R. 9 or R. 13; he may appeal from the decree or apply for a review of the judgment or order passed ex parte. But it seems to me that where the only objection is with regard to the non-appearance of a party at the hearing on account of sufficient cause the matter can chiefly be agitated in an application under O. 9. But where the decree is against the record or against law, it can be successfully challenged in an appeal from it and if there be any error which comes within the ambit of O. 47, R. 1, the ex parte decree may be questioned by an application for review. There is nothing in the Code which confines the power of the appellate Court in appeal from ex parte decree only to the investigation of the cause of non-appearance for which on the record as it stands there is hardly any material. This objection also fails.

All the points taken on behalf of the appellants having been overruled this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Graham, J.—I agree.

CUMING AND MALLIK, JJ.

Sati Prosad Garga and others — Defendants—Appellants.

Gobinda Chandra Shee — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Appeal No. 693 of 1926, Decided on 28th November 1928, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Midnapore, D/- 4th December, 1925.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), S. 184—Section prescribes period of limitation but does not exclude application of S. 14, Limitation Act.

Section 184 provides the period of limitation, and S. 14, Lim. Act, provides, not the period of limitation but means to compute that period which is an entirely different thing. Therefore S. 184 does not exclude the application of S. 14, Lim. Act. [P 326 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, Ss. 101 to 103—Suit for possession of land — Plaintiff must prove that land lies within the holding.

In a suit for possession of land the plaintiff has to prove that the land lay within his holding and not for the defendants to prove that it lay outside: 3 C. W. N. 763, Ref. [P 327 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act, Ss. 102 & 103—Onus is immaterial when evidence is given by both sides.

The question on whom the burden of proof should fall is of very little importance when evidence has been gone into by both sides.

Amarendra Nath Bose, Arun Chandra Bose for Probodh Ch. Chatterjee — for Appellants.

Prafulla Kamal Das—for Respondent.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff sued for possession of some eight bighas of land which was specified as settlement dags 823, 918, 919 and 700 and further for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's possession after a declaration that the entry in the Record-of-Rights is erroneous, ultra vires and not binding on the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's case is briefly this: That the lands in dispute so far as dags 823, 918 and 919 are concerned were taken settlement of by some, five persons so long ago as July 1830. One of these five persons was one Gaya Narayan Shee, the grandfather of the plaintiff; that the plaintiff inherited the land in suit which formed part of the demised land as heir of his grandfather, and that he and his predecessors-in-interest had been in possession all along. With regard to the dag 700 he states that he purchased it from Madhab Kandar in 1316 and had been in possession of the same since that date, and that he had executed a kabuliati in favour of the Government Khas Mehal Department as this dag 700 was found to be included in the Government Khas Mehal being described as bund surplus land of the Government. The defendants resisted his claim and contended that the lands in suits so far as dags 823, 918 and 919 were concerned were recorded in their names in the Settlement Record-of-Rights. They contended that the amalnama was not genuine and further that the dag 823 918 and 919 had not been included in the amalnama. With regard to dags 700 the defendants seemed to contend that the Government had no title to any portion of dag 700. They further argued that the suit was barred by limitation the period of limitation applicable to the case being the special law of limitation provided by Art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act. The trial Court and also the lower appellate Court found all the issues in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The first point which has been urged by Mr. Bose who appears on behalf of the appellants is that the suit is barred by limitation. He would maintain that the period of limitation provided for the suit is that provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act and that S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, would exclude this suit from the operation of S. 14, Lim. Act. In order to understand Mr. Bose's point clearly it would be necessary to state a few more facts. The suit was instituted on 8th December 1922 in a Munsif's Court. The period of limitation would normally expire on 22nd November 1923. Therefore apparently at the time when the suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court at Tam-luk it was within time. A question, however, was raised by the defendants as to the valuation of the suit. After an enquiry made by the Munsif it was found by him that the value of the suit was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction and on 22nd December 1923 he returned the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented before the proper Court. On 2nd January next it was presented in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Midnapore. I may here note that the civil Courts were closed on 23rd December and remained closed up to 2nd January. 2nd January was the reopening day of the civil Courts.

It will be seen therefore that on the day when it was presented in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Midnapore that suit was out of time—time having expired on 22nd November 1923. The plaintiff, however, called to his aid S. 14, Lim. Act, and contended that he was entitled to exclude the period during which he had been prosecuting in good faith his suit in the Court of the Munsif at Tam-luk. Both the lower Courts have found that he was entitled to exclude this period and hence his suit was within time. Mr. Bose admits that if the plaintiff is entitled to exclude this period the suit is within time. But Mr. Bose contends that S. 14, Lim. Act, does not apply and he is not entitled to exclude the period. Mr. Bose relied on S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act. S. 184 states :

"that the suits, appeals and applications specified in Sch. 3 annexed to this Act shall be instituted and made within the time prescribed in that schedule for them respectively ; and every such suit or appeal instituted and application made after the period of limitation so prescribed, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been pleaded."

Mr. Bose would argue from this that S. 14, Lim. Act, has no application. S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, however, to my mind provides the period of limitation. S. 14, Lim. Act, provides not the period of limitation but means to compute that period which to my mind is an entirely different thing. A reference to S. 185, Tenancy Act, will I think made it quite clear that S. 14, Lim. Act, does apply. S. 185 states that (1) :

"Sections 7, 8 and 9, Lim. Act, 1877 shall not apply to the suits and applications mentioned in the last foregoing S. (2) subject to the provisions of this chapter, the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act 1877 shall apply to all suits, appeals and applications mentioned in the last foregoing section."

Now, it seems to me that if it were the intention of the legislature that S. 14 would not apply to suits &c., mentioned in S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, the legislature would have stated so because it specifically excludes S. 7, 8 and 9 and if it desired to exclude S. 14 nothing would have been easier than to add this section to the list of sections which were excluded and I cannot see how S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, excludes the application of S. 14, Lim. Act. The point is made still clearer by a reference to S. 29, Lim. Act. This section has been amended recently in 1922. It provides that tation different from the period prescribed therefor by Sch. 1, the provisions of S. 3 shall apply as if such period were prescribed therefor in that schedule, and for the purpose of determining any period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law (a) the provisions contained in S. 4, Ss. 9 to 18 and S. 22 shall apply only in so far as and to the extent to which, they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law."

As I read this section, S. 4, Ss. 9 to 18 and S. 22 would apply unless they are expressly excluded by any special or local law. By the expression "expressly" I think it is meant that express reference is made to the specific section in the Act; and that unless such reference is made to the section and by that reference they are expressly excluded then they would apply. I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that S. 14, Lim. Act does apply to the present suit and in view of the facts the plaintiff is clearly within time. Mr. Bose has further contended with regard to the question of limitation that it has not been found that the plaintiff was in good faith prosecuting the suit in the Munsiff's Court. Whether a person is acting in good faith or bad faith is clearly a question of fact and there is on this point a specific finding by the learned Judge: see p. 14 of the paper book lines, 5 and 6 where the learned Judge states:

"In such circumstances it cannot be said that the plaintiff in bad faith gave a lower price."

Reading this portion of the judgment I think it is quite clear that the learned Judge means to say that the plaintiff gave the price that he did in good faith. Mr. Bose then proceeds to contend further that the learned Judge in deciding this point had not got in his mind the meaning of the expression "good faith." "Good faith" is specifically defined in the Limitation Act as follows:

"Nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention."

Now the learned Judge was dealing with a section of the Limitation Act and there is no doubt that the expression "good faith" is used with a particular meaning in this Act. But we must presume that the learned Judge in dealing with the expression "good faith" as used in the Limitation Act was perfectly well aware of the particular definition of the expression "good faith" which will be found in the Limitation Act and, therefore, when he found that the plaintiff prosecuted his suit in good faith he found that he prosecuted it with due care and attention.

Mr. Bose has then argued that the learned Judge has wrongly placed the burden of proof on the defendant. At p. 14, line 45, of the paper book the following statement of the learned District Judge appears:

"The lands in suit are claimed by plaintiff as part of his holding defendants must prove according to the ruling in Shama Sundari Dassee v. Raj Behary Dhur (1), that it is outside the plaintiff's jote."

Mr. Bose contends that in so doing the learned Judge has placed the burden of proof on the wrong party. He contends, I think rightly, that it was for the plaintiff to prove that the land lay within his jote and not for the defendant to prove that it lay outside. I do not, however, think that this is really material. No doubt the learned Judge was wrong in stating that the burden of proof lay on the defendants. But as has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the question on whom the burden of proof should fall is of very little importance when evidence have been gone into by both sides. When one reads the judgment it will be seen that the learned Judge really put the burden of proof on the plaintiff. He was aware as would be quite clear from line 36 at p. 15 of the paper book that the Record-of-Rights was in favour of the defendants and it was for the plaintiff to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the Record-of-Rights. He deals with the evidence on that footing and finally finds that the presumption of the Record-of-Rights has been rebutted.

Mr. Bose next argues that the learned Judge has not considered whether the lands in question are covered by the amalnama. As far as I can see reading the judgment of the learned District Judge it was not disputed in the lower appellate Court that the lands in dispute were covered by the terms of the amalnama. So far as the amalnama was concerned the only question raised before the learned District Judge was whether the amalnama itself was or was not genuine and it was not disputed before him whether the lands in dispute were or were not covered by it. I do not think therefore that the finding of the learned Judge that the three plots 823, 918 and 919 belong to the plaintiff has been vitiated by any erroneous proposition of law that he put before himself and apparently adopted with regard to the burden of proof.

Mr. Bose lastly argued that dag 700 has not been properly dealt with and that the learned Judge disposed of dag 700 in two lines. No doubt the learned Judge has not dealt with dag 700 at any length as he has done with regard to the other three dags. The explanation is I think that dag 700 is about a cottah in area while the area of the remaining three dags amounts to some eight bighas; it is quite possible that the parties did not attach very much importance to what amounts to 1/16th of the whole and very few arguments were addressed to the learned Judge. However, he has held that the plaintiff has proved his possession and his purchase from Madhab Kandar. This purchase was in 1316 more than 12 years before the institution of the suit. I do not think that it is necessary to find any thing further.

The result is this appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 933 of 1928, Decided on 24th January 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Pabna, D/- 26th July 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145 — No dispute likely to cause breach of peace—Proceedings can be struck off at any stage.

A Magistrate shall cancel the order initiating the proceeding under S. 145, if he is satisfied at any stage of the case that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. This the Magistrate is entitled to do at any stage of the case though these words are not expressly used in the section but the sense is conveyed by the use of the word "exist" in it : 30 Cal. 112 ; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1252 ; A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 795, Rel. on ; 30 Cal. 155, Ref. [P 329 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 145 (5)—Magistrate staying proceedings on information as to absence of likelihood of breach of peace—Magistrate's action is justified and he is not bound to record evidence of parties before ordering stay.

When the Magistrate is able to act upon the police report or other information in starting proceeding under S. 145, he is competent to stay further proceedings on similar information regarding absence of likelihood of breach of peace without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may adduce : A. B. C. Mitter, Romoni Mohan Chatterji and Tarapada Banerjee — for Opposite Party.

Suhrawardy, J.—In this case a rule has been issued on two grounds :

"(1) that Cl. 5 S. 145, Criminal P. C., has no application at this stage of the proceeding when both parties had filed their written statements and the learned Magistrate was enquiring into the question of possession ; (2) that the order complained of was illegal and without jurisdiction having been made behind the back of the petitioners and without giving them any opportunity of being heard and adducing their evidence."

The Magistrate after starting proceedings under S. 145, dropped them subsequently as it appeared to him from police report that likelihood of the breach of the peace no longer existed.

As regards the first ground it is argued that Cl. (5) to S. 145, applies only to the stage of the proceeding before written statements are filed by parties and that after they have been put in the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to stay his hand but that he is bound in law to decide the case on the question of possession. This ground is apparently suggested by the decision of this Court in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Baroda Kanto Chowdhury (1) where after a statement of the facts in the case it was casually remarked that when the Magistrate passed his final order dropping the proceedings no written statement had been filed by either party. That fact, however, did not influence the decision in that case. One would have thought that after the point raised in the case was settled by Manindra Nandi's case (1) there was hardly anything left to be argued. But the learned counsel for the petitioner says that the wording of sub-S. (5) lends support to the idea that a party is entitled to show that no dispute likely to cause breach of the peace exists only before he had filed his written statement. It is difficult to read that meaning into the sub-section which comes as a separate clause after all the other clauses dealing with the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate after starting proceedings are inserted. By this clause a right is given to any party interested in the dispute to show that a likelihood of the breach of the peace does not exist at any particular time and that if it is so, the Magistrate should cancel the order issued by him under sub-S. (1).

The argument which has been placed before us was raised in this shape in Manindra Nandy's case (1). There one of the grounds taken was that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to strike out the proceeding after having once instituted it and that it was incumbent upon him to use the statements if any put in by the parties, to hear parties, to receive evidence produced by them, to consider the effect of such evidence and then to decide whether if any one of the parties at the date of the institution of the proceedings was in possession of the subject-matter of the dispute. This ground was overruled. The same view has been taken in Madras on the line of the decision of this Court in Manindra Chandra Nandy's case (1) in Narasayya v. Venkiah (2). Manindra Nandy's case (1) was also followed in the case of Suryanarayana v. Ankinud Prosad (3) which lays down an important proposition namely, that when a Magistrate strikes off a proceeding under S. 145, on the ground that a likelihood of breach of the peace did not exist no party to the proceeding can challenge the propriety of such an order. On this ground also the petitioner is not entitled to question the order which has been passed by the Magistrate in this case. As was observed by Hill, J., in the Full Bench case of Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jabbar (4) at page 195 the object of the enactment of S. 145 is to prevent breach of the peace. The Magistrate is not primarily concerned with civil rights of the parties but he is advised to maintain them only for the purpose of averting a breach of the peace. The learned Judge said :

"The maintenance of the public peace was the object before the mind of the legislature and where that supreme object is in view there can be no question but that the convenience and even the rights of individuals must at times be sacrificed for its attainment."

It is also suggested that in the present case though the opposite party brought the matter to the notice of the Magistrate that there was on a certain date no likelihood of the breach of the peace, the Magistrate did not rely upon the evidence of that party but upon the report and evidence of the Sub-Inspector of Police. This ground was also suggested in Manindra Chandra Nandy's case (1) where it was observed :

"We are unable to understand why there should be any such limitation of the power of the Magistrate to stay his hand if he has become satisfied, whatever his source of information may have been, that the state of things does not exist which alone would give him jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry."

Referring to the wording of Cl. (5) it is clear that the Magistrate shall cancel the order initiating the proceeding if he is satisfied at any stage of the case that no such dispute exists. This the Magistrate is entitled to do at any stage of the case though these words are not expressly used in the section but the sense is conveyed by the use of the word "exist" in it. In my opinion this ground must fail. As regards the second ground, the answer has been partially given in considering the first ground. What happened was that the Magistrate examined the Police Inspector and on examining him he found that there was no likelihood of the breach of the peace at that time. He thereupon passed an order in the presence of both parties dropping the proceeding. As has been observed in the cases referred to above the petitioner had no absolute right to challenge order by means of evidence relating to the breach of the peace. It has been held in Suryanarayana v. Ankinud Prosad (3) that it is not obligatory for a Magistrate to take evidence before dropping the proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. It is pertinent to observe that when the Magistrate is able to act upon the Police Report or other information in starting proceeding under S. 145 there is no reason why he should not be competent to stay further proceedings on similar information without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may adduce. This ground also fails. The rule is discharged.

Graham, J.—I agree that the Rule should be discharged. It seems to me that the application of the petitioner is based upon a misconception of the nature of a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and of the position and status of the parties to such a proceeding. There is nothing in sub-S. 5, S. 145, Criminal P. C., which has the effect of limiting or restricting its operation to the earlier stages of the proceeding. The subsection appears to empower the Magistrate at any stage to cancel the proceeding if he is satisfied that no likelihood of a breach of the peace exists. I am further of opinion that no private party, whether he be a party before the Court or not has any locus standi to contest the propriety of the Magistrate's order.

Appeal No. 1546 of 1926, Decided on 24th July 1928, against appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Third Court, 24-Parganas, D/- 25th February 1926.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy 80 or 85 years ago.

To a tenancy having its origin 80 or 85 years ago provisions of Transfer of Property Act or Bengal Tenancy Act are not applicable.

(b) Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy created 80 years ago—Tenancy heritable and for agricultural purposes — Tenant is raiyat holding at fixed rate of rent and such tenant has right to cut trees, and has permanent and transferable right in his holding.

Where the rent of a tenancy created 80 or 85 years ago has been the same, and the tenancy is heritable and one for agricultural purposes, the tenant is a raiyat holding at a fixed rate of rent, and such tenant has the right to cut and appropriate trees from his land and has a permanent and transferable right in his holding : 21 C. W. N. 636, Foll. [P 331 C 1, 2]

Satindra Nath Roy Chaudhury—for Appellant.

Mon Mohan Banerjee—for Respondent.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit which was instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of a sum of Rs 25 as damages for certain trees that has been cut from a plot of land which defendant 1 held under under the plaintiff as tenant and also for an injunction restraining the said defendant from cutting the trees standing on the land, in future. The suit has been dismissed by both the lower Courts and the plaintiff has thereupon preferred this second appeal.

The plaintiff's case was that defendant 1 had been holding the land under a kabuliyat dated 1309 B. S. and that, in contravention of the terms of the said kabuliyat, the said defendant in collusion with other persons had cut down and removed five trees standing thereon. The defence of defendant 1 was that the tenancy was not created by the kabuliyat of 1309 B. S. but that it had been in existence for over 80 years and from the time of the father of the said defendant, that the tenancy consisted of an area of 2 bighas out of which defendant 1 had sold a quantity of land measuring  $1\frac{3}{4}$  bighas to one Kedar Nath Mukherji and had retained for himself the remaining land, namely, 5 cottas in area and further that defendant 1 had not cut any trees from the said land. On this defence being taken, the plaintiff impleaded as one of the defendants in the suit defendant 2 who was the person in whose name the purchase had been made by the said Kedar Nath Mukherjee. She also added as parties defendants to the suit two other persons, namely, defendants 3 and 4 on the allegation that they were servants of the said Kedar Nath Mukherjee.

The Munsif held that the tenancy was a very old one and had existed from the time of the father of defendant 1 who himself was about 80 years of age. He held further that the origin of the tenancy was not known, that rent had been uniformly paid for the tenancy at the rate of Rs. 3 ; that the kabuliyat of 1309 B. S. was a document which was not acted upon, that defendant 1 was a tenant holding at a fixed rate of rent and, under the law, therefore, he had the right to cut and appropriate the trees on the land and further that he had a permanent and transferable right and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree at all. The plaintiff, thereupon, as I have already stated, preferred an appeal. The Subordinate Judge who dealt with the appeal held that, in the absence of Kedar Nath Mukherjee as a defendant in the suit, the suit was not maintainable. The reasons that he gave for this decision were that Kedar Nath Mukherjee was the real purchaser and defendant 2 was his benamidar, that the holding was the ancestral holding of defendant 1, that defendant 1 himself had not cut any of the trees which were the subject of the suit, that if any tree had been cut, it had been cut by Kedar Nath Mukerjee and that therefore the suit was not maintainable in the absence of the said Kedar Nath Mukherji as a defendant therein.

Treating the case as one governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, as it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that it should be, I am of opinion that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge and the reasons that he has given for his decision are not sufficient. Questions might arise under S. 108, T. P. Act, as to whether by the mere fact that defendant 1 had made a transfer of a part of the land in favour of Kedar Nath Mukherjee, the said defendant was absolved from the statutory liabilities which arise under Cls. (m) and (o) of that section. I think, however, we are relieved of the necessity of considering this matter because the view that should be taken of this tenancy is that it is one to which neither the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act nor those of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable. The learned Subordinate Judge has said in his judgment that the holding is the ancestral holding of defendant 1. It does not appear that he has properly considered all the circumstances which should be taken into consideration in arriving at this finding and, therefore, it may well be contended, as it has been, that this finding of the learned Judge is not really a finding which is conclusive on the question. We have, therefore, looked into the evidence in this case and also the findings which have been recorded by the learned Munsif. The view that should be taken with regard to this matter, in my opinion, is that the tenancy is the ancestral holding of defendant 1 having had its origin more than 80 or 85 years ago, that the rent that has been paid for it has been a uniform rental of Rs. 3 only, that it has been used for agricultural purposes and that it has descended from the father of defendant 1 to defendant 1 himself.

As regards the kabuliyat of 1309 B. S. I am entirely in agreement with what the learned Munsif has said in his judgment. The kabuliyat came from the custody of defendant 1 himself and the explanation that was offered on behalf of the plaintiff, namely, that it had been taken away from her by defendant 3 has not been accepted as true by the learned Munsif. There are very good reasons why this explanation should not be accepted specially, as it appears that, in a subsequent suit which was instituted by the plaintiff for rent, this kabuliyat was not mentioned and the rent was claimed at the rate of Rs. 10 though the kabuliyat provides for a rent of Rs. 3 only. That suit terminated in a solenama and, although the defendant had to pay at the rate of Rs. 3 no reference whatsoever was made to the kabuliyat in the solenama the defendant's case being that Rs. 3 was the rent which had been paid all along for the holding. There are also other indications in the contents of the kabuliyat which would point to the conclusion that it was a document which was attempted to be created for the purpose of curtailing the right of defendant 1, but that it does not represent a genuine contract between the parties. On the whole I am in agreement with the view which the learned Munsif has taken as regards the validity of this document.

Once it is taken that the tenancy had its origin more than 80 or 85 years ago, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or of the Bengal Tenancy Act evidently would not be applicable to this tenancy and upon the facts to which I have referred, namely, that the rent has been the same, that the tenancy was heritable and that it was a tenancy for agricultural purposes, it is evident that defendant 1 should be regarded as a raiyat holding at a fixed rate of rent. It has been held in the case of Radhika Nath Ray v. Fakir (1) that such a tenant has the right to cut and appropriate trees from the land and has a permanent and transferable right in his holding. On these findings, it is not possible for the plaintiff to obtain a decree in the present suit. In that view of the matter, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Sarajuddin Ukih — Accused — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1382 of 1928, Decided on 5th February 1929, against order of 2nd class Magistrate, Munshiganj.

*Criminal P. C., S. 250 (1) and (2)—Without first writing out order of discharge Magistrate calling upon complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation and then combining order of discharge and order to pay compensation—Magistrate does not substantially contravene law.

Although under sub-Ss. (1) and (2) the law contemplates two different orders, still, in practice, if a Magistrate, without first writing out his order of discharge under sub-S. (1), calls upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation, and then combines in one order the order of discharge and the order to pay compensation, he does not contravene substantially the provisions of the law: 11 C.W.N. 62 S.N.; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1139 and A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 157, Dist. [P 332 C 2, P 333 C 1]

Jatis Chandra Guha—for Petitioner.

Judgment. — This rule has been issued to show cause why an order passed by Mr. S. C. Guha, Magistrate, 2nd Class, of Munshiganj, on the petitioner to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused in a case in which the petitioner was the complainant should not be set aside upon ground 1 stated in the petition. Ground 1 in the petition is in these words: For that in the absence of any finding to the effect that the case was a false and frivolous or vexatious one recorded by the trying Magistrate after reviewing the cause shown, the order under S. 250, Criminal P. C., is not warranted in law and it is liable to be set aside.

The facts are these: The Magistrate in the last paragraph of his judgment by which he discharged the accused persons and made the order complained of in this rule observed as follows:

"Considering the whole facts and circumstances of the case and the evidence adduced I find that the case is false and it is vexatious at the same time. I accordingly find that there are no materials for a charge and I accordingly discharge the accused under S. 253, Criminal P. C. and call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused under S. 250, Criminal P. C. The complainant has shown cause and he has traversed the points in his explanation which have been discussed in detail above. I have nothing more to add to show that his case is not a true one as alleged by him. I accordingly direct that the complainant should pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused under S. 250, Criminal P. C. in default to suffer simple imprisonment for two weeks."

The order complained of, it may be conceded at once, is quite in form being a combination of two orders by which the accused was ordered to be discharged and the petitioner was ordered to pay compensation. From the order, however, it appears that what the learned Magistrate did was that when he made up his mind to discharge the accused being of opinion that the case against him was false and vexatious, he called upon the petitioner to show cause why compensation should not be ordered. On that the complainant showed cause and the Magistrate took the cause that was shown into consideration and then wrote out his entire judgment in the last paragraph of which, quoted above, he discharged the accused and ordered the complainant to pay compensation. That is quite clear from the words in the passage quoted above, namely:

"The complainant has shown cause and he has traversed the points in his explanation which have been discussed in detail above. I have nothing more to add to show that his case is not a true one as alleged by him."

What the law contemplates under sub-S. (1), S. 250, is that when the Magistrate makes an order of discharge and is of opinion that the accusation against the accused is false and either frivolous or vexatious, he by his order of discharge, may call upon the complainant forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused. The law, therefore, under sub-S. (1) contemplates an order of discharge simultaneously with which may be passed an order calling upon the complainant forthwith to show cause. Sub-S. (2), S. 250, Criminal P. C. then says:

"The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which the complainant may show and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may direct that compensation should be paid and should he make such an order he has to record his reasons for passing it."

Under these two sub-sections therefore the law contemplates two different orders, but in practice what often happens is that the order of discharge is not written out until after the Magistrate has given the complainant an opportunity to show cause. This is exactly what has taken place in the present case.

It has been argued on behalf of the petitioner that the provisions of this section are mandatory and these provisions have got to be strictly complied with. This proposition cannot be disputed. But what is to be seen is whether all that the law enjoins the Magistrate to do as a matter of substance has been done in the present case. The law evidently contemplates firstly that the Magistrate at the time when he makes up his mind to discharge the accused, should also be of opinion that the case is a false one and is also either frivolous or vexatious and that it is a case in which he should proceed further for the purpose of awarding compensation; and secondly that when cause is shown by the complainant he has got to take that cause into consideration and then on consideration of the cause that is shown he has to ask himself again as to whether the case is really a false one and at the same time either frivolous or vexatious, and if he still sticks to that opinion then he can under the law make an order directing compensation. In the present case the passage from the judgment quoted above shows that the Magistrate was clearly of opinion that the case was false and vexatious. He says in the order that he has taken the explanation which the complainant offered that the case was a true one into consideration. He has then said that he has nothing more to add to show that the case was not a true one as was alleged in the explanation. He then proceeded to direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused. Under these circumstances although, strictly speaking, two orders ought to have been recorded, one under sub-S. (1) and the other under sub-S. (2), I am unable to find that any of the requisites was wanting on the part of the learned Magistrate.

My attention has been drawn to three reported decisions to which I shall presently refer. One of them is the case of Sekh Jonab Ali v Hira Lal Pasban (1). What happened in that case was that the provisions of Cl. (a), S. 250, as it stood in the Code before the amendment of 1923 were overlooked by the Magistrate. The Magistrate after calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation and on receiving the cause thus shown, merely stated that in his opinion the cause shown by the complainant was unsatisfactory and he did not place on the record what was the cause shown as he was bound to do under the law. In the present case the Magistrate has recorded in the order the substance of the cause that was shown, namely that the case was a true one. He has taken that fact into consideration and notwithstanding the cause thus shown he has adhered to the opinion which he previously formed, namely, that the case was a false and vexatious one.

The next case referred to, on behalf of the petitioner is the case of Thadiappun v. Veeraperumal Thevan A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1139. In that case as far as can be made out from the order of the Magistrate that is quoted in the judgment of the High Court, the Magistrate did not, when discharging the accused state that the case was a false and frivolous or vexatious one. He stated that as no case was made out against any of the accused he discharged them. He next added that two of the accused had been falsely added as accused persons without making any reference to the other element that is absolutely necessary to justify an order under S. 250, Criminal P. C., namely that the case was a frivolous or vexatious one; and when cause was shown he merely stated that the complainant had no sufficient cause to show. Upon these materials the Magistrate made an order under S. 250. In that case the High Court observed that the recording of the reasons for ordering compensation is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of the power under the section. That case bears no analogy to the case now before me.

Lastly, reliance has been placed upon a decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Deo Narain Mahata v. Chhatoo Raut a report of which will be found in A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 157 in which it is said that the direction contained in proviso (a), S. 250 of the Code (as it stood before this amendment of 1923, which was to the effect that the Magistrate shall record any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction is mandatory and the non-compliance of which vitiates the order. To the proposition of law as laid down in that case no exception can possibly be taken. But the facts of that case were that the Magistrate did not state in his order what the objection of the complainant was, nor was there anything in his order to show that he had considered such objection. He simply said in his judgment that the complainant filed a petition showing cause and that the cause shown was not reasonable at all. The case therefore stands on a widely different footing from the case which I have now to deal with.

I am of opinion upon the materials which the order of the Magistrate discloses and the reasons which he has given and recorded in that order, it cannot be said that the formal defect that there exists in the recording of the order has substantially contravened the provisions of the law. The Rule therefore, in my opinion, should be discharged and I order accordingly.

Sisir Coomar Ghosal and Gurudas Mukherji—for Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs the Port Canning and Land Improvement Company Ltd. in a suit instituted by them against the defendants for arrears of rent for the years 1319 to 1330 B. S. It appears that the plaintiff company served upon the defendants who were non-occupancy raiyats an agreement demanding a certain enhanced rent. The defendants did not agree to the enhancement. The plaintiffs consequently had to institute against the defendants proceedings under S. 46, Ben. Ten. Act, so far back as 28th March 1913. The Court of first instance which tried the suit dismissed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal, the lower appellate Court affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance. The matter was then carried in second appeal to the High Court and the High Court remanded the suit on 24th July 1919 for determining what the fair and equitable rent in respect of the holding would be. On 28th September 1921, the Munsiff determined the fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands in question. Against this decision, the tenants preferred an appeal to the District Judge. During the pendency of the appeal, on 5th November 1921, the tenants agreed to pay the enhanced rent as settled by the Munsiff subject to the result of the appeal. On 6th July 1923, the appeal of the tenants was dismissed. The present suit was instituted on 14th April 1924. The Court of first instance has allowed to the plaintiffs a decree for arrears of rent at the rate of Rs. 104-3-6 for the years 1327 and 1328 and at an enhanced rate of Rs. 159-6-3, for the years 1329 and 1330 B. S. with cesses at six pies in the rupee and interest at 12½ per cent per annum. Against this decision, an appeal was carried to the District Judge and the learned District Judge has affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance. Against this decree of affirmance by the lower appellate Court, a second appeal has been taken to this Court, as already stated, by the plaintiffs.

The main contention of the appellants before us has been that the Courts below have clearly erred in dismissing the suit of the plaintiff company for the years 1323 to 1326 and in allowing them arrears of rent for the years 1327 and 1328 at the old rate. It is said that the lower Courts should have granted a decree to the plaintiffs at the enhanced rate for the years 1323 up to 1328. The agreement of the appellants is based on the contention that, as the proceedings under S. 46, Ben. Ten. Act, ascertaining the fair and equitable rent were proceedings in the nature of a suit for enhancement of rent, the provisions of S. 154 of the said Act were attracted to the case and that consequently the plaintiff company were entitled to get rent at the enhanced rate from, at any rate, the year 1323 B. S. This argument assumes that the enhancement agreed to by the tenants respondents in this case was really an enhancement made by the Court. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine some of the provisions of the Act for the purpose of determining whether the enhancement in the present case which was agreed to on 5th November 1921 was an enhancement made by a decree of the Court so as to attract the provisions of S. 154. S. 43 says :

"The rent of a non-occupancy raiyat shall not be enhanced except by registered agreement or by agreement under S. 46."

It appears in this case that, after the Munsiff had determined the fair rent on 28th September 1921, the tenants agreed to pay the rent so determined within the meaning of S. 46 Cl. (7). S. 46 Cl. (7) states :

"If the raiyat agrees to pay the rent so determined, he shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at that rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement."

It is not necessary to quote the remaining part of this clause. The contention of the appellants that this enhancement was really made by the decree determining the fair and equitable rent under S. 46 loses its force when the scheme of the whole section is considered. S. 46 provides that the Court is to determine the fair and equitable rent of a non-occupancy raiyat and then, after the determination of such rent, if the raiyat does not execute the agreement and file it under sub-S. (3) he shall be deemed for the purposes of section to have refused to execute it. Sub-S. (7) says that if the raiyat agrees to pay the rent so determined, he shall be entitled to remain in occupation of the holding for five years from the date of the agreement. This shows that the agreement is to take effect from the date when it is entered into. It has been strenuously argued before us by the learned advocate for the appellants that this is not to be treated as a case of an agreement between the parties, that is, between the landlords and the tenants but it is to be treated as an election of an alternative order made by the Court which determined the fair and equitable rent. This is a contention to which I cannot agree. S. 43 in express terms states that the rent of a non-occupancy raiyat can be enhanced by agreement under S. 46 ; and that is the agreement which is referred to in S. 46 (7). The liability of the tenant to pay enhanced rent is not dependent on the decree which merely stops short after determining what the fair and equitable rent is. The liability really attaches from the time when the tenant agrees to pay the rent so determined. This view receives support from the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Wajihunnessa Begum v. Babu Lal (1) and I shall refer to some of the observations made by Sir Dawson-Miller, C. J., in that case which are pertinent to the present controversy. It is conceded that the case referred to is directly in point. The learned Chief Justice at p. 53 of the report expresses himself thus on the point with which we are now dealing :

"But it seems clear that the enhanced rent is payable at the latest from the date when the raiyat agrees to pay the rent determined by the Court. Sub-S. (7) does not in terms say from what date the enhanced rent should be payable. It merely states that the raiyat shall be entitled to remain in occupation of his holding at the enhanced rent for a term of five years from the date of the agreement. But, as his liability to pay the enhanced rent, only arises by reason of his agreement, it seems to me impossible to hold that he was under any liability to pay rent at the enhanced rate before that date. The fact that the defendants did not, in fact agree to pay the enhanced rent until a much later date than, that on which they might have been put to their election appears to have been due to the failure of the plaintiff to insist upon her rights. She could have compelled the defendants to pay the new rent or submit to ejectment as soon as the Munsiff's decision was given unless the Court ordered a stay which would only be granted on terms protecting the plaintiff's rights."

It seems to me clear on a consideration of the provisions of Ss. 43 and 46, Ben. Ten. Act, that the contention of the appellants must fail.

There is another consideration which inclines me to take the view that the appellant's contention is without force because the term of five years referred to in S. 46 (7) cannot possibly refer to five years subsequent to the time when proceedings under S. 46 were started in the year 1913, for, that period, according to this view, expired long before the date of the agreement. If the right is founded on agreement, as I think it is, it seems impossible to contend that the agreement would take effect, as in the present case, for about 8 or 9 years, prior to the date of the agreement. The appellants, however, will be entitled, in the view which I have expressed as to the date from which the tenants became liable to pay enhanced rent, to get such rent for nearly six months more from 19th Kartik to the end of Chaitra 1328.

The result is that the decrees of the Courts below are varied by directing that the plaintiffs shall get a decree for the sum which has been awarded to them by those Courts and also for an excess sum of Rs. 25-5-0. Subject to this variation, the appeal will stand dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Criminal Revn. No. 983 of 1928, Decided on 18th December 1928, against order of Honorary Magistrate, Sealdah, D/- 9th November 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 488 — Proceeding in wrong district — Magistrate otherwise competent—Final order is not vitiated.

Where a Magistrate who dealing with the proceedings under S. 488 is empowered by law to deal with the application for maintenance under S. 488, passed a final order it is not vitiated merely by reason of the fact that the proceedings were held in a wrong district.

Judgment.—The foundation of this Rule is the allegation that the petitioner had no notice of the proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C. that were held in the Court of the Magistrate who made the final order in 1927. As regards this matter it appears to us that the allegations which the petitioner has made in his application for revision to this Court are not correct. We are satisfied upon a perusal of the two reports of the serving peon as well as on his evidence that was given in those proceedings that the notices in connexion therewith were personally served upon the petitioner. If this fact has been established as in our opinion it has been, then the only question is whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with those proceedings under the provisions of Sub-S. 8 of S. 488, Criminal P. C. That subsection says that,

“proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife” etc. The proceedings undoubtedly were taken in the District of 24 Parganas. The petitioner at that time admittedly was residing in Calcutta. But it is alleged on behalf of the opposite party that it was within the 24 Parganas that the petitioner had last resided with his wife. The allegation, however, is denied on behalf of the petitioner. It is not necessary for us to come to a definite finding on this question, because even if it be assumed that it has not been established that the petitioner had last resided prior to those proceedings with his wife within the jurisdiction of 24-Parganas, the final order which the Magistrate has made under S. 488, Criminal P. C., would not be vitiated simply for that reason. In our opinion S. 531, Criminal P. C., should apply to the case and the order which the learned Magistrate passed under S. 488, Criminal P. C., would not be vitiated merely because the proceedings were held in a wrong District. It has been urged on behalf of the petitioner that S. 530 (n), Criminal P. C., would apply to the case and, therefore, the proceedings should be held to be void. We are unable to agree in this contention, because the Magistrate who dealt with these proceedings undoubtedly was empowered by law to deal with the application for maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C.

In this view of the matter we are of opinion that there is no substance in this Rule and that it should be discharged.

—for Respondent.Mitter, J.—The substantial question of law raised by this appeal is whether under the Bengal School of Hindu Law a person who has inherited the property of his father on the latter's death is divested of that inheritance by his being subsequently adopted by his paternal uncle.
The appellant contends that he is so divested, on the other hand the respondent contends that he is not. Both the Courts below have given effect to the contention of the respondent. The question in this appeal is whether those decisions are right.The relevant facts on which the question of law depends are not now in dispute. They may briefly be stated thus :
Govinda Chatterjee and Prosanna Chatterjee were two brothers governed by the Bengal School of Hindu law. Govinda granted a lease to his brother of certain lands which constituted a tenure. These lands belonged exclusively in proprietary right to Govinda who died in the year 1883. Govinda left behind him two sons Shyamacharan (plaintiff, now appellant) and Sricharan (defendant, now respondent) as his heirs and legal representatives.

1929 C/43 &amp; 44

The plaintiff and the defendant consequently became entitled to the proprietary right in equal moieties in the lands under which Prosanna, their uncle, held the tenure and each became entitled to get half of the rental from Prosanna. A year after the death of Govinda his widow gave the defendant Sricharan in adoption to her husband's brother Prosanna.
The name of the plaintiff, however, appears in the land revenue register as possessing two annas share in Taluq Nos.
3322 and 3382 under which the tenure in question is held. The plaintiff brought the suit in which this appeal arises for the rent of the tenure as the sole heir of his father. The defence of the defendant is that plaintiff is only entitled to a half share of the rent as he was given in adoption after the property in respect of which the rent suit has been instituted vested in him by inheritance, and that his subsequent adoption by his uncle could not divest him of this inheritance.
The defendant has also raised other defences which will be mentioned when I shall deal with the other points raised by this appeal. As I have said already the Courts below have given effect to the defence and have dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the rent for the four years 1327 to 1330 B. S. in plaintiff's half share had been satisfied. Hence the plaintiff has appealed.It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the effect of the adoption of the defendant by his uncle was to sever his connexion with his natural family so completely that he was to give up everything connected with the family, that he was civilly dead so far as his natural family was concerned which means as if he has never been born in the family of his natural father Govinda. It is argued that the logical result is that Govinda's estate devolved on the plaintiff who must be regarded as the only son of Govinda in view of the fiction of Hindu law that the defendant must be taken to have never been born in the family of his natural father. It is said that the decision of Mr. Ameer Ali, J., as he then was, in the case of Behari Lal v. Kailash Chunder (1) which takes a contrary view is wrong. Reliance is placed on the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Dattatraya v. Gobinda (2), which was a case governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law as modified by the Mayukha School. In that case it was held that when a boy is given in adoption he loses all the rights he may have acquired to the property of his natural father including the right to property which has become exclusively vested in him before the date of his adoption. It is based upon a text of Manu which I shall refer to later and which has been read as giving effect to the fundamental idea underlying the adoption viz., that the boy given in adoption gives up the natural family and everything connected with the family and takes his place in the adoptive family as if he has been born there, as far as possible. Stress is laid on the circumstances that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has in a recent case see: Raghuraj v. Subhadra (3), applied the principle of the Bombay decision and has quoted the same with approval. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine to what state of circumstances their Lordships of the Judicial Committee applied the fundamental principle laid down in the Bombay case and whether it was the intention of their Lordships to go back upon another well established principle laid down by their Lordships in the case of Maniram v. Kollitani (4), namely that an estate once vested under the Hindu Law cannot be divested. In the case in Raghuraj v. Subhadra (3) the question arose with regard to the succession to an Oudh Taluqa. The question was whether on the death intestate of a Hindu holder, the ceremonially adopted son of the preceding holder, his natural brother could be regarded as a "brother" within the meaning of the Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869 as subsequently amended) in view of the fact that according to the Hindu Law the adoption operated as a re-birth. The Judicial Committee held: "that if the natural brother of the ceremonially adopted son of the previous holder were to be made the heir to the taluk, how could he still a member of his family of birth and bound to make the necessary offerings for his own ancestors, be qualified to be the same thing for his brother and his adoptive father and that father's immediate predecessors? If he cannot, how is the legal theory squared with the termination of the ceremonies in the family into which the son was adopted."

(1) [1897] 1 O. W. N. 121.

(4) [1880] 5 Cal. 776=7 I. A. 115=6 C. L. R. 322 (P.C.).

It is in connexion with this state of circumstances that the Judicial Committee quoted with approval the remarks of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in the case already referred to, viz.,

"the fundamental idea is that the boy given in adoption gives up the natural family and everything connected with the family."

At the same time their Lordships pointed out that the expressions

"Civilly dead or as if he had never been born in his family," are not for all purposes correct or logically applicable, but they are complimentary to the term "new birth." Their Lordships' decision must be read by keeping in view what has been said in the case of Quinn v. Leatham (5) that a case is authority for what it actually decides and not for what would seem to flow logically from it for the law is not always logical at all. There is nothing in the judgment of the Judicial Committee which would go to show that their Lordships approved of the actual decision in the Bombay case which lays down the broad proposition contended for by the appellant. Under the Dayabhaga system of Hindu law the son on the death of his father obtains an absolute right to his share in the property of his father. His father's right to such property is extinguished by his death and the son's right in the property is created on the father's death. It is difficult to imagine how a person by reason of his being adopted subsequent to his father's death can be deprived of property which at the time of his adoption was his own. It is to be noticed that the Bombay High Court in the year 1922 held that a person governed by the Mitakshara law does not on his adoption lose the share which he has already obtained on partition from his natural father and brothers in his family of birth: see Mahableswar v. Subramanya (6) and the same Court in the case of Manik Bai v. Gokul Das Ramdas (7) held that the adoption of a married Hindu, the sole owner of ancestral property acquired by survivorship on the death of his father, does not deprive his daughter of her right of inheritance to that property. It was pointed out in that case by Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., that by his adoption Ram Das lost all rights of inheritance in his natural family as if he had died but it was quite unnecessary to add a further fiction viz., as if he had never been born in the family. It is difficult to reconcile the case in Mahableswar v. Subramanya (6) with the broad view taken in the case in Dattatraya v. Gobinda (2). In the case of Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya (8) the learned Judges followed the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Behari Lal v. Kailash Chunder (1) and after examining the texts of Hindu law held that the adoption into another family of the only surviving member of a joint family in whom the family estate vested solely and absolutely does not in law operate to divest him of his rights in such estate. Reliance has been placed on a text of Manu in regard to which there is a difference in the translation as given by Sir William Jones and that given by Mr. Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri. I will give the two translations side by side Mr. Sarkar's translation is as follows :

"The adopted son is not to take away (with him when he is passing from the family of his birth to that of adoption), the Gotra and Riktha of the progenitor; the pinda is follower of the Gotra and the Riktha; the Swadha (or spiritual food) goes away absolutely from the giver."

Sir William Jones's version is as follows:

"A given son must never claim the family and estate of his natural father; the funeral cake follows the family and estate; but of him, who has given away the son the funeral oblation is extinct".

Mr. Sarkar on the basis of his translation was of opinion that the adopted son's existing proprietary right in a natural father's property becomes extinguished otherwise, says the learned author :

"Why should he not take away with him such property or his share in the same when he is leaving the progenitor's family for joining the adopter's family?" see Hindu law p. 243 (6th Edn.).

But it is to be noticed that this view is directly opposed to Mr. Sarkar's earlier view as stated in Tagore's lecture on adoption 1888 published in 1899, pp. 389 and 390. It is conceded that the adopted son would take away with him his own self-acquired property and it is difficult to see why he should not take away with him property to which he is absolutely entitled although he has acquired such property by inheritance from his natural father. The authors of Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika cite the text of Manu and explain the same by stating that from the very act of giving (in adoption), the extinction of the giver's son's proprietary right in the giver's property and the extinction of the giver's gotra—take place. With regard to these texts we agree with the observations of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Venkata Narasimha v. Rangayya (8). The learned Judges said :

"We do not think that there is anything in these passages which necessarily carries with it the idea that the adopted son is divested of property which is his own absolutely at the time of adoption. The more correct view seems to be that by the adoption the filial relationship as the author of the Chandrika says, is extinguished in one family and is created in the other family, and that thereafter the person adopted cannot claim or take any property in his natural family by virtue of the extinguished filial relationship therein. The fact that under the Dayabhaga law in force in Bengal a son has no vested coparcenary interest with his father in ancestral property and that his interest in ancestral property of the father only accrues on the father's death rather favours the view that Mimangsha when adopting the interpretation of the Chandrika had in mind the loss of rights that might accrue after the date of adoption rather than rights to property which had already vested".

In the case of Maniram Kolita (4) referred to above their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows with regard to the proprietary right of a son by inheritance from his father under the Dayabhaga school of Hindu law :

"The proprietary right of a son by inheritance from his father is expressly ordained, because the wealth devolving upon sons benefits the deceased (Dayabhaga Chap. 11, S. 1 Vol. 38) and the right of succession of other heirs to the property is also founded on competence for offering oblations at obsequies (18th verse); see also verse 32. "But a son, even if by the mere fact of his birth he delivers his father from the hell called put, is according to the Dayabhaga, excluded from certain causes from inheritance in the same manner as other heirs (see the Dayabhaga, Chap. 5, paras. 4 5 and 6), but, if he once succeeds, the estate is not divested for anything less than degradation, though causes which would have excluded him if they had existed before succession arise after the estate has descended."

It will thus appear that nothing short of degradation can deprive a Dayabhaga son of property inherited from his father. Even if the case in 40 Bom. be regarded as good law this does not assist the appellant as the decision was based on the peculiar constitution of the Mitakshara joint family by which right to property of the father arises from the birth of the son and is liable to be divested if the son is transferred from the joint family to some other family by adoption which causes the extinction of the filial relationship if the adoption takes place during the lifetime of the father. The 40 Bom. case has gone a step further and has held that the same rule applies where the adoption takes place after the death of the father. Under the Dayabhaga law after the son succeeds absolutely there is no divestment except in the extreme case of degradation which is provided for by the Dayabhaga Chap. 1, paras. 31, 32 and 33 which provides that the son's degradation of his being deprived of caste causes an extinction of all his property, whether acquired by inheritance, succession, or in any other manner. The text of Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika are equivocal even if the view most favourable to the appellant is taken. There is nothing in the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Raghuraj v. Subhadra (3) which compels us to hold that their Lordships expressed their approval of the actual decision in the Dattatraya v. Gobinda (2).

For the reasons given above we think that the view taken by the Courts below is right and this ground of appeal must fail.

It remains to notice the minor points raised on this appeal. It is said that even if the defendant has got the right to moiety share of the rent that right has become extinguished by the adverse possession by the plaintiff for more than the statutory period as defendant has not taken any share of the rent since his natural father's death. The findings of the lower appellate Court on this part of the case are conclusive against the appellant. His findings are: (1) The same Tahsildar used to collect rents both for plaintiff and defendant and their mutual dues to be adjusted by him by set-off, (2) collection papers of the plaintiff were not produced and there is nothing to show plaintiff realized more than his half share of rent. No interception of rent and profits for more than 12 years has been established on the side of the plaintiff. The ground of adverse possession consequently fails.

The next ground urged for the appellant is that as the plaintiff is the sole registered proprietor in respect of the two annas share of the Taluqs within which the tenure in question is situate defendant is bound to pay the entire rent to the plaintiff appellant having regard to the provisions of S. 78, Land Registration Act (7 of 1876) B. C. read with S. 60, Ben. Ten. Act. S. 60 in terms does not apply as the defendant is not setting up the title of a third person to receive the half share of the rent but setting up title to recover such moiety share in himself. All the grounds urged in appeal fail which must be dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—I have examined the record in this case and have perused with attention the opinions of the differing Judges. As far as I know, the practice of this Court has been not to interfere on petitions of private complainants praying for enhancement of the sentence passed on the accused. It will not be understood from what I have just said that the High Court has not the power to interfere on the application of a private complainant. The powers of the High Court are extremely wide. But it is an elementary proposition that wider the power, the more cautious must be the exercise of that power and, in the cautious exercise of that power, it has been laid down by eminent Judges from time to time that it is a safe working rule not to interfere on petitions for enhancement of sentences.

passed on accused persons made on behalf of private complainants. But the position in this case is this: the present application is not for the issue of a Rule calling upon the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. A Rule has been issued by the High Court. It is not for me to say whether the Rule should have been issued or not. It is sufficient for me to take note of the fact that a Rule has been issued and it is, therefore, my obvious duty to go into the facts and ascertain for myself whether, in the circumstances of this case, the sentence should be enhanced. That is the sole duty which is before me at the present moment. Now, on that point, I cannot help saying that, in the circumstances of this particular case, the sentence of fine imposed by the trial Court should not have been reduced by the Sessions Judge. Mr. Das Gupta who appears on behalf of the accused states that, inasmuch as the High Court does not ordinarily interfere on the application of a private complainant, I should not interfere on this occasion with the order passed by the Sessions Judge. As indicated above, much of the importance which would otherwise have attached to Mr. Das Gupta's contention has been lessened by reason of the issue of the Rule by my learned brothers Costello and Lort-Williams, JJ.

As I said a few moments ago, the High Court can interfere on the application of a private complainant but it does not ordinarily so interfere. The High Court for the matter of that can interfere of its own motion. But having regard to the fact that the Rule was issued by the High Court, while I am not unmindful of what has been contended before me, it is my obvious duty to look into the record for myself and come to the conclusion as to whether or not the sentence should be enhanced. I am of opinion that the sentence imposed by the trial Court should not have been reduced and, in that view of the matter, I enhance the sentence of fine passed on the accused from Rs. 200 to 500 and, in default of payment, direct the accused to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of three months.

* Criminal P. C., S. 145—Magistrate has no jurisdiction to initiate proceedings under S. 145 where the dispute between the parties is likely to cause breach of peace not at the time but only at some future date (e. g. 2 months hence).

The words "dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists" mean that the dispute must exist and it should be of such a character as is likely to cause a breach of the peace unless proceedings are now taken under S. 145. And so where the breach of the peace is not likely to be caused at the time but only at some future date (e. g., 2 months hence) the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to initiate proceedings under the section: 33 Cal. 33; 33 Cal. 352 (F.B.) Ref.; 7 C. L. R. 352; 7 Cal. 385; 4 W. R. 26; 8 C. W. N. 590; 11 C. W. N. 198 and 11 C. W. N. 835, Rel. on. [P 343 C 1, 2]

N. K. Basu and Rajendra Bhusan Bakshi—for Petitioners.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been issued upon several grounds one of which in my opinion is enough to dispose of this matter. That is:

"That the police report not having disclosed any apprehension of a breach of the peace at the time the proceedings were drawn up the said proceedings were without jurisdiction."

It appears on a reference to the proceedings drawn up by the Magistrate that he relied upon a report of the Sub-Inspector of Police of the Murari Police Station dated 24th June 1928, for holding that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existed between the parties. The police report upon which the learned Magistrate relies says:

"The work on the disputed lands by the first party has been stopped on account of monsoon since about a month ago and so no breach of the peace is apprehended at present but there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace for the disputed lands after the present monsoon."

The question is whether this report upon which alone the learned Magistrate relies for drawing up proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., discloses the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace so as to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to act under that section. The dispute between the parties is with regard to quarrying boulders for ballast purposes and this obviously could not be done during the monsoon when the police report was submitted.

It is now settled that in order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to exercise the quasi civil powers conferred upon him by S. 145, Criminal P. C., he must rely for the initiation of the proceedings upon such materials as would disclose the existence of a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace. Now the words used in the section are "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists." We have to give a reasonable and natural meaning to those words. It is to be seen whether the section requires that there should be a dispute in existence which is likely to cause a breach of the peace at any time or whether the dispute should be such that it is likely to cause a breach of the peace at the time when the proceedings are drawn up. From very early times since this provision of the law came under judicial interpretation it has been held that the dispute must be such as is likely to cause a breach of the peace at the time. In some cases it is said that this likelihood should be "imminent" or "immediate." It has been observed in Kulada Kinkar Roy v. Danesh Mir (1), that the introduction of the word "imminent" into the section, giving it a stronger significance than the words used there bear, is not justifiable. That may be correct though the word "imminent" was used in the Full Bench case of Khos Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (2) in the judgment of Ghose, J. It has been used in various other cases but what the learned Judges always meant by it was the presence of a likelihood of the breach of the peace at the time when the proceedings were drawn up. It does not seem to be reasonable that the word "dispute" should be read apart from the qualifying words "likely to cause a breach of the peace." A dispute may exist which is likely to cause a breach of the peace at any future time (may be years thence). But what the criminal law is concerned with, to make a breach of the peace a ground for its interference is such likelihood as is present at the time. We have got the high authority of Garth, C. J., in

Uma Charan Santra v. Beni Madhab Roy (3), the facts of which case are very similar to those of the present case. There the Magistrate acted upon the report of a cannungoe which said that the first party was in actual possession of the disputed land; that no present apprehension of a breach of the peace existed; but that in the absence of an order under S. 530 a breach of the peace was likely to occur at a time when the cultivation of the disputed lands would be proceeded with. The learned Chief Justice observed that the report upon which the learned Magistrate had relied disclosed no present danger of a breach of the peace although it suggested that probably at the time of the cultivation which would be some 3 or 4 months afterwards there might be a danger of that kind. He then said:

"It is clear that if there was no likelihood of breach of the peace at the time when the order was made the probability of a breach of the peace some 3 or 4 months later did not justify the Deputy Magistrate in making the order."

The same view has been expressed by another eminent Judge Mitter, J., in Damodur Biddyadur v. Syamanund Dey (4) where the learned Judge said:

"A Magistrate would have no jurisdiction under S. 530 (S. 145 of the present code) unless he was satisfied that there exists a dispute concerning lands and which dispute is likely to induce a breach of the peace that is, there must be a reasonable apprehension that a disturbance of the peace is likely to occur, rendering it necessary for the Magistrate to take immediate action under S. 530, Criminal P. C., to prevent the apprehended breach of the peace."

For this view the learned Judge has relied upon a number of decisions beginning with Hervey v. Brice (5). The same view was adopted in Janu Manjhi v. Maniruddin (6) where the word "immediate" is used in place of "imminent." In Surja Kanta v. Jagadindra Nath (7) and in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Raja Ranjit Singh (8), where the police report said that though there was nothing to show that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace, it was not impossible that there might be a breach of the peace. It is better to avoid the use of words like "imminent" or "immediate" which have been objected to but what I understand by the use of the words "dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists," is that the dispute must exist and it should be of such a character as likely to cause a breach of the peace unless proceedings are now taken under S. 145, Criminal P. C. In other words, proceedings are to be taken under that section in order to avert a breach of the peace which would otherwise take place due to the existence of a dispute between the parties. As I have pointed out, the police report on which the Magistrate relies does not show that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace at the time when the proceedings were drawn up by it but it shows that there was a possibility of a collision between the parties at a future time namely, about two months from that date. The learned Magistrate has in his explanation referred to several circumstances which had happened before drawing up the proceedings showing that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. The proceedings would have been in order if reference were made to those circumstances. But the learned Magistrate who is not the Magistrate who has submitted the explanation relies solely upon a report which does not show that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace existing at the time.

On this ground alone this rule, in my judgment, must be made absolute and the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., drawn up by the learned Magistrate on 26th June 1928, must be set aside. It will be of course open to the Magistrate to draw up fresh proceedings upon sufficient materials if the likelihood of a breach of the peace still exists.

Graham, J.—The rule in this case was issued on three grounds. I agree that it should be made absolute on the first of those grounds which briefly stated is that the proceedings were without jurisdiction. It is well settled that it is the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace which confers jurisdiction on the Magistrate to initiate the proceedings. The word used in the section is "exists" and there can be no doubt that the dispute existed. It is clear, however, from the police report that there was at the time no likelihood of any breach of the peace, and indeed that no such likelihood had existed for about a month previous to the submission of the police report. All that was disclosed in that report was that there was a likelihood at some future date of a breach of the peace. That according to the current of decisions in this Court was not sufficient to give jurisdiction. For these reasons I agree with my learned brother that this rule must be made absolute.

SUHRAWARDY AND GRAHAM, JJ.

Abdur Rashid and others—Accused—Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1378 of 1928, Decided on 24th January 1929.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—High Court can enquire into validity of reasons for discharging jury.

In view of the wide provisions of S. 439 of the Code it is difficult to say that the High Court is debarred from enquiring into the validity of the reasons for discharging a jury. [P 344 C 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C. S. 282—Jury—Judge has inherent power to discharge jury on suspicion when satisfied that reasonable grounds exist for exercise of his discretion.

Though the Code of Criminal Procedure has not specifically conferred any right on the Judge to discharge a jury on the ground of misconduct yet every Judge has an inherent power to discharge a jury when he is satisfied by such enquiry as in the circumstances he can adopt that reasonable grounds exist for exercising the discretion vested in him to discharge a jury on suspicion: A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 724, Foll.; A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 57, Rel. on.

(c) Criminal P. C. S. 276—Jury—Discharged jurors should not be recalled in same case to act as jurors.

A jury having once been discharged should not be recalled to do duty as jurors in the same case as it is reasonable to suppose that after their discharge the jurors might have mixed freely with the people and talked about the case with others and formed decided opinions about the case: A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 199, Foll.

(d) Criminal P. C. S. 282—Jury—Grounds for discharging jury.

Suspicion in the mind of a Public Prosecutor is not and could never be recognized as a good or valid ground for discharging a jury. Something much more definite and tangible than this is necessary. [P 345 C 2]

Sures Chandra Taluqdar and Mahendra Kumar Ghose—for Petitioners.

Sachindra Nath Banerjee—for the Crown.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been issued on two grounds: (1) that the order of the Additional Sessions Judge discharging the jury and directing a fresh trial of the petitioners is wrong and should be set aside; and (2) why the case should not be transferred from Noakhali to Comilla.

As regards the first ground the facts are that the trial went on for a long time and the argument on behalf of the defence was finished and while the Public Prosecutor was arguing on behalf of the Crown an application was filed by the Public Prosecutor for discharging the jury. The facts mentioned in the application were that one of the jurors had called at the house of the Public Prosecutor and that two others were seen talking to a person belonging to the accused party. The application was supported by affidavits and the learned Additional Sessions Judge thereupon examined the pleader Babu Ashutosh Mukherjee and a juror M. Abdul Khaleque. He did not institute a searching enquiry but after examining these witnesses he was of opinion that it was a case of (at least) suspicion and, therefore, he thought it necessary in the interest of justice to discharge the jury. The learned advocate on behalf of the accused argues that the learned Judge should have instituted a regular enquiry into the matter and then if he was satisfied that there was reason to believe that the jurors would not be impartial and would be influenced or if there had been good grounds for suspecting their integrity he could then and then only have discharged the jury. It is regrettable that the trial went on for over 32 days and the case was on the point of being finished when this untoward incident occurred. On behalf of the Crown it is argued that a Judge presiding over the Sessions has absolute right to determine the propriety of discharging a jury and his discretion cannot be questioned either in appeal or in revision. The English law on the point certainly favours this view. It was at one time held that the reasons which led a Judge to discharge a jury may be scrutinized by a Court of appeal or in revision: see Edmond Conway and Patrick Lynch v. The Queen (1) Subsequently this view was disapproved in Windsor v. Regina (2) by the Original Court and also on appeal from that case reported in the same volume at p. 390. The law as it stands in England is that a Judge may at his discretion discharge a jury even though there may not exist "absolute" necessity for doing it but a high degree of necessity for such a discharge is evident. In the King v. Ketheridge (3), one of the jurors separated himself from his colleagues by mistake. It was held that it was a sufficient reason to justify the order of the Judge for discharging the jury and that it was not necessary or relevant to consider whether the irregularity has in fact, prejudiced the prisoner. It is not necessary for us to go so far as to hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to enquire into the reasons which led the Judge to discharge the jury. In view of the wide provisions S. 439, Criminal P. C., it is difficult to say that this Court is debarred from enquiring into the validity of the reasons for discharging a jury. In some cases in England a Court of appeal had occasion to question the propriety of the reasons for discharging a jury: see Regina v. John Barff Charlesworth (4).

Mr. Taluqdar for the accused says that the learned Judge has nowhere expressed his opinion that the jury had acted in such a way as to justify a conclusion that they were not impartial. But it appears from the order of the learned Judge that to his mind it was apparent that some attempts had been made to influence three of the jurors, and that the materials placed before the Court were sufficient to show that the Public Prosecutor had reasonable grounds for suspicion against three of the jurors. Though the learned Judge would have been well advised to push the enquiry a little further but when he discovered that there were good grounds for suspecting the impartiality of some of the jurors, it was not only discretionary on his part but it was incumbent on him to discharge the jury in order to give the trial a look of fairness. That the Judge has the right to discharge the jury under circumstances which in his opinion justifies the course has been approved of or tacitly admitted in this Court in the case of Rahim Sheikh v. Emperor (5).

where it has been held that though the Code of Criminal Procedure has not specifically conferred any right on the Judge to discharge a jury on the ground of misconduct but every Judge has an inherent power to discharge a jury when he is satisfied by such enquiry as in the circumstances he can adopt that reasonable grounds exist for exercising the discretion vested in him to discharge a jury on suspicion. A similar view was expressed in Rebati Mohan Chakravarty v. Emperor (6). There is another fatal objection to Mr. Taluqdar's request to recall the same jury and continue the trial by them. A jury having once been discharged should not be recalled to do duty as jurors in the same case for apparent reasons. It is reasonable to suppose that after their discharge the jurors might have mixed freely with the people and talked about the case with others. In Emperor v. Monmotha Nath (7), it was held that a jury once discharged should not with propriety be recalled in the same case on these grounds I dispose of Mr. Taluqdar's first objection and disallow it.

With regard to the second objection relating to transfer the application is opposed by the Crown and the reason given to me is that Noakhali is an easier access from the residence of the accused and the witnesses than Comilla. There is another strong reason for not allowing the case to be transferred from Noakhali and that is that the occurrence took place in the district of Noakhali and the investigation was held by the local police who are apparently in charge of the case. No ground has been made out for the transfer of the case and this prayer is also disallowed.

The result is that the rule is discharged. Let the papers be sent down at once with the request that the trial may be commenced as early as possible. I regret very much that after such a protracted trial the case had to be tried anew; but in the circumstance of this case there is no other alternative.

Graham, J.—I agree. In my opinion the only course open to us in the circumstances which have happened in this case is to direct a fresh trial before another Jury. It is a most unfortunate case. The charges were under Ss. 302/149, 326 and 324, I. P. C., and the trial lasted nearly three months from 21st June 1928 till 13th September 1928. 23 witnesses were examined for the prosecution, and 12 for the defence. Arguments were then heard on eight days, and on 7th September after the Public Prosecutor had addressed the Court on four of these dates without apparently concluding his remarks he filed an application, at the 11th hour so to speak, asking that the jury should be discharged upon certain grounds and having reference to incidents alleged to have happened on 4th and 5th September.

The learned Judge thereupon after some sort of enquiry recorded an order discharging the jury. There is no provision in Criminal Procedure Code for discharging a jury for misconduct the only sections of the Code relating to the discharge of a jury before verdict being Ss. 282 and 283. It has been held, however, by this Court in Rahim Sheik v. Emperor (5) that a Sessions Judge has inherent power to make such an order.

It is a serious matter, however, to discharge a jury, and it seems to me that the learned Judge before taking so important a step should have made a full and careful enquiry. I regret to say that he does not appear to have done so. For example the Public Prosecutor was not examined, though he was obviously a material witness, and indeed it was upon the alleged suspicions of that officer that the learned Judge based his order. It seems to be clear too that the Judge cannot have properly appreciated what is necessary in order to justify such a serious step as the discharge of the jury. For he observes as follows:

"The materials placed before the Court are sufficient to show that the Public Prosecutor has reasonable grounds for suspicion against three of the jurors."

Suspicion in the mind of a Public Prosecutor is not and could never be recognized as a good or valid ground for discharging a jury. Something much more definite and tangible than this is necessary.

But though I think the order cannot be supported, it seems to me to be quite out of the question to set it aside and direct the trial to be resumed before the same jury. There are two reasons why that course cannot be adopted, firstly because an interval of over four months has elapsed since the trial came to its abrupt end and because the jury have by this time presumably forgotten all about the evidence. Even if that evidence were read over to them in order to refresh their memory it could never be the same thing. Matters connected with the demeanour of witnesses should be fresh in the minds of a jury when they are called upon to give their verdict.

(6) A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 57=56 Cal. 150.

The second reason is that in the interval the case may have been the theme of discussion in the neighbourhood, and the members of the jury may have formed decided views on the case one way or the other. In this connexion I may refer to the case of Emperor v. Monmotha Nath Mitter (7) and in particular to the remarks made by the learned Chief Justice at p. 147 thereof. The present case is a good deal stronger than that case. For the reasons which I have stated the case cannot, despite the time which has already been spent over it, be allowed to be tried before the same jury. There may be some doubt too whether we can set aside such an order when once it has been made. But we can, and I think ought, to direct a de novo trial before a fresh jury, and if possible before another Judge.

Before parting with the case I should like to say that it seems to me to be nothing short of a scandal that the trial of this case, a case of no particular importance and with no special features, should have taken up nearly three months of the time of the Sessions Court. The advocate for the defence addressed the Court on five days occupying about four whole days in so doing, and the prosecution took another four days. To my mind this exceeds the limits of reasonable advocacy. It is only right and proper that both sides should have time to place their arguments fairly before the Court and indeed they have a right to do so, but that right is abused when no less than eight days of the Court's time are taken up. Some restraint should be exercised in these matters. Ordinarily a day, or at the utmost two days should be sufficient for both sides to say what there is to be said in a case of this description.

There was also a prayer for transfer but no sufficient ground has in my opinion been made out for such an order. I may observe in conclusion that a perusal of the order sheet appears to show that the defence in this case was conducted in what I can only describe as a contumacious and objectionable spirit frequent petitions being filed before the Judge some of them questioning his rulings, and many of them being of a frivolous nature. If it had not been for this attitude on the part of the defence it is possible that the trial would have concluded before the events which from the subject-matter of this Rule happened, if indeed they took place as alleged. For the reasons given I agree with my learned brother that the Rule should be discharged.

Hazi Fazley Karim—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No 1222 of 1928, Decided on 22nd January 1929, against decision of 3rd Presidency Magistrate, Northern Division, Calcutta.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 4 (b)—Complaint alleging commission of offence and praying for police investigation in non-cognizable case, is a valid complaint.

In a complaint of a non-cognizable case to a Magistrate after the allegations that the accused had committed an offence the prayer was worded thus: "Under the circumstances complainant prays that your Honour would be pleased to order the D. D. Police to cause an enquiry to be made into the matter and the allegations made against the complainant and to submit the report of the same to your Honor. And, for the time being, your petitioner reserves the right of bringing a case of defamation against the accused in future."

Held: that the petition satisfies the definition of complaint as given in S. 4 (b), Criminal P. C. [P 347 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 68—Prayer for issue of summons can be orally made.

Under the law a verbal prayer for issue of summons to an accused is sufficient.

(c) Criminal trial—Duty of Court—Before convicting the Court must see if facts proved do not bring the case within the exception which take it out of the offence.

Unlike a civil suit in which the Court is confined more or less to the pleadings, in a criminal case, before a conviction is recorded, it always has to be seen whether the proved or admitted facts bring the case within an exception, which takes it out of the offence defined even though the accused has not specifically relied on getting the benefit of the exception. [P 348 C 2]

(d) Penal Code, S. 499, Exceps. 8 and 9—Determination of good faith—Desire of accused to protect himself rather than to injure other — Accused is protected by Exceps. 8 and 9.

The Court in determining the question of good faith should have to take into account the intellectual capacity of the person, his predilections and the surrounding facts: 4 Cal. 124 and 31 Bom. 293, Rel. on. [P 349 C 2]

Where it was found that an accused acted with a desire to protect himself by an appeal to the Magistrate, rather than to injure others, the accused is protected by Exceps. 8 and 9 of S. 499: 4 Cal. 124, Foll.

Judgment.—The petitioner Mohamad Gul has been convicted by the third Presidency Magistrate, Northern Division, Calcutta, under S. 500, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month, the fine to be paid to the complainant as compensation. The subject matter of the defamation was contained in a petition which the petitioner filed in the Court of the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, on 22nd March 1928. It was a petition against four persons namely the opposite party Haji Fazle Karim, one Golam Nabi, one Shamsuddin and one Abdur Rashid. It ran in these words:

"The petitioner is a merchant in a leather goods and is on inimical terms with the defendants above named over a landed property in their native District in Punjab. In order to bring your petitioner's party to terms the accused persons caused the petitioner to be implicated in several false cases:

(1) A cocaine case in Burdwan in which the petitioner was discharged:

(2) A pistol planting case in which also on enquiry it was found that the petitioner has been falsely implicated.

After all these onslaughts the petitioner moved the learned D. C. Detective Department and he directed them to be warned in the first instance. This has enraged them further more. Accused 1 is the brother of the famous goonda Mukhia who was shot dead and accused 2 is his relation. They have started again threatening the complainant and his men with bodily injury this time. The petitioner has got to go to their side of Machua-bazar as he has got business connexions there. They are thus in constant danger of bodily injury or threat by their men. In fact twice they were assaulted by some people whom they can identify and police has been informed.

Under the circumstances it is prayed for that they may be warned not to molest the petitioner or his men in the first instance.

The whole of this petition was incorporated in the charge that was framed against the petitioner under S. 500, I. P. C. It contains a multitude of statements and it was not quite right to leave it to the accused to find out which exactly are the imputations that were intended or believed to cause harm to the reputation of the opposite party. No complaint, however, has been made before me on this ground and perhaps it was the case that all the statements were so intended or believed.

The rule has been issued upon three grounds: 1st, that the elements necessary to constitute the offence has not been made out; 2nd, that the petition of the opposite party upon which the case against the petitioner was started was not a complaint within the meaning of the law and S. 198, Criminal P. C., was a bar to the trial of the case; and 3rd, that the petitioner was protected by Exceps. 8 and 9 to S. 499, I. P. C. The first and the third grounds go together, while the second ground is really a combination of two grounds as will be presently seen.

It will be convenient to deal with the second ground first. Under the ground it is contended in the first place that the petition of the opposite party was not a complaint within the meaning of the law. This petition was filed on 5th April 1928. In it it was alleged that the petitioner and others had combined together and as a result of the conspiracy the petitioner had filed the petition of 22nd March 1928, falsely implicating the opposite party in the cases and acts mentioned therein in order to disgrace the opposite party. The prayer in it was worded thus:

"Under the circumstances complainant prays that your Honour would be pleased to order the D. D. Police to cause an enquiry to be made into the matter and the allegations made against the complainant and to submit the report of the same to your Honor. And, for the time being, your petitioner reserves the right of bringing a case of defamation against the accused in future".

I am clearly of opinion that the petition satisfies the definition of complaint as given in S. 4 (h), Criminal P. C. It contained allegation that the petitioner had committed an offence and it was made to a Magistrate with a view to his ordering a police enquiry an action under S. 155 of the Code without which action the police would not be able to take up the investigation the case being a non-cognizable one. It is said under this ground, in the next place, that in the face of the prayer in the aforesaid petition in which it was expressly stated that the opposite party reserved his right to bring a case of defamation in future the trial could not take place as S. 198, Criminal P. C., would operate as a bar. On behalf of the opposite party it is pointed out that S. 198 does not bar a trial but only the cognizance of the offence specified therein and that if the petition of the opposite party dated 5th April 1928 fulfils the requirements of the definition of complaint as given in S. 4 (h) the Magistrate was competent to summon the accused and go on with the trial notwithstanding the express reservation contained in the prayer in that petition. To accede to the contention of the opposite party would perhaps be to put a rather narrow meaning upon S. 198, but I do not desire to express any decided opinion on the point. It is sufficient for me to refer to the order of the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, dated 2nd May 1928 by which he summoned the petitioner to stand his trial under S. 500, I. P. C. This order appears to me to indicate beyond doubt that on the report of the police having been submitted the opposite party was further examined on his complaint and gave good reasons as to why there should be a trial of the case. It is, in my judgment, a perfectly fair inference to draw from the contents of the order that the opposite party at this stage orally prayed for summons on the petitioner. Under the law a verbal prayer for this purpose is sufficient. The second ground, therefore, in both its branches must be overruled.

As regards the first and the third grounds which I have said go together, what has to be seen is whether the petitioner is protected by the 8th or the 9th exception to S. 499, I. P. C. The question whether defamatory statements, contained in a petition before a criminal Court, on the basis of which the Court is asked to take action, should on the ground of expediency, form the subject-matter of other charges than that of defamation is one on which neither side has addressed any arguments and is therefore not one into which I need enter. As regards the exceptions the learned Magistrate in his judgment does not appear to have dealt with them. He has simply dealt with the plea of veritas and has overruled it, observing that "accused has adduced no evidence to show that the allegations are true."

The 8th or the 9th exception does not appear to have been considered by him at all, as they should have, even if the petitioner did not specifically rely on them provided of course that the facts gave rise to a consideration of these exceptions. Unlike a civil suit in which the Court is confined more or less to the pleadings, in a criminal case, before a conviction is recorded, it always has to be seen whether the proved or admitted facts bring the case within an exception, which takes it out of the offence, defined. The burden of proving such facts, of course, is on the accused. The question of these exceptions, therefore, requires investigation.

Now, what are the facts proved in the case? The petitioner 'Mahamed Gul has a business in shoes under the name of Gulzari and Co. and Kamruddin the son-in-law of one Fatehdin who is a brother of the petitioner had a separate business in cardboard vide: P. W. 4 Mohamed Amin cross-examination. The opposite party Hazi Fazlay Karim also has a cardboard business and there is trade rivalry between him and Kamruddin. In an application made by the opposite party to Mr. Bird for a police warning he mentioned the fact of this trade rivalry vide: P. W. 7 Fazlay Karim cross-examination. One Mahamed Khan and one Abdul Khan sold land with building to one Mohamed Amin (not P. W. 4), one Golam Nabi and one Abdul Rashid. The opposite party was a witness to the kobala in respect of this transaction, and in consequence of this transaction there is litigation pending between one Fazal-din, a nephew of the petitioner and some others on the one hand, vide P. W. 7 Fazlay Karim cross-examination and Abdul Rashid and Mohamed Amin (not P. W. 4) and possibly other persons on the other. (vide P. W. 4 Mohamed Amin cross-examination) Abdul Rashid is the son of the said Mohamed Amin (not P. W. 4), and Kamruddin was formerly a partner of Golam Nabi but left the partnership about three years ago vide: P. W. 4 Mohamed Amin cross-examination. That there has been some quarrel between the opposite party and the petitioner for some reason or other is abundantly clear because the opposite party has stated in his evidence :

"Mr. Amir Ali went and saw Mr. Bird on my behalf but I did not instruct him. I told Mr. Amir Ali about the quarrel between myself and the accused. I made an application before Mr. Bird in which I mentioned about the business rivalry with Kamruddin ; after the warning I made two complaints against the accused at the Jorasanko Thana."

It may be that the quarrel that the opposite party was referring to was the quarrel in consequence of the allegations that had been made against him by the petitioner before Mr. Bird and which were founded upon a number of entries which the petitioner had got made at the thana against him and upon the basis of which allegations the petitioner had obtained a warning order against the opposite party : vide P. W. 7 Fazley Karim, examination-in-chief. Be that as it may, it is abundantly clear that while on the one hand there is a large body of evidence establishing the fact that the opposite party is quite a respectable man, there is on the other hand the undeniable fact that the petitioner was persistently charging him with conspiracy with his enemies and also threatening him in various ways.

The defence of veritas has been negatived by the learned Magistrate and I think he has taken the correct view so far as that matter is concerned, but the question remains whether upon the facts established upon the evidence to which I have referred exceptions 8 and 9 or either of them protects the petitioner.

In dealing with these exceptions the question of good faith has to be considered. The definition of good faith in S. 52, I. P. C., it is true, does away with the presumption that the accused acted bona fide until the contrary is proved and under the Indian law the accused has to show that he has made the imputation not without due care and circumspection. But the question to what extent should he have pushed his care and circumspection is a different matter altogether. Markby, J., in the case of In the matter of the petition of Shibo Prosad Pandah (1), in dealing with the question of good faith within the meaning of the exceptions to S. 499 and in view of S. 105, Evidence Act, observed :

"The law in the mofussil is apparently that which common sense seems to me to teach, namely, that in a case of this kind the Court had a right to call upon the party making the imputation to show that he has some reasonable ground for making it."

In the case of Emperor v. Abdool Waddood (2) it has been said :

"Good faith requires not, indeed, logical infallibility but due care and attention. How far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care and caution must, in each case, be considered with reference to the general circumstances and the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to habits of precise reasoning."

The Court in determining the question of good faith should, in my judgment, should have to take into account the intellectual capacity of the person, his predilections and the surrounding facts.

Now the following facts cannot be disputed. The two cases referred to in the petitioner's complaint of 22nd March 1928 were false cases, instituted with the object of injuring the petitioner. Then there is the fact, spoken to by the pleader P. W. 6 M. Yakub who has not been disbelieved by the learned Magistrate that in connexion with a case at Sealdah under S. 420, I. P. C. against Fazaldin, nephew of the petitioner and which case the petitioner was looking after on behalf of the said nephew, the opposite party was seen interesting himself in one Emamon, the complainant in that case. Fazaldin was acquitted in that case, the learned Magistrate observing :

"The whole incident has the appearance of a faked up case intended to harass the accused by bringing him down from Rawalpindi on the off-chance of securing a conviction by false evidence. It suggests a deep-rooted hostility which has inspired this prosecution."

P. W. 6 M. Yakub also says that Golam Nabi who is one of the other persons named as accused in the complaint of 22nd March 1928, and whose address is given in the said complaint as the same as of the opposite party, was seen at Burdwan in connexion with the cocaine case against the petitioner. Judging the case by the standard I have indicated above, these as well as the other facts which have already been stated as established on the evidence, in my judgment, may not unreasonably have created an honest belief in the mind of the petitioner about the complicity of the opposite party in a conspiracy against him, however much that belief may be unfounded in fact. I think I cannot put my conclusions in this case in better words than those used by Prinsep, J., in the case of In the matter of the Petition of Shibo Prasad Pandah (1), where he said :

"I have little doubt that he (the accused) acted with a desire to protect himself by an appeal to the Magistrate, rather than to injure others."

The rule is made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs and the defendant are neighbours. Their houses are contiguous with a small lane dividing the two premises in the town of Bolepur. In the lane there is a drain 1' 2" wide at the head. The plaintiffs' case is that the land over which this drain runs belongs to them and that they left it for their own convenience between their and the defendant's houses. This was about 30 years ago. The defendant has now wrongfully obstructed it by building a wall over a portion of it lengthwise thereby obstructing the flow of water and the passage of sweepers. The defendant's case is that the drain was made by mutual consent of parties over their joint land in order to carry rain-water and the washings of the houses. In 1329 the plaintiffs erected a privy on the first floor the foul water of which is now flowing into the drain. The defendant, therefore, has walled up his portion of the drain which he says he is entitled to do. The trial Court held that the land on which this drain exists belonged to the plaintiffs and therefore the defendant had no right to put up a wall upon it. Coming to this conclusion the learned Munsiff did not think it necessary to consider the right of the plaintiffs based on easement ; but he observed that there was no evidence of express grant and that since the time when the drain was built was known, the plaintiffs could not claim user from time immemorial. He further remarked :

"Even if it be supposed that the plaintiffs have easement right by prescription so far as the flow of rain-water from the roofs of the houses of the parties is concerned, as the time since the construction of the privy does not cover the prescription period and because no additional burden can be imposed upon the servient tenement the issue is decided against the plaintiffs."

The defendant appealed. The learned District Judge did not agree with the finding of the Munsif that the land on which the drain was erected belonged to the plaintiffs. He found upon evidence that the defendant's story that both the houses were constructed in 1302 and that the parties agreed give up equal extent of land for the drain was correct.

But the learned Judge held that the flow of foul of water from the privy did not place any additional burden upon the servient tenement and it did not so radically change the nature of the fluid passing along the drain as to warrant the defendant closing it up. The reasoning of the learned Judge is expressed in not very clear language but what he means can be gathered from his judgment. He says that the drain used to carry rain-water and also other water which could not be said to be pure :

"the water that passed along the drain has never been pure. The impurities so far have been chemical and mechanical. Organic impurities are now added."

If the learned Judge by these words means that where a person acquires a right of flowing water not quite pure through a drain he has thereby the right to the flow of foul water from privy carrying human organic matter, he is wrong. That the discharge of foul effluent into a drain through which there may be a presumed grant of running water is not permissible in law as it imposes an overburden on the servient tenement is established by numerous authorities in England. Philimore v. Watford Rural District Council (1) which was a counter case to the case before us, it was held that a grant of flow of water did not authorise the discharge of a sewage effluent. Eve, J. indicated the claim and said that :

"this consideration and the fact that every one must have appreciated that sooner or later an effluent would have to be dealt with and that the obvious, if not the only, channel into which such effluent would be discharged was the one into which they have in fact discharged it, all combine to preclude the plaintiff from now complaining of the discharge of the effluent. I do not accept this view."

In Clarke v. Sommersetshire Drainage Commissioners (2) the easement was the right to pollute a stream by pouring in the refuse of a fellmongery and the washings of dyes used in a coloured rug manufactory. The fellmongery was abandoned and the manufacture of leather boards substituted. The pollution was less than that caused by the old business, yet it was held that the user was so different that the prescriptive right did not extend to the new trade and the easement was lost. In Cawkwell v. Russell (3) the plaintiff alleged to have a right of user for general drainage and the right of user was only to use the drain not for foul drainage but for ordinary refuse water. Pollock, C. B. held that as the plaintiffs failed to prove a prescriptive right to conduct foul water from the privy into the drain in question the defendant was entitled to a verdict in his favour. The same view was taken in Hill v. Cook (4) and Cawkwell v. Russell (3) was approved. The learned Judge accepted the defendant's case that the drain was originally intended to carry rain-water as also the discharge of the washings of the houses which the learned Judge characterized as containing chemical and mechanical impurities. The plaintiff's case in para. 6 of the plaint was that they prepared this drain for the purpose of discharging rain-water, plastering and whitewashing their premises and for other necessary purposes. So that it may be fairly held on the evidence as has been held by the learned Judge that the drain was intended to carry rain-water and such other water as would come out of the houses in ordinary course. It is admitted that there is no evidence of a grant and so in the circumstances of the case no right of easement can be claimed. It was a matter of arrangement between the parties rather than the conferment of mutual rights of easement. Whatever that may be, if there was an agreement it was clearly an agreement for the purposes mentioned ; if it is an easement it is limited to those purposes. The discharge of foul water from privies was not one of the purposes in the contemplation of the parties when they made the agreement. I am quite clear in my mind that in the circumstances of this case the discharge of foul water from the privy is a case of excessive user and adds to the burden on the servient tenement or it is a case in which the plaintiffs have gone beyond the arrangement between the parties at the time of the construction of their houses.

Now, the question is what relief, if any, can the plaintiffs get and whether the conduct of the defendant is justifiable? At one time the law was laid down that where the owner of a dominant tenement uses the easement in an excessive manner the servient tenement is entitled to obstruct the legitimate user of the easement which is lost to the dominant tenement holder: Renshaw v. Bean (5). The view of law, however, was subsequently modified by the House of Lords in Tapling v. Jones (6) and Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (7). The law as it now stands is that in the case of excessive user the aggrieved party may render such user impracticable; but he has not the right to obstruct the exercise of the user in its entirety.

"If the owner of an easement exceeds his rightful user or does anything which would after long user produce an increased right, the servient owner may in all cases obstruct or prevent the excessive user or new mode of enjoyment, if he can do so without obstructing the rightful user: Goddard on Easement p. 349".

Now in the present case the defendant has built a wall covering a portion of the drain. It has not been proved that he has exceeded the limit of his portion. As a matter of fact it has been found by the Commissioner who held a local enquiry that the portion of the drain still left open is eight inches in width which is more than one-half of the width of the drain. The defendant cannot therefore be said to have obstructed the plaintiffs in the proper exercise of the right of user they had in the drain.

Looking at the plaint made by the plaintiffs in the suit it seems difficult to give them any relief in it. They have come to Court on the allegation that they are the owners of the drain. They have failed to prove that case and it is found that defendant is the owner of one-half of the drain. Plaintiff's portion has not been encroached upon by the defendant and it is not found that there is any obstruction to the flow of water through the portion that has been left open.

The next question raised is with regard to the right of sweepers to pass along the drain in order to clean the plaintiff's privy on the first floor. The Munsiff remarks that no easement by prescription even can be acquired for cleaning the privy. The learned Judge says that sweepers come to clean the drain and therefore their right of passage could not be obstructed. In the first place, it is difficult to say that the right to allow sweepers to pass is a right of easement which attaches itself to a tenement and in the second place according to the evidence and the finding of the Munsiff it appears that sweepers passed since when the privy was erected by the plaintiff in 1329.

As the result of the above considerations, this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

If the plaintiff removes the privy or ceases to discharge foul water into the drain plaintiffs may claim removal of the obstruction put up by the defendant if he establishes his easement as was suggested in Cawkwell v. Russel (3).

In view of our judgment in the appeal the cross-objection is dismissed.

Appeal No. 452 of 1927, Decided on 27th July 1928, from original order of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Dacca, D/- 17th August 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 60 (1) — Uncertain, future and fluctuating profits cannot be attached.

The future, fluctuating and uncertain profits, which a judgment-debtor is entitled to receive out of certain immovable property not belonging to him, are not saleable and, therefore, not liable to attachment: 30 All. 246 and 7 W. R. 266, Rel. on. [P 353 C 2, P 354 C 1]

B. B. Ghose, J. — This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against the order of the Subordinate Judge directing that a certain interest of the judgment-debtor should be sold. The application of the decree-holder was to attach and sell something which has been described in this way:

"As Khaza Soleman Quader along with 116 others has executed a wakfnama . . . . and appointed the present judgment-debtor Nawab Khaza Habibullah as mutwali of the said wakf properties; it is prayed that the decretal amount may be realized by the attachment and sale of all the interests and profits with regard to the money to which the said judgment-debtor has been and is entitled as mutwali by virtue of the said wakfnama. Under the provisions contained in Cl. 3 of the aforesaid wakfnama, the revenue, rents, cesses due to the superior landlords, taxes and collection charges, monthly allowances of the beneficiaries etc., are to be deducted from the annual proceeds of the properties mentioned in the schedule below and covered by the wakfnama, and after a further deduction of 5 per cent from the remaining sum the judgment-debtor Nawab Khaza Habibullah is entitled to a 4 annas share of the surplus. It is prayed that the decretal amount be realized by the attachment and sale of the aforesaid 4 annas share. A sum of Rs. 2,000 at least becomes due to the judgment debtor on account of the said 4 annas share. And the same is distributed every year in the months of Aswin and Chaitra amongst the mutwali and beneficiaries."

The objection of the judgment-debtor was that this property is not saleable, as the money receivable by the judgment-debtor under the terms of the wakfnama is an unascertained sum and, therefore, not capable of being attached. The Subordinate Judge held that the right of the judgment-debtor to  $\frac{1}{4}$  share of the profits in the wakf properties which is sought to be attached is transferable; it is immovable property and so should be attached and sold in the manner laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure. He says it is not a moveable property: It is not the money which is receivable by the mutwali, but the right to get the money which is sought to be attached in this case. It is really difficult to understand what the Subordinate Judge meant by the observation that this right of the mutwali to receive an  $\frac{1}{4}$  share of the surplus income of the property after defraying all expenses is an immovable property. If the property is really wakf property then the mutwali has no interest in the property itself, because as it is often said the property is dedicated to God. It may be called payment of an allowance to the mutwali for his trouble in managing the property, distributing allowances to the beneficiaries and for the performance of other works which might have been imposed upon him by the wakfnama. This allowance of 4 annas share of the surplus after defraying the expenses cannot from the nature of it be a fixed amount. It is an unascertained amount which must be fluctuating from time to time according to circumstances. The question is, is this property a saleable property? Because unless it is so it cannot be attached under S. 60, Civil P. C.

Various cases have been cited before us in support of the contention of each party. The learned advocate for the appellant relies upon the case of Sher Singh v. Sri Ram (1). In that case it was decided that the future profits which the judgment-debtor is likely to get is not saleable. In that case the Calcutta cases on the point have been referred to and followed. The nearest approach, however, to the present case is the case Jagarnath Roy v. Kishen Pershad (2). In that case the right to the surplus profits of a shebait from debuttar property was apparently sought to be sold. Loch, J., observes with reference to this claim to sell the profits:

"The thing itself is also of so uncertain a nature that its sale would be a source of constant litigation. The rents and profits may be sufficient only for the support of the temple services, or the surplus after paying the charges may be considerable. It may fluctuate year by year; and a stranger purchasing such a right, if legally saleable, would be obliged to enforce that right by annual litigation to discover what he had to receive. I think, therefore, that the sale of such an undefined right, if right, it can be called, should not be allowed."

Macpherson, J. observed in the same case:

"The application to attach and sell the surplus profits of the sheba, or such portion of the proceeds of the debattar lands as the shebait appropriates to his own use, also fails. For there is nothing before us to show what those profits are, or that there are any profits in which the judgment-debtor takes a beneficial interest, or to which he is personally entitled. A wholly vague and uncertain right, the existence of which is doubtful, and the extent of which, if ascertainable, has in no degree been ascertained, cannot be sold in execution of a decree."

In my judgment in the present case the surplus income the 4 annas of which the judgment-debtor is entitled to get must necessarily fluctuate from time to time. It is an uncertain amount which the decree-holder wants to attach. Besides as I have already observed there is the difficulty of attaching the future profits. The judgment-debtor has no right to the immovable property out of which this income is to be derived

(2) [1867] 7 W. R. 266.

Under these circumstances in my opinion the property, if property it can be called, is not saleable and not liable to attachment.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the application for execution against this so-called property is dismissed with costs in both Courts. The hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

The Munsiff was invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 250. He registered the suit as an ordinary money suit and tried it as such and decreed it for Rs. 432 with interest and proportionate costs.

Judgment.—The question involved in this appeal relates to the true meaning of Cl. (4), S. 24, Civil P. C. (Act 5 of 1908.)

The suit was for recovery of Rs. 870 on account of price of milk alleged to have been supplied to the defendant. It was instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah which has pecuniary jurisdiction up to the limit of Rs. 1000. A suit for rent between the parties being pending at the time in the Third Court of the Munsiff at Alipur, the District Judge of 24 Parganas, at the instance of the defendant and on the consent of the plaintiff, transferred the suit to the Court of the Munsiff to be tried along with the said rent suit. The Munsiff was invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 250. He registered the suit as an ordinary money suit and tried it as such and decreed it for Rs. 432 with interest and proportionate costs. The defendant appealed from the decision and obtained a modification of the decree which had been passed by the trial Court, the amount of the decree being reduced to Rs. 127-1-0. The plaintiff has then preferred this appeal.

The contention that has been urged on behalf of the appellant is that under S. 24, sub-S. (4), the Munsiff should be deemed to have tried the suit as a Court of Small Causes and accordingly no appeal lay from his decision. The question, therefore, is one of construction of that subsection.

The question is, by no means, free from difficulty and the authorities bearing on it are exceedingly conflicting. It will be convenient to deal first of all with a few of the earlier decisions of the Allahabad and the Bombay High Courts which introduced this conflict.

The earliest decision of the Allahabad High Court is the case of Kauleshar Rai

v. Dost Muhammad (1). In that case a suit instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his Small Cause Court jurisdiction, was on the retirement of the officer, ordered by the District Judge to be dealt with by his successor, who was not invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction and it was held that the argument that as the case was not transferred or withdrawn but only the Court had gone out of existence and therefore S. 25 of the Code then in force (S. 24 of the present Code was inapplicable,) had no force and it was also held that no appeal lay from the decision of the said successor as the decision was by reason of S. 25 (4), Civil P. C., that of a Court of Small Causes. In the case of Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (2) a suit valued at Rs. 69 was filed as a Small Cause Court case in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had Small Cause Court powers. The Subordinate Judge took leave, and his successor not having Small Cause Court powers the District Judge transferred the suit to a Munsiff who had Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 50 to be tried as a Munsiff's Court case. The Munsiff did so; and it was held, without expressing any opinion as to whether the view of the applicability of S. 25, Civil P. C., taken in Kauleshar Rai v. Dost Muhammad Khan (1) was correct or not, that under S. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 the proceeding before the Munsiff should be regarded as a proceeding in a Small Cause Court suit.

In the earlier decisions of the Bombay High Court a different view was taken. It was held by that Court that the Courts of Subordinate Judges invested with jurisdiction of a Judge of a Small Cause Court under S. 28, Act 14 of 1869 do not thereby become Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act 11 of 1865, but they merely exercise a similar jurisdiction: Bhagvan v. Balu (3). This decision was followed in the case of Ramchandra v. Ganesh (4) in which the facts were these: A suit was originally filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge invested with Small Cause Court powers and it was afterwards transferred by the District Judge under S. 25, Civil P. C. of 1882 to the Court of the Assistant Judge who had no such powers. That Judge tried the suit and from his decision an appeal was preferred to the District Judge who reversed the Assistant Judge's decision. The High Court was invited to set aside the decision of the District Judge on the ground that the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and it was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge who was invested with the Small Cause Court powers, and that although it was transferred to the Court of the Assistant Judge, such transfer did not alter its character, and the Court to which it was so transferred should be regarded as a Court of Small Causes and from the decree of such a Court no appeal lay to the District Judge. This contention was overruled, the expression "Courts of Small Causes" in S. 25 of the Code of 1882 being construed to mean Courts properly and strictly so called and not to include Courts only invested with the jurisdiction of Courts of Small Causes.

To summarize the position disclosed by these earlier cases of the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts the following propositions may be noted:

1st. A case of succession is governed by S. 25 of the Code: Kauleshar Rai v. Dost Muhammad (1) but on this question no opinion was expressed in Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (2).

2nd. The expression "Court of Small Causes" means not merely Courts constituted as such by the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act but also Courts presided over by officers invested with Small Cause Court powers: Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (2), contra, that the expression means only the former class of Courts: Bhagvan v. Balu (3); Ramchandra v. Ganesh (4).

3rd. In a suit transferred or withdrawn under S. 24 of the Code finality attaches to the decisions of the trying Court: Kauleshar Rai v. Dost Muhammad (1).

With the first of these propositions or its negative we are not concerned in this appeal, and I do not propose to discuss it here beyond saying that in the case of Dulal Chandra Deb v. Ram Narain Deb (5), the case of Kauleshar Rai v. Dost Muhammad (1) and Mangal Sen v. Rup Chand (2) were dissented from and it was held that when a Munsiff vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes is transferred and is succeeded in office by a Munsiff not vested with such powers, and the Court of Small Causes is in consequence abolished the successor has jurisdiction, under S. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and S. 17, Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887 to try in his ordinary civil jurisdiction all suits pending on the files, whether they be suits falling within the ordinary civil jurisdiction of his predecessor or within his jurisdiction as the Court of Small Causes and that no order of transfer under S. 25, Civil P. C. is necessary to enable the successor to try the suits. In the same case, although it was not necessary for the decision because the case, in the opinion of the learned Judge, was governed by S. 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and not by S. 25 of the Code and the learned Judge observed as regards the other two propositions enunciated above, that they were inclined to agree with the view taken in Ramchandra v. Ganesh (4) that when an order is made under S. 25, Civil P. C., the Court which eventually tries the suit tries it as a Court of Small Causes, and that the expression "Court of Small Causes" in S. 25, Cl. (4) of the Code means a Court of Small Causes constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 1887 and does not include a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes, and that such a Court can try such suit in its ordinary civil jurisdiction with the result that the decision therein would be open to appeal.

The reasons which weighed with the learned Judges in arriving at the view that they took were that a contrary view would be against the general practice followed in this province, that inexperienced or junior officers may have to try the suit under a summary procedure with no right of appeal being allowed from his decision and that a simple order of transfer passed under S. 25, would have the effect of vesting the officer with a jurisdiction which is entirely within the competency of the Local Government to confer by an order duly notified in the Gazette under S. 25, Bengal North Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887. To these reasons may be added the considerations that arise upon the words used in S. 7, Civil P. C., Act 5 of 1908 and Ss. 2 and 35, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1837 and which were relied upon by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in the case of Ramchandra v. Ganesh (4) and which indicate an intention on the part of the legislature to make a distinction between the two classes of Courts: see also Balkrishna v. Lakshman (6) and Krishna Velji v. Bhau Mansaram (7). These reasons have been refuted as unsound in a very large number of decisions of the different High Courts. It has been said that the apprehension that disastrous consequences will follow is idle as the subsection does not necessarily mean that the case will be transferred to a Court which is not a Small Cause Court constituted under the Act nor a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes, that although a comparison of the different sections of the Civil Procedure Code and of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act shows that the two Courts are of two different classes, yet the generic name "Court of Small Causes" may not unreasonably be said to include both, and that the difficulty as to the right of appeal will still remain even if the limited meaning be given to that expression.

On these and other grounds which will be found discussed in these decisions it has been held in those Courts that the apparent intention of the legislature is that if a Small Cause Court suit is transferred it should not change its nature by reason of such transfer, but should continue to be tried as a Small Cause Court suit and subject to all the legal incidents of such a suit. It is now settled in Allahabad, Patna, Madras and Bombay that the expression "Court of Small Causes" in S. 24, sub-S. (4), includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes and that the procedure for the trial of a suit transferred under that subsection is governed by the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and no appeal lies from the decision: *Chhotey Lal v. The Calcutta High Court in the case of Madhusudan Gope v. Behari Lal Gope (15) dissented from the view expressed in Dulal Chandra Deb v. Ram Narain Deb (5) as regards the limited meaning that the latter decision was inclined to attribute to the expression "Courts of Small Causes" as used in S. 24, sub-S. (4), Civil P. C., and following the consensus of authorities of the other High Courts at the present moment held that the expression includes both classes of Courts. The learned Judges said, however:

"What procedure the Munsiff should have adopted and what finality attaches to his decision it is not necessary for the purposes of this rule to determine."

This reservation, however, is immaterial because the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Ss. 27 and 32 make the decree or order passed by such a Court final. Besides the value of the observations made in the case of Dulal v. Ram Narain (5) has also been considerably diminished by the decision in the case of Akshay Kumar Shaha v. Hira Lal Dosad (16) in which it has been held that "Court of Small Causes" includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

Having given the question all the consideration that it deserves we have come to the conclusion that the observations of the learned Judges in the case of Dulal v. Ram Narain (5) are not sound, and that the view that has been taken in the later decision of this Court referred to above and also the view that is current in the other High Courts is correct. It may be stated here that the respondent gains little even if the limited meaning which Dulal v. Ram Narain (5) stands for is given to sub-S. (4) of S. 24, Civil P. C., because here the transfer was from a Provincial Small Cause Court. The real solution of the difficulty lies in a proper exercise of the powers of transfer given by S. 24 of the Code. The section speaks of a transfer to a Court "competent to try or dispose of" the suit. In the present case the defendant moved for transfer and on the plaintiff consenting the case was transferred to the third Court of the Munsiff of Alipur, who had pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit, but was not vested with Small Cause Court powers up to the requisite amount. Far from taking any objection as regards the competency of the tribunal to which the suit was to be transferred, the parties by consent got the suit transferred to this particular Court. To a case of this character it may well be said that the Munsiff assumed jurisdiction under an agreement between the parties. The law in cases of this kind has, in our opinion, been correctly stated in these words, in the case of Sankaranarayana Pillai v. Ramaswamiah Pillai (17):

"If parties agree to a Court proceeding without jurisdiction extra cursum curiae, i. e., beyond the ordinary powers of a Court the parties cannot thereafter appeal from the decision of the Court. But where the Court has jurisdiction over a cause, mere agreement between the parties that the Court may decide the cause disregarding rules of procedure and evidence without giving up a right of appeal expressly or by necessary implication, does not deprive the parties of their right of appeal."

Here the consent to the transfer, to this Court which evidently was readily given by both parties on the ground of mutual convenience as another suit between them was pending in that Court carried with it the necessary consequence which followed under the law itself namely S. 24, sub-S. (4), Civil P. C., and neither party can be heard to complain that a right of appeal was taken away. Besides the provision of that subsection is more or less a statutory recognition of the general rule that the incidents of a trial are to be governed by the law as applicable to the conditions which existed at the institution of the suit, unless these incidents have been expressly varied by the legislature.

We are accordingly of opinion that no appeal lay from the decision of the trial Court. We, therefore, allow the appeal and reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, restore that of the

Manindra Chandra Nandy — Appellant.

v.

Lalmohun Roy and others — Respondents.

Appeal No. 109 of 1927, Decided on 8th January 1929, against original decree of Pearson, J. D/- 9th August 1927, in Original Suit No. 2111 of 1924.

(a) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12 — High Court in 1908 had authority and jurisdiction as granted by Letters Patent.

The jurisdiction of the High Court as it stood in 1908 when the Civil Procedure Code was republished depended upon S. 9, High Courts Act of 1861. It was to have such power and authority as Her Majesty may by Letters Patent grant and direct. [P 361 C 2 ; P 362 C 1]

* (b) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12 — Construction put by all High Courts enunciated.

The construction of Cl. 12 upon which all the High Courts are agreed is that as regards suits for land the High Court can take cognizance if the land is situate wholly within the local limits or where the land is situate in part only within such limits if leave has been first obtained ; and that as regards suits other than those for land the High Court has jurisdiction if the cause of action has arisen in part only within the limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained or if the defendant dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain within these limits,

(c) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12 — Cl. 12 is not overridden by Civil P. C., S. 21.

Although the legislature had power in 1908 to override the Letters Patent the legislature has not by introducing S. 21, Civil P. C., overridden the provisions of Cl. 12. [P 364 C 1]

* (d) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12 — No leave obtained as to property out of jurisdiction — Objection as to jurisdiction can be taken for first time at appellate stage — High Court has no jurisdiction as to such property — Civil P. C., S. 21.

A suit for land part of which only was situate within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court and the other part was situate in the mofussil was brought on the Original Side without leave being obtained as under Cl. 12.

Held : that as regards all properties outside the original jurisdiction of the High Court the suit was without jurisdiction and that effect must be given as to the objection about jurisdiction though taken in the appellate Court for the first time. [P 364 C 1, 2]

* (e) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 38 — All creditors not signing — No insolvency proceedings started — Debtor taking advantage of the deed — Composition is valid.

A composition deed of trust was executed for the benefit of the creditors but was signed by the debtors and trustees only. One or two days prior to the deed an agreement for composition was entered into between the trustees and some of the creditors. All the creditors had not signed the agreement but they had also not started insolvency proceedings against the debtors. The composition deed was acted upon by the debtors.

Held : that the deed was perfectly a good deed of trust. [P 365 C 1, 2]

(f) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12 — Land, subject of suit, swept away subsequently by prior encumbrancers — Suit still continues to be one for land.

A suit by trustees under a composition deed regarding certain properties within the original jurisdiction of Calcutta High Court does not cease to be a suit for land merely because the properties have been entirely swept away by prior encumbrancers. [P 365 C 2 ; P 366 C 1]

B. C. Mitter, S. C. Bose and P. N. Sen — for Appellant.

N. N. Sircar and B. K. Ghose — for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J. — This was a suit by the trustees of a deed of arrangement for the benefit of the creditors which was executed by defendants 1 and 2 on 1st April 1921 and in connexion with which an agreement was executed one or two days before between certain creditors and the trustees. The proceedings began by way of originating summons taken out by the trustees of the deed against the debtors only. That originating summons was taken out in July 1924. By an order made in the matter, on 18th December 1924 the plaint presented together with the originating summons under the rules of the High Court as they stood before 1926 was directed to be treated as a plaint in the ordinary sense. When that action came on for disposal it was ordered on 9th July 1925 that it be adjourned to enable the plaintiff to implead various mortgagees. Under this order the plaintiff impleaded first of all certain persons who had mortgages upon the properties comprised in the deed of arrangement which were prior to the title granted to the trustees by the deed of arrangement. In addition to such mortgagees the present appellant, the Maharaja of Cossimbazar, who is a relative of the debtors was impleaded as a defendant by reason that on 10th December 1923 the debtors had executed in his favour a mortgage by which they purported to assign to him the properties which they had previously assigned to the trustees for creditors by the deed of 1st April 1921. The case was tried before my learned brother Pearson, J., and this is an appeal from his decree.

It appears that it was contended before the learned Judge, first, that the conveyance of the properties effected by the deed of trust of 1st April 1921 was invalid. In support of this contention various reasons were assigned. It was contended that the conveyance was fraudulent. It was contended that it was intended to be a conveyance for the benefit of certain creditors who had executed the agreement, and that some of these creditors not having executed or assented the conveyance never took effect. It was contended further that by reason of the fact of certain creditors having sued or threatened to sue the debtors or in one case having taken payment contrary to the terms of the deed from the debtors the deed of trust was null and void.

The Maharaja—the present appellant—had a further contention which he submitted to the learned Judge. He said that at the time when the deed of trust was executed the trustees had not only permitted the debtors to remain in possession of the properties but had failed to take the precaution to get possession of the title-deeds. The question refers to properties not within the original jurisdiction of the High Court. It was said that the debtors never disclosed to the Maharaja the existence of the deed of trust for the benefit of creditors, that the Maharaja had no notice whatever of that deed, that he took on the faith of the fact that the debtors were in possession not only of the properties but of the title-deeds and that, therefore, in any case his claim under the mortgage could not be postponed in favour of the trustees under the deed of arrangement.

The facts of the case are reasonably clear. The debtors had various zamindari properties, certain Calcutta houses which had been mortgaged and certain businesses and prior to the time when the deed of arrangement was entered into they were financially embarrassed. They have indeed from time to time and in circumstances of urgency been borrowing money from their relative—the Maharaja. It would appear that they had borrowed in January 1921 over half a lac of rupees and it is clear enough that the circumstance of their embarrassment did come to the notice of the Maharaja. They held a meeting in March 1921 of their creditors. The deed of 1st April 1921 purports to be a conveyance to the trustees of all the properties comprised in the deed and there were elaborate provisions contained in that deed as to the terms upon which these debtors were assigning their properties for the benefit of the creditors.

The scheme of the deed of arrangement was that the creditors would give nine months' time to the debtors for payment of the debts, that the debtors were to keep up the necessary payments on the properties in the meantime and receive and realize the rents and profits, that if at the end of that time the debts were not discharged the creditors would be at liberty to take possession and realize their security, and that when the creditors had realized their security the debtors were to be liable to pay the whole of the balance. The deed provided that this was to be done within one month after the completion of the sale by the trustees.

It does not appear that the property comprised in the deed was the whole of the debtor's property, nor does it appear that the amount left out was insignificant. It was, if not large, at all events substantial. It does not appear either that all the creditors were originally intended to be parties to this arrangement. The appellant Maharaja was one of the creditors who were not mentioned and there appear to have been other creditors who were left out. The agreement which was executed by many of the creditors mentioned though not by all of them was an agreement whereby the creditors on their part agreed with the trustees that a proper deed of arrangement should be entered into.

That was a scheme which was accepted by many creditors. There can be no doubt at all that it was made known to and assented to by many of the persons who were intended to be beneficiaries of the deed. Not only so, but it appears that the debtors did get first of all the nine months which they were stipulating for. Not only is that the case, but the debtors proceeded at their own hand to make contracts for the sale of their properties and they carried out those contracts by executing conveyances, the trustees knowing that they were engaged in so doing and the trustees afterwards curing the defect in their title by executing a release of the rights of the trustees and so getting the obstacle to title created by the deed of arrangement cleared away. The nine months were extended from time to time by the trustees. It was extended first of all to the end of the year 1922, and then again by further extension at the request of the debtors contained in the correspondence exhibited it was extended to the end of the year 1923.

It was when this last extension was about to come to an end that on 10th December 1923 the debtors purported to convey all the properties all over again to the Maharaja. The Maharaja's mortgage, like the deed of arrangement, comprised some three Calcutta properties and a great many mofussil properties. The three Calcutta properties were at all material times in this position that they were mortgaged to prior encumbrancers and in December 1923 when the Maharaja's mortgage was executed the debtors were not in possession of those properties at all, still less of the title-deeds. Those properties were in possession of the receiver in mortgage suits to enforce the prior encumbrances. In the end those mortgage suits succeeded and the properties were sold and the claim of the mortgagees exceeded the amount that was provided by the security. It is not in evidence but it was stated by Sir Benode Mitter at the Bar and not denied by the Advocate-General on behalf of the trustees that a personal judgment in favour of the mortgagees and against the debtors had been passed in the mortgage suit. All that the Advocate-General says upon that point is that the accounts of the receiver have not been finally adjusted and that there may be some room for dispute about small sums of money in respect of these.

At the time when the Maharaja took his mortgage, so far as the Calcutta properties are concerned there is no case to be made to the effect that he was misled or put off his guard by reason of the fact that he found the mortgagors in possession of the land or in possession of the title-deeds. The mortgage to the Maharaja is of this character :— It appears that having lent, as I have already stated, a substantial sum of money to the debtors before they had entered into the deed of 1st April 1921 the Maharaja throughout 1921 in April June, July, September and October was making advances to the debtors of substantial if not very large amounts. In November 1921 he claims to have lent no less than Rs. 68,000 more. In 1922 in the month of September he claims to have lent them Rs. 20,000. On 28th February 1923 he claims to have lent them no less than Rs. 2,30,000 and he says, though there is nothing in support of this save his own evidence, that it was on that occasion that he asked for a mortgage and was promised that a mortgage would be given. The mortgage, in fact, was not given till 10th December of that year and that mortgage purports to convey all these properties without discriminating in any way as to which of these properties were unencumbered and which of these properties were already encumbered.

The learned Judge has dealt with both the branches of the case. He has found that the deed of arrangement of April 1921 is a good and valid deed. On the question whether the Maharaja has proved that in the case of the mofussil properties he was misled or put off his guard by negligence of the trustees in not getting possession of the title-deeds, whether he has proved that in fact in December 1923 the debtors were allowed to retain the title-deeds, whether he made satisfactory enquiries so as to explain this circumstance that this registered deed affecting the Calcutta and mofussil properties which was executed by his own relatives never came to his notice, on these points the learned Judge has found in favour of the trustees of the deed. He has not been satisfied with the evidence of the Maharaja so as to postpone these trustees of the deed to the Maharaja's mortgage.

There are several questions of jurisdiction which were raised in one form or another before the learned Judge at the trial. So far as regards those questions which were raised the learned Judge has rejected the objection that he had no jurisdiction and, in my opinion, there is nothing to be said against his ruling upon those points.

In this appeal brought by the Maharaja the first point taken is a point of jurisdiction which was not presented to the learned Judge at all and that is the point that this is a suit for land part only of which is within the jurisdiction of this High Court on its Original Side, and that no leave has been obtained under Cl. 12, Letters Patent, so as to give this Court jurisdiction in respect of any of the mofussil properties. It is not useful now to recite the history of the cumbrous arrangement by which originating summonses on the Original Side were until lately required to be presented accompanied by a document called a plaint and in the form of a plaint. It would appear that this requirement was due to the fact that the opening words of S. 129, Civil P. C. were not adverted to. However that may be, under the Rules as they stood at the time with which we are concerned a person who took out an originating summons had to present with it not an affidavit merely but a document in the form of a plaint. This document was not really a plaint and was never treated in the same way as a plaint in the ordinary sense was treated. Orders as to leave under Cl. 12 were not made in respect of such plaints, at all events with the same certainty and uniformity as in the case of plaints ordinarily so called.

When, therefore, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the trustees of the deed could not fight out their battle with these debtors by originating summons and made an order that this document should be treated as a proper plaint it escaped his observation and the observation of all the parties that leave under Cl. 12 had not been enforced upon this document and that there might be a difficulty in granting the leave at a stage of the case which might be said no longer to be the commencement. The position, however, is that this suit is before us as upon a plaint, no leave having been granted under Cl. 12, Letters Patent. Accordingly Sir Benode Mitter for the Maharaja contends that as regards all the properties save the three properties within the limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court the suit is incompetent and must be held to be without jurisdiction. To my mind there is no answer to this contention save one, namely, the answer made by the Advocate-General on behalf of the trustees that S. 21, Civil P. C. cures that defect for the purposes of this appeal; and I proceed to consider whether S. 21 of the Code does apply so as to entitle this Court on appeal from the original jurisdiction to say that the suit should not be dismissed in so far as there was no jurisdiction in the learned Judge to entertain it. This question I find to be troublesome. It is dealt with by the Code in Ss. 117 and 120. Section 117 is a broad general provision to say that the provisions of the Code shall apply to the High Courts and it is quite clear that that large tracts of the Code do apply to the High Courts both in their appellate and in their original jurisdiction. S. 120 is a very limited exception.

"The following provisions shall not apply to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, namely, Ss. 16, 17 and 20."

When we are considering whether S. 21 applies to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction the argument is naturally pressed before us that if Ss. 16, 17 and 20 are expressly excepted from a bundle of provisions dealing with the place of suing it is hard to resist the conclusion that S. 21 is not excepted from application to the Original Side. On the other hand, it must be conceded that as against this principle there is another principle attracted—a principle of very plain strength, namely, that if S. 16 is not to be applied, for example, to the Original Side, any other section which appears to be incidental or ancillary thereto or to be a further working out of what is laid down by S. 16 can hardly be intended to be applicable. It might be as well to examine this matter with some attention to the function of the Code in Ss. 16 to 25 inclusive. I will premise that the jurisdiction of the High Court as it stood in 1908 when this Code was republished depended upon S. 9, High Court Act of 1861. That was an Act of the Imperial Legislature and it is said that:

"Each of the High Courts to be established under this Act shall have and exercise all such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty, Testamentary, Intestate, and Matrimonial Jurisdiction, original and appellate, and all such powers and authority for, and in relation to, the administration of justice in the Presidency for which it is established, as Her Majesty may, by such Letters Patent as aforesaid, grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitations as to the exercise of original, civil and criminal jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Presidency towns as may be prescribed thereby."

It was to have such power and authority as Her Majesty may by Letters Patent grant and direct.

Now, the Letters Patent as it stood in 1908 contained a direction in Cl. 12. Cl. 12 is a clause which if it was to be construed for the first time according to its grammatical construction and in strict accordance with its wording might perhaps have to be given a somewhat different meaning to that which is well settled now in all the High Courts in India. The effect of the construction upon which all the High Courts are agreed is that as regards suits for land the High Court can take cognizance if the land is situate wholly within the local limits or where the land is situate in part only within such limits if leave has been first obtained; and that as regards suits other than those for land the High Court has jurisdiction if the cause of action has arisen wholly within the limits or where the cause of action has arisen in part only within the limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained or if the defendant dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain within these limits. The Letters Patent as they stood in 1908 contained a Cl. 44 which has since been amended by the Letters Patent of 1919. The clause that then stood was:

"All the provisions of these our Letters Patent are subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council."

Now, that being the position of affairs as regards the Original Side, when the legislature in 1908 came to amend and re-edit the Code of Civil Procedure, what was the legislature intending to do by the clauses that are now under consideration? It is necessary to remember that in different provinces of India there are different arrangements as regards Courts subordinate to the District Court. In this province the lowest grade is that of the Munsiff. In other provinces the lowest grade of judicial officers is that of Subordinate Judges. Taking this province by way merely of example and referring to the Act of 1882, the Assam and Bengal Civil Courts Act, one finds that in legislation applicable to each individual province it has already been laid down what Courts are to exist for the purposes of civil work. It has already been laid down that the Local Government is by notification to assign certain territorial jurisdiction to each of those Courts. It has already been laid down that certain grades of officers are to have certain pecuniary limits to their jurisdiction and in some cases the pecuniary limit to an officer's jurisdiction may be entirely personal to himself. When, therefore, the legislature in 1908 came to make the provisions we are now considering, it has to face first of all the High Court with a jurisdiction which was defined by the Letters Patent. It had to face also an agreement different in different provinces by which various kinds of judicial officers under the District Courts were exercising under different limits and under different arrangements various civil powers. In these circumstances I propose to go through these particular sections one by one to see whether any light is thrown upon the question whether S. 21 applies in a case like the present.

The first section is S. 15. This is the opening section under the heading "Place of Suing" and it is to the effect that every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. In view of what I have said as to the different arrangement of Courts subordinate to the District Courts in different provinces it seems reasonably clear that that provision is necessary to enable the subsequent sections to take effect all over British India so as to point out a single Court which is the proper Court for each individual case. The District Judge and the Subordinate Judge and the Munsiff may all have the same territorial jurisdiction theoretically, but this is to say as between which of them in a particular case the proper place of suing is to be. I ask myself—does that apply to the High Court in its original jurisdiction because S. 15 is not one of the sections mentioned in S. 120? It seems to me reasonably clear that it does not. The High Court has no jurisdiction in a case of a Small Cause Court type under Rs. 100; but the Presidency Small Cause Court to which by the way S. 15 is not applicable at all has concurrent jurisdiction up to a certain point with the High Court, and there is a special provision in the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act as to what is to happen if a person brings a suit in this Court above Rs. 100 which might have been brought in the Small Cause Court. It cannot be said that S. 15 has any application in practice or in substance to the original jurisdiction of the High Court. I do not here pause to enquire into the position of the City Civil Court in Madras or matters of that kind. In substance it does not seem to me that it would be a valid argument to say that because S. 15 is not mentioned in S. 120 therefore it must have some application to the original jurisdiction.

The next section is S. 16 which is not, by the terms of S. 120, to be applied to High Court. The reason of that exception as also of Ss. 17 and 20 is perfectly plain. It is that but for the exception it might be well contended that Cl. 12, Letters Patent had been overridden altogether and that the jurisdiction of the High Court was to be found by reference to Cls. 16, 17 and 20. S. 16 is not quite the same though it is not very different from the arrangement to be found in the Letters Patent. It has been said in at least one case that the words "Suit for land" mean the same thing as Cls. (a) to (f) in S. 16; but that it strikes me as a little hazardous. Broadly speaking the difference is that in the case of suits for land where a part of the land is outside the jurisdiction leave is required under the Letters Patent and it is not required under S. 17 of the Code.

I come now to S. 18 and that applies where it is uncertain whether the land in suit is within the jurisdiction of one Court or another. The Court in which the suit is brought may record a statement of this uncertainty and thereupon proceed with the case and that section in its last clause contains a provision not unlike the provision afterwards repeated in S. 21. It is very important, therefore, to make up one's mind whether it can be said that S. 18 applies to the High Court in its original jurisdiction. As to that it seems to me that prima facie the words :

"where it is alleged to be uncertain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which of two or more Courts any immovable property is situate."

must be read as having reference to the words in S. 16 :

"shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate,"

And if I look at the substance of the matter it appears to me to be this that as it is the function of S. 16 in view of the various local Acts such as the Assam and Bengal Civil Courts

Act to lay down Rule so as to distribute among the provincial Courts the business which is likely to arise in respect of immovable properties. S. 18 must be intended to meet cases of dubiosity in the application of that distribution and that it is prima facie wrong to suppose that S. 18 which in a way gives jurisdiction to a Court can operate outside the scope which the legislature has given to itself in S. 16. If one is distributing jurisdiction among certain sets of Courts upon certain principles it is easy to say first of all that the substantive principles are to be such and such and with reference to the same subject matter it is legitimate to go on to say that in cases of uncertainty the jurisdiction which is now being given shall include a certain special jurisdiction for the avoidance of unnecessary litigation; but it is a very different matter to read such a section as S. 18 as giving in effect a further jurisdiction to a Court like the original side of the High Court with reference to which we know that the principles governing jurisdiction are not intended to be affected by this part of the Act. It is possible that one reason why S. 18 is not mentioned in S. 120 is this that S. 18 like S. 19 is dealing not with any one Court but with cases of two Courts. S. 18 like S. 19 would certainly apply if one assumed it to be possible that a small area of land came into question as to which it was uncertain whether it was within or without the Marhatta ditch, and if the suit were brought in a mofussil Court bordering upon the original jurisdiction limits; but these two sections deal with two or more Courts and it may be that had the legislature added Ss. 18 and 19 to the three sections which are mentioned in S. 120 doubt or difficulty would have been raised as to whether the neighbouring mofussil Court could act in such a case on the principles laid down by the sections. That is a possible reason why they have not been mentioned.

As regards S. 19 which deals with compensation for wrongs it matters nothing whether it is made applicable or not made applicable to the original jurisdiction because the principle therein laid down is well within the principles recognized by Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent.

Section 20 again is expressly excluded from being applied to High Courts.

Then we come to the section in question that "No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court"

unless certain conditions apply. There again, it appears to me that it is one thing to say as regards Courts among which you are distributing jurisdiction that not only shall they have what may be called their proper or substantial jurisdiction but that in some cases of doubt or oversight or mistake they shall have a special or anomalous jurisdiction for the sake of avoidance of litigation, and it is a very different matter to say that by a clause placed as this is in the middle of clauses which are not intended to alter the Letters Patent of this Court, even though the right of appeal is granted by the Letters Patent in addition to the Code, is in effect to exercise jurisdiction which is not warranted by the Letters Patent. It appears to me that although the legislature had power in 1908 to override the Letters Patent the legislature is not likely to have intended so to do in the manner which is now contended for.

To continue with this bundle of sections, Ss. 22 and 23 do not seem to take effect upon the original jurisdiction because S. 23 in pointing out the Courts that are to exercise the powers given by S. 22 speaks of Courts subordinate to other Courts and the High Court on the Original Side does not seem to be brought effectively within S. 23.

Section 24 throws no light upon the matter as it is a case where certain powers are expressly conferred upon the High Court and clearly upon the High Court in its original jurisdiction, nor is any further light thrown upon the matter by S. 25. I ought to say that I reject altogether, as having no force at all, the argument that because the words "revisional Court" are mentioned along with the words "appellate Court" in S. 21 this shows that the section does not apply to the Original Side. It is nobody's contention that the section applies only to the Original Side and it is, in my judgment, a point that is altogether bad.

For these reasons it appears to me that it would be unsafe and wrong to hold that S. 21 ought to be applied to the present case and I accept the argument of Sir Benode Mitter to the effect that as regards all properties outside the original jurisdiction of the High Court this suit was without jurisdiction, and that we must give effect to that extent, at all events, to the objection though it is taken in this Court for the first time.

In these circumstances, the question arises as to the case before us so far as it is within the power of the Court under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The Advocate-General on behalf of the plaintiff asks us to grant a declaration such as is asked for by the plaintiff in respect of the three Calcutta properties which at the time of the suit still belonged to the trustees and which subsequent to the suit have been sold by the prior encumbrancers in satisfaction of the prior encumbrances. So far as this question is concerned it is no way necessary to embark upon a discussion of what I have called the second branch of this case upon the merits. There is no question here of the debtors at the time of the Maharaja's mortgage having been in possession of the title-deeds or indeed in possession of the properties and the one question which arises on the merits as regards the Calcutta properties is the question whether or not the trust deed of 1st April 1921, is a good and valid document. If it be a good and valid document, then the question arises whether now in view of the fact that the whole importance of this question as regards the Calcutta properties has really been terminated by the properties being swept away by prior encumbrancers it is proper to make any declaration solely as regards them.

On the first question whether the deed of 1st April 1921 was a good and valid document I have the greatest difficulty in taking the case of the debtors or of the Maharaja with any seriousness. The debtors appear to me (in particular if it be true as the Maharaja says that he took his mortgage in December 1923 without any notice of the document of April 1921) to be rascally and absurd people who owe it to their good fortune or to their relative's weakness that they are not being made the subject matter of some enquiry by a criminal Court. Let us recall how the matter stands. There was a conveyance in trust to those trustees on behalf of the creditors in April 1921. The debtors got their nine months' time. They got another year's time. They got a third-year's time asking for it by letters to the trustees. They were permitted to sell with their own hands and the trustees came in afterwards and made good their title. The trustees knew that the debtors were endeavouring to dispose of their properties and they were allowing them to do so. Then without any question being raised upon the subject they gave a mortgage to their relative in December 1923 not for any further advances but for advances which they had been getting from him in the meantime and there is not a scrap of paper to show that in February 1923 when they borrowed over two lacs they promised to give him any mortgage at all. Let us ask first of all, is it contended in this case to this day that the deed of trust of April 1921 was fraudulent in the sense of S. 53, T. P. Act? I do not think that has been mentioned before this Court. But in any case it would be an extravagant suggestion and it would be further extravagant to pretend that the creditors who were the real beneficiaries under that deed were themselves, taking with notice of its fraudulent character. That consideration may be put on one side. I understand again that if a man makes a deed for the benefit of creditors and communicates it to nobody or communicates it only to the trustee and no creditor either gets to know of it or to assent to it or to act upon it, the deed is a mere mandate and may be revoked. I understand again that it may be possible to execute a deed of arrangement for the benefit of creditors, to communicate it to the trustee and to make it a term that unless all or certain creditors assent the deed is to be of no force or effect. If all do not assent such a person may no doubt if he acts timely and promptly and fairly revoke and say that the condition upon which he was willing to execute the deed has not been fulfilled. That is not suggested. In this case the debtors themselves acted upon the deed, sold the properties with the assent of the trustees and paid money over to the trustees for distribution to the beneficiaries of the deed.

It is merely talking nonsense to suggest that because some creditors mentioned in the agreement of March 1921 failed to sign or because a particular creditor having signed failed to keep his bargain these debtors could in law treat this document as of no effect. It does not occur to me as a reasonable supposition that when these debtors executed the mortgage of 10th December 1923 they were either honest or thought they were honest. To my mind this branch of the case is hopelessly bad and I think that the trustees succeed entirely in establishing that this is a perfectly good deed of trust, I need not explain that had these debtors been adjudicated insolvent on a petition presented at such time that this deed of arrangement could have been availed of as an available act of insolvency then no doubt this arrangement would have fallen to the ground. Such a deed of arrangement under one or other of the definitions of acts of insolvency it would have been almost hopeless to defend. In this case no one appears, so far as I know, to have attempted to make these debtors insolvent and no order of adjudication has ever been made upon a petition presented in time to enable the execution of this deed to be treated as an act of insolvency. I am of opinion, therefore, that this case must be regarded on the footing that the deed was a perfectly good one.

It is not possible in connexion with the Calcutta properties for this Court to consider or decide whether or not the Maharaja can still make a good title on the document to mofussil lands by reason of the fact, as alleged, that the trustees were negligent in leaving the title-deeds with the debtors, that the Maharaja was diligent and that, in fact, in spite of registration he had no notice. That argument applies only to the mofussil properties with which this Court has, in my opinion, no right to intermeddle. The question, therefore, is as regards the Calcutta properties—whether this Court should treat this as a suit having reference to them only and should give a declaration to the trustees although in substance as a matter of business there is no longer any importance in the trustees asserting claim to the equity of redemption in these properties.

I have come to the conclusion that in the present case it would not be right to give any such declaration. I quite agree that the suit as regards these Calcutta properties at the time it was brought was a suit for land. I quite agree that the properties have, as in my view they have, in substance been entirely swept away by prior encumbrancers would not make the suit cease to be competent as a suit for land. But in my judgment this declaration should only be given as a matter of discretion and the discretion has to be exercised upon the whole state of the facts as it appears at the time the declaration is granted. It does seem to me that an entirely idle and useless declaration of this sort should be made with any idea that the judgment of the Court would in that event be a more powerful assistance in some other litigation upon the principle of res judicata. We have no right to deal with the whole of this matter, that is to say, we must in any case leave the Maharaja's contention about the title-deeds for the decision of some other Court. I am not going to give a declaration which I regard as having no possible utility but merely as an excuse for affording an argument to one or other of the parties which covers only half of a case in some other Court. I am of opinion that it would not be right to give a declaration merely for that ulterior purpose and I am of opinion that on its merits this suit would never have been brought for a declaration in respect of the Calcutta properties alone. After all the primary fault is with the plaintiff. It was his business to see that he started this litigation in a proper way and not by originating summons. In the second place, it was his business to see that he got the necessary leave; and, in my judgment, as against him it is not right that we should give a declaration as regards the Calcutta properties having regard to the fact on its merits that there is no occasion for such a declaration to be given.

It appears to me that the remaining question is the question of costs. As regards that matter as the plaintiff's suit in the end is dismissed no view that one can take of either the debtors' conduct or the Maharaja's conduct would make it proper to maintain the order for costs that has been made against him. In my judgment, the circumstances of this case do not require us to order the plaintiff to pay any costs either to the Maharaja or to the debtors at first instance. As regards this appeal, however, it appears to me only right that the Maharaja appellant should have his costs, but in no circumstances can any cost of this appeal be given to the debtors.

In these terms the appeal is allowed, the learned Judge's decree is set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed.

Appeal No. 85 of 1928, Decided on 18th January 1929, against appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Burdwan, dated 8th September 1927.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 88—Whether division is recognized under S. 88 is question of law and appellate Court has to see the facts justifying inference of sub-division.

Whether there has been a division of the tenancy such as is recognized by S. 88 or not is a question not of fact but of law and the Court of second appeal has got to see what are the facts that have been found as justifying an inference of law to the effect that there has been a sub-division within the meaning of S. 88. [P 367 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 88—Inference of sub-division cannot be drawn merely from separate realization of rent.

Merely because there has been separate realization of rent no inference can be drawn to the effect that there was a sub-division which would come within the purview of S. 88: 22 W. R. 295; 22 W. R. 336; 31 Cal. 1026 and 6 C. W. N. 823, Rel. on. [P 368 C 1]

Judgment.—This appeal has been preferred from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan affirming on appeal the decree passed by the Munsiff, 4th Court, Burdwan. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The plaintiff instituted the suit for rent for recovery of paddy rent for two years, namely, 1330 and 1331 at the rate of two maps one sali of paddy per annum with cesses and damages. The suit was instituted on the allegation that the defendant's tenancy consisted of two plots of land. The defence set up was that of the two plots,—Nos. 1 and 2 mentioned in the plaint, No. 2 did not form a part of the tenancy but a different plot of which the plaintiff was in possession of a part of it instead, and so the rent should be suspended. It was also pleaded on behalf of the defence that under an arrangement between the parties the defendant was in possession of plot 1 only for which he had to pay only half the rent. The trial Court held that plot 2 of the plaint did not appertain to the jama and that the other plot of the jama which was not mentioned in the plaint was in the landlord's possession, but as there was sub-division of the jama the defendant was not entitled to get any suspension or abatement of rent and the defendant therefore was liable to pay half the rent. The learned Munsiff therefore made a decree in favour of the plaintiff at the rate of half the rent claimed; namely, for two maps, 1 sali of paddy as rent for the two years in suit together with cesses and damages. Calculating the price at a certain rate and on the basis of a certain standard, to which it is not necessary to refer as no objection has been taken thereto here, the learned Munsiff gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 25-1 anna and 7 pies together with proportionate costs and interest at 6 per cent per annum.

This decree, as I have already stated, has been affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

The learned Subordinate Judge has not thought it necessary to go into the question as to whether plot 2 of the plaint appertained to another jama or not, or whether the other plot which the defendant said formed part of this tenancy was one in respect of which the plaintiff had dispossessed the defendant because he found that there was sub-division of the jama and that in consequence thereof the defendant was liable to pay half the rent claimed in the suit for being in possession of plot 1. It is this finding on the question of sub-division which both the Courts below have arrived at and recorded in their judgment that is challenged before me in this second appeal.

At the outset it should be observed that the question whether there has been a division of tenancy such as is recognized by S. 88, Ben. Ten. Act or not is a question not of fact but of law, and looking at the matter as one of law and not of fact one has got to see what are the facts that have been found as justifying an inference of law to the effect that there has been a sub-division within the meaning of S. 88, Ben. Ten. Act. Now the learned Subordinate Judge has drawn this inference from the contents of three counterfoil receipts. Added to these may be mentioned two thokas which are on the record and which were also relied upon by the learned Munsiff. On examining these documents it seems to me that far from supporting any case of sub-division within the meaning of S. 88, Ben. Ten. Act, the said documents point to a contrary conclusion. The three counterfoil receipts show the name of the tenant as one Sonatan Shau deceased and the total rental as two maps one sali. In one of the rent receipts one map ten gandas was entered as having been realized gujrat Hemangini Dasi marfat one Bibhuti Banerji. In the second counterfoil it was stated that one map ten gandas was realized gujrat Hemangini Dasi. The third counterfoil receipt shows that one map ten gandas of paddy was realized gujrat Pashupati Shau who was probably some predecessor of that defendant, marfat Hemangini Dasi. The Subordinate Judge made a distinction between the words gujrat and marfat in these rent receipts and was able to hold that Hemangini and Pashupati were persons from whom rents were separately realized on account of the shares payable by them. This finding need not be disputed for the present purposes. He has also recorded a finding to the effect that the gomashtha's authority to grant such receipts has not been questioned by the plaintiff.

These two findings of the Subordinate Judge, if accepted, come to this that the gomashtha and for the matter of that the landlord, the plaintiff realized rents from Hemangini and the predecessor of the defendant separately for the shares of rent payable by them. This, however, by itself, fails far short of what is requisite to constitute a sub-division within the meaning of S. 88, Ben. Ten. Act. S. 88 says that a division shall not be binding on the landlord unless it is made with his express consent in writing or with that of his agent duly authorized in that behalf. From the contents of these three documents can it be said that there was consent in writing to the division of the holding? That is the question which has to be considered in the present case. The thokas on which the learned Munsiff relied show that the tenancy was recorded with Sonatan Shau deceased as the tenant. The arrears of rent are mentioned in the thokas as being two maps one sali per year and on the credit side realization of rent separately from Pashupati and some other person whose name is not quite legible is entered, it being shown that one map ten gandas of paddy were realized from each of them. These documents all go to indicate that the tenancy was being treated by the landlord as one tenancy in the name of the deceased tenant Sonatan Shau, and even if the thokas be taken as constituting a rent roll for the purpose of the proviso to S. 88 there is nothing to indicate that there was any consent to divide the holding or distribute the rent payable among the different tenants. Separate realization from the two tenants may have been made only for the sake of convenience. If it be found, as it has been found in the present case, that in all these papers the rental was mentioned as being one undivided rental and the area of the tenancy as one undivided whole in respect of a tenancy standing in the name of one tenant who was deceased, I am unable to hold that merely because there has been separate realization of rent any inference can be drawn to the effect that there was a sub-division which would come within the purview of S. 88, Ben. Ten. Act.

As authority for the view I take I may refer to Gour Mohun v. Anund (1); Ruheemuddy v. Poorno Chunder (2). A point similar to this came up for consideration before this Court in the case of Jnanendra Mohan Chowdhury v. Gopal Das (3). In that case relying upon the decision in the case of Moharant Beni Pershad Koeri v. Gobardhan Koeri (4), it was held that when a holding is in occupation of several tenants at one entire rental the fact that landlord's Tahsildar has accepted from the various tenants proportionate parts of the rent does not bind the landlord to recognize a separation of the tenancy in the absence of evidence to connect the landlord with the receipt of any proportionate share of rent by the Tahsildar. In the present case the authority of the gomashtha not having been questioned, it may be conceded that the plaintiff landlord did in point of fact accept from the two tenants proportionate parts of the rent due from them :

"Even then if the inference be accepted that rent has been paid separately by defendant 2 and realized by the landlord for a long series of years, that in itself is not sufficient to constitute a division of the tenure and what is in itself insufficient to denote a division of the tenure can hardly be accepted as sufficient to supply the defect in the receipt in the present case."

Beyond the documents to which I have referred and which are not sufficient to establish that there was a division of the tenancy, there is nothing else in the present case to show that there was such a division. It was never the plaintiff's case in his plaint that there was a sub-division of the holding and in fact this suit was instituted on the footing of the tenancy having been undivided one with an entire rental payable by the defendant.

I am accordingly of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside and that the case should be sent back to his Court so that he may now proceed to deal with the other two questions that arise in connexion with it and which were left open in view of the finding on the question of sub-division that is to be found in the said judgment. The said two questions are: first, whether plot 2 mentioned in the plaint or some other plot not mentioned therein appertains to the jama in suit, and second, whether the defendant has been dispossessed by the plaintiff in respect of any portion of the land which forms part of his jama. On the findings that he may happen to come to in connexion with the aforesaid two questions will depend the ultimate decision of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge will deal with the appeal finally after determining the aforesaid questions and any other questions that may possibly arise.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Civil Revn. No. 1508 of 1928, Decided on 20th February 1929, against decision of Munsiff, 2nd Court, Contai, D/- 8th September 1928.

* Contract Act, S. 2 (d)—Plaintiff asking defendant to bring Thakur on particular festival and inviting guests for feeding on that day—Defendant failing to bring Thakur and consequently guests going away without taking food—No evidence to prove that defendant promised to bring Thakur on plaintiff inviting guests—There is no consideration for the promise and no suit for damages would lie.

Plaintiff asked the defendant to bring a Thakur to his house on a certain date for a festival. On that day he made arrangements for Bhog and feeding of guests. The defendant promised to bring the Thakur to his house on that date but failed to do so. Thereupon, the guests who had arrived did not partake of the food prepared by the plaintiff and went away. This caused loss to the plaintiff and the plaintiff, therefore, sued the defendant for damages.

Held : that in the absence of any finding to the effect that the defendant promised to bring the Thakur to the plaintiff's house in consideration of the plaintiff's inviting a number of people to dinner, there was no case for damages against the defendant although he had failed to keep his promise. There was no consideration for the promise which the defendant made to the plaintiff for bringing the Thakur to the plaintiff's house : 14 Cal. 64, Dist. [P 370 C 1]

Judgment.—This rule was granted at the instance of the defendant who has been made liable for Rs. 37 and odd as damages for what has been called a breach of contract. The case is somewhat peculiar. The plaintiff's allegation was that he asked the defendant to bring a Thakur to his house on a certain date for a festival. He had made arrangements for Bhog and feeding of guests. The defendant promised to bring the Thakur to his house on that date but failed to do so. Thereupon, the guests who had arrived did not partake of the food prepared by the plaintiff and went away. This caused loss to the plaintiff and the plaintiff, therefore, sued the defendant for damages. The learned Small Cause Court Judge allowed half of the claim made by the plaintiff, because he thought that no satisfactory evidence had been given as to the amount of the loss incurred by him on account of the defendant's failure to bring the Thakur. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to decide who the real shewbait of the Thakur was or who its owner was. The plaintiff's case is that one Jiban Das had the Thakur which he left in the custody of the defendant. The defendant's case seems to be that he is the owner of the Thakur and he being an old man, his nephew performs the Sheba and is in charge of the deity now. The Small Cause Court Judge has found that there was what is called a Chukti by the defendant to bring the Thakur to the plaintiff's house on that particular day. He has also found that the plaintiff had invited number of guests who dispersed after sometime in the evening as the Thakur was not brought and no Bhog was offered. It may be taken as a fact that the learned Small Cause Court Judge intended to find that the guests did not partake of the food that was prepared by the plaintiff. The question is : does the act of the defendant give rise to any legal liability for which he should be cast in damages or, in other words, was there any contract enforceable in law for breach of which the defendant would be liable for damages? It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that there was no consideration for the promise, which could be legally enforced and that being so, there was no breach of a legal contract for which the defendant could be made liable for damages. In support of his argument he put forward the familiar illustration of A asking B to dinner and the failure of B to attend, in which case there being no legal obligation on the part of B, there would not lie suit for damages for breach of the promise to come and dine.

The learned advocate for the plaintiff opposite party argues that there was consideration for the promise made by the defendant to bring the Thakur to his house, because the plaintiff did invite a large number of persons to partake of the Bhog on the belief that the defendant would bring the Thakur to his house. He refers to the definition of consideration in the Contract Act in support of his contention. On reading the definition it seems to me to be very difficult to say that the plaintiff who is in the position of the promisee did something at the desire of the promisor, i. e., the defendant petitioner in this case. There is nothing in the facts found which can support the contention that the defendant asked the plaintiff to invite a number of persons as a consideration for the promise of his taking the Thakur to his house. Reliance, again, is placed on behalf of the opposite party to the case of Kedar Nath Bhattacharji v. Gourie Mahomed (1) in support of his argument. There, the defendant put down his name as a subscriber for the building of a Town Hall in Howrah. The learned Chief Justice, Sir Comer Petheram, in delivering the judgment of the Court observed at p. 66 :

"It is clear that there are a great many subscriptions that cannot be recovered. A man for some reason or other puts his name down for a subscription to some charitable object, for instance, but the amount of his subscription cannot be recovered from him because there is no consideration."

In that particular case, however, he found on the facts that there was consideration for the promise made by the subscriber to pay money for the building of the Town Hall. This case may be said to be akin to the facts of the case which I have now to deal with : but it does not cover the facts of the present case. If there had been any finding to the effect that the defendant promised to bring the Thakur to the plaintiff's house in consideration of the plaintiff's inviting a number of people to dinner, there might possibly have been a case for damages against the defendant if he had failed to keep his promise. But there is nothing in this case which may be construed as consideration for the promise which the defendant is said to have made to the plaintiff for bringing the Thakur to the plaintiff's house. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the suit of the plaintiff was not maintainable. The rule is, accordingly made absolute and the suit of the plaintiff dismissed with costs in both the Courts. Civil Rule No. 1 of 1929, Decided on 12th February 1929, against order of Sub-Judge, Mymensingh, D/- 19th December 1928, in partition suit No. 211 of 1928.

* Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Para. 3—Partition suit—Parties filing petition of compromise in terms of which Court passed preliminary decree—Earlier part of that petition defining shares of parties and latter part laying down procedure to effect division including appointment of arbitrators—Petition not applying for order of reference—There was no valid order of reference—Although latter part of petition relating to arbitration proved abortive, preliminary decree based on its first part will stand—Compromise—Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3.

Parties to a partition suit arrived at a compromise and jointly filed a petition of compromise in terms of which the Court passed a preliminary decree. The earlier part of the petition set out the respective shares of the parties and the latter part laid down the procedure by which the actual division was to be effected. This procedure included appointment of certain persons as arbitrators. But the petition nowhere made any mention of the application for an order of reference which the parties were to make. The arbitration did not prove successful.

Held : that there was no valid order of reference inasmuch as there was no application by the parties for such an order. [P 372 C 2]

Held further : that although the latter part of the petition of compromise relating to procedure and appointment of arbitrators proved abortive, still the preliminary decree passed by the Court on the basis of the earlier part of it will stand : *Cameron v. Benode Mitter, Birendra K. De, and Ramendra Ch. Roy—for Opposite Party.

Mitter, J.—The facts on which this rule depends may be briefly stated thus: The plaintiffs who are the petitioners before this Court instituted a suit for partition. The parties to the partition proceedings agreed ultimately to settle their differences on certain terms which were embodied in a petition. That petition was filed in Court and, on the basis of that agreement a preliminary decree was passed on 17th September 1928. The order runs as follows :

"Parties have filed a petition of compromise. Ordered that the suit be decreed in terms being in preliminary form and that the petition of compromise be made a part of the decree and that the case be put up for orders on 17th January 1929."

On 24th September 1928, the preliminary decree was signed and sealed. It is necessary to set forth some of the terms of the petition of compromise in order to understand the points raised in this rule. The first ten paragraphs of the petition of compromise adjusted the rights of the parties to the moveable and immovable properties which formed the subject-matter of partition and they also related to the adjustment of the claim for accounts. Para. 11 and the subsequent paragraphs related to the procedure which was to be adopted for the purpose of working out the rights of the parties as agreed to and settled by the first ten paragraphs. Para. 11 stated that the division of the moveable and immovable properties with reference to which the parties had settled their rights in the earlier paragraphs of the petition of compromise was to be made by two arbitrators of the name of Babu Satya Ranjan Guha and Babu Sasi Kumar Bose, latter being a relation of the parties. It was also stated that the division was to be made within six months from the date of the compromise. It was further stated that whatever award the arbitrators might make would be binding on the parties. It was also recited in the petition that, in case there was a difference of opinion between the two arbitrators, the matter was to be referred to a third person as umpire and, if again there was difference of opinion between these three persons, the opinion of the majority would prevail. Para. 12 recited that, if the arbitrators were unable to finish their work within six months, it would be open to them to apply to the Court to have an extension of time. If for any reason, para. 13 recited, the arbitrators were unable or were unwilling to carry on the work of arbitration, then it would be open to the civil Court to appoint a commissioner for the purpose of effecting the partition of the divisible properties. It is not necessary to refer in detail to the subsequent paragraphs of the petition of compromise. It is sufficient to state that some of these provisions referred to the appointment of a common manager to carry on the management of the estate sought to be partitioned so long as the works of the arbitrators were not finished. There is nothing in this petition of compromise which suggests that the parties were to apply to the Court for a reference to arbitration, and, as a matter of fact, while this petition of compromise was made a part of the decree of Court, no orders were passed by the Court with reference to arbitration and that was done, it seems to me, for a very good reason because the petition did not refer to any application for arbitration nor was the Court's attention drawn by the advocates on both sides to the necessity of an order of reference to arbitration. The plaintiffs themselves apprehended that the petition of compromise was not sufficient in itself to show that there was a clause by which the parties agreed to apply to the Court for reference to arbitration ; for, I find that on 27th November 1928, the plaintiffs put in a petition asking for a formal order of reference to arbitration. They stated in their petition that they had already appointed *Babu Satya Ranjan Guha and Babu Sasi Kumar Bose as arbitrators by a solenama and that, therefore, it was necessary that the Court should direct a reference to the arbitrators to arbitrate ; otherwise, technical and subtle difficulties might arise. This application, it is necessary to state, was made without notice to the other side the defendant opposite party, and was heard in his absence and the Court made this ex parte order :

"It seems that a formal order of reference should be drawn up and sent to the arbitrators so that no technical questions may arise in future."

As soon as the defendant came to know of this order, he moved the Court on 29th November 1928 and filed two petitions complaining of the illegality of the order of reference made on 27th November and pointed out in para. 3 of his petition that, as there was no stipulation in the petition of compromise to the effect that the parties were to apply to the Court with reference to arbitration, the Court was not right in making the reference. This application of the defendant was heard in the presence of both sides and the Court passed an order on 19th December 1928 revoking the reference to arbitration. This order forms the subject-matter of the present rule.

It is contended by the learned advocate for the petitioners that it was not open to the Court to revoke the reference to arbitration as none of the causes which are mentioned in S. 5, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., existed in the present case. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that there was no valid reference in this case. He remarked that "the preliminary decree is no doubt binding upon the parties; but as matters stand now, I do not think that it would be proper to have the partition effected by the two gentlemen mentioned in the petition of compromise."

The Subordinate Judge also stated that it was not right to allow Babu Sasi Kumar Bose to work as common manager of the parties. It is necessary to note here one circumstance, namely, that notwithstanding the provision in the petition of compromise to the effect that Sasi Babu was not to employ for the management of the property sought to be partitioned any officer of any of the parties, the said gentleman appointed one of the plaintiffs and his officers to collect the rents of the estate and it is said that it was in distinct violation of the agreement on which the preliminary decree was based. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered that the common manager should also be removed from the common managership and directed him to file all the papers that were in his custody relating to the estate. On these facts, the main question which falls for determination is as to whether there has been a valid reference to arbitration within the meaning of S. 3, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. On behalf of the opposite party, Sir Binod Mitter has contended that, in order to find the jurisdiction of the Court to refer a particular matter to arbitration, two elements are necessary. The first element necessary is that there must be an agreement between all the parties to the suit that any matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration and the second element necessary is that the parties must apply to the Court for an order of reference. It is said that the second element is wanting in the present case. I think this contention of the learned counsel for the opposite party must prevail. From what I have stated above it is apparently clear that there was no mention in the petition of compromise of any application which the parties were to make to the Court for the purpose of referring the matter which formed the subject-matter of dispute between them to arbitration. The plaintiffs discovered that subsequently and tried to remedy the defect by putting in the application of 27th November without notice to the opposite party. It is an elementary rule of law obtaining in every system of jurisprudence that no one is bound by an order which was made in his absence. When the defendant came to know of the order, he was quite justified in saying that the ex parte order which was made in his absence was not binding on him and the Court after hearing both sides made the order which is now complained of. It is said on behalf of the petitioners that there has been a substantial compliance with the first part of S. 1, Sch. 2 seeing that the petition of compromise was filed before the Court and the Court passed a preliminary decree on it. I do not think that there has been any compliance at all; for, it does not appear that the Court's attention was drawn to the fact that the parties had applied to the Court for an order of reference. As I have already pointed out, no such terms could be found in the petition of compromise. All that the Court did was to pass a preliminary decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise which were presented by the parties. The Court's function ended then and there and it was not asked to do any other thing. In these circumstances, I think that this rule ought to be discharged in the view that there was no valid order of reference as is found by the learned Subordinate Judge.

It is then said on behalf of the petitioners that this is a course which will have the effect of setting aside a compromise decree in part and it will be extremely prejudicial to the plaintiffs petitioners seeing that the opposite party will be entitled to retain the benefit of the compromise in part and will not be bound by the terms which are not favourable to him. It is also said that it is not possible to divide the petition of compromise into two parts so as to make the order made by the Court effective for any purpose. I do not think that there is any force in this contention. Reading the petition of compromise it appears to me that the first ten paragraphs refer to the rights of the parties in the moveable and immovable properties which formed the subject-matter of the partition suit and the other paragraphs relate to the mode in which the partition was to be effected. It is true that all the stipulations in the agreement formed an integral part of the same agreement ; but as it is possible to divide it into two parts and to treat the first part as relating to the rights of the parties and the subsequent part as relating to the machinery by which those rights are to be worked out no practical difficulty will arise in carrying out the order made by the Court below. That such a course is permissible receives ample support from a decision of the Privy Council which has been cited to us namely, the case of Cameron v. Cuddy (1) where in somewhat similar circumstances Lord Shaw observed as follows :

When an arbitration for any reason becomes abortive, it is the duty of a Court of law, in working out a contract of which such an arbitration is part of the practical machinery to supply the defect which has occurred. It is the privilege of a Court in such circumstances and it is the duty to come to the assistance of parties by the removal of the impasse and the extrication of their rights. This rule is in truth founded upon the soundest principle, it is practical in its character and it furnishes by an appeal to a Court of justice the means of working out and of preventing the defect of bargains between the parties. It is unnecessary to cite authority on the subject but the judgment of Lord Watson in Hamlyn and Co. v. Talisker Distillery (2) might be referred to.

It is said on behalf of the petitioners that whatever might be said with regard to the agreement these principles cannot apply to a case where on the basis of the agreement a decree of Court is passed. But it has now been firmly established on high authority that an agreement is none the less an agreement because superadded to it is the command of the Judge. This agreement although embodied in a decree of the Court, possesses all the infirmities of an ordinary contract. Therefore, the same principle which is said to govern the agreement in the case before the Privy Council just referred to will also govern the present case, although the agreement in the present case has been followed by a decree of Court. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the rule must be discharged with discharged with costs, hearing-fee five gold mohurs.

C. C. GHOSE AND BUCKLAND, JJ.

Satyabrata Sen—Appellant.

v.

Gopal Das Aurora & Co.—Respondents.

Appeal No. 91 of 1927, Decided on 18th November 1927, against original order of Costello, J.

Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12—Suit to enforce equitable mortgage is one for land.

The practice of the Calcutta High Court for more than half a century has been to regard suits for the enforcement of equitable mortgage of property situate outside the jurisdiction as suits for land : A. I. R. 1927.Bom. 278 (F. B.) not. Foll. [P 374 C 1]

S. N. Banerjee and P. C. Basu—for Appellant.

C. C. Ghose, J.—In this case the plaintiff is the appellant before us. What happened is as follows: The plaintiff lent and advanced in Calcutta on 18th July 1924, a sum of Rs. 5,000 to the defendants named in para. 4 of the plaint, the said defendants executing a promissory note for the said amount. It appears that at the time when the said advance was made the title-deeds of a certain property outside the territorial jurisdiction of this Court were deposited with the plaintiff as collateral security for the said amount. The defendants not having repaid to the plaintiff the amount of the principal and of the interest which had accrued due, the plaintiff presented a plaint in this Court on 10th August 1927, for admission, praying for a declaration that an equitable mortgage had been created by the deposit of the said title-deeds and for the usual mortgage decree. No part of the mortgaged premises being situate within the jurisdiction of this Court, the plaintiff prayed for leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent to institute the suit in this Court. Costello, J. refused such leave and his order was as follows:

"Following the established practice of this Court I refuse leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The plaint is therefore rejected

(1) [1914] A. C. 651=110 L. T. 89=83 L. J. P. C. 70.

I express no opinion of my own as to whether or not the established practice is well founded having regard to the terms of Cl. 12 and certain decisions thereon in other High Courts."

It is against this order of Costello, J., that the present appeal has been preferred. Mr. Banerjee who appeared for the appellant contended that the practice of this Court not to entertain suits for enforcement of mortgage of premises situate outside the jurisdiction of this Court is not correct and in support of his contention he relied on the Full Bench case in the Bombay High Court: Hatimbhai Hassanally v. Framroz Eduljee (1). He also drew our attention to several cases decided in this Court and contended that the practice hitherto followed in this Court is not warranted, having regard to the fact that, at any rate, a part of the cause of action had arisen within Calcutta and that the whole question should be reviewed by us.

We have not had the advantage of having the question argued on behalf of the respondents to this appeal, and in the absence of any argument on behalf of the respondents and speaking for myself, I am by no means satisfied that the practice hitherto followed in this Court is wrong and should be departed from, nor am I convinced that the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in the Bombay High Court is one which should be followed. In my view this appeal should be dismissed.

Buckland, J.—The way this matter comes before us does not admit of giving the questions involved that full consideration which a point of such moment requires. The practice of the Court for more than half a century has been, to regard suits, of this kind as suits for land. I should not be prepared to disturb this practice except after hearing the matter fully argued on both sides. The dissenting judgments in Hatimbhai Hassanally v. Framroz Eduljee Dinshaw (1) only increases the difficulty, for the learned Judges who took divergent views all give reasons of great cogency for their opinions. I am not convinced that the view of the law taken by the Court for so many years is wrong and I agree in the order to be made.

Rankin, C. J.—The plaintiff in 1909 obtained a money decree against the defendant and his brother for Rs. 27-8-0. After much contest it has been found by the lower appellate Court that in 1913 the defendant and his brother transferred to the plaintiff 10 cottahs of land in satisfaction of all debts on whatever account due to the plaintiff and that thus the decretal amount was discharged. It is clear, however, that this adjustment of the decree was not certified by the plaintiff under O. 21, R. 2 and that the judgment-debtors failed to apply to the Court within the ninety days prescribed by Art. 174, Sch. 1, Lim. Act 1908, to have the adjustment recorded. Cl. 3 of the rule took effect accordingly; the adjustment "shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree." In this state of things the plaintiff in 1914 sought to have execution of the decree; the defendant set up the adjustment as an objection in the execution case: but this objection being clearly unsustainable it was not persisted in and was dismissed for default on 23rd November 1914. The land in suit was sold in execution and purchased by the plaintiff in 1915 and in 1916 delivery of possession was given to the plaintiff under O. 21, R. 95. The lower appellate Court has come to no specific findings on the matter but the plaintiff's averment was that he had peaceable possession until 1919 when the defendant committed various acts of trespass and soon thereafter dispossessed the plaintiff. Whether the possession given to the plaintiff in 1916 was effective and complete or so ineffective and incomplete as to deserve the adjective "symbolical" is of no importance in the present suit which was instituted in 1925. The only question is as to the plaintiff's title there being no room for objection to the claim on the ground of limitation. The plaintiff put in evidence the sale certificate dated 22nd May 1915. The defendant contends that the decree having been satisfied in 1913 the proceedings of 1914—16 were had in fraud of the defendant and that this is a defence which the Court in the present suit must entertain as it goes to the validity of the plaintiff's title.

This raises an important question and the reference to this Full Bench states the question in this form:

"Whether an objection to an execution sale on the ground that the decree in execution of which the sale took place was satisfied prior to the sale might be pleaded by way of defence in a suit by the purchaser for possession of the property sold in execution of the decree although such objection was raised in execution proceedings but was not determined on account of the laches of the judgment-debtor in allowing the objection case to be dismissed for default?"

Now I think that for the purposes of the present case the circumstance that the objection was raised before the executing Court and the circumstance that the objection was before that Court abandoned are devoid of all importance. The defendant was forbidden by Cl. 3, R. 2, O. 21, to raise before any Court executing the decree the plea that the decree had been satisfied and it may safely be supposed that his failure to persist in that plea is explained by the fact that it could not be entertained. He is no worse off and no better off for having thought of raising it. As he could neither bring a suit nor apply under S. 47 there is no question of the defendant having lost by laches his right to impeach the sale. Thus the present case is altogether free of any complication such as may arise when the objection taken to defeat an auction-purchaser's suit in ejectment is of a kind which might and should have been taken and decided in the executing Court. If for example the objection be that the judgment-debtor's interest in the property was of a kind that was not saleable in execution, a question may arise whether the objection comes too late, whether the defendant having (for example) suffered an order for sale or an order confirming the sale can take the objection at a late stage and dispute the previous orders. This question may arise upon the judgment-debtor's application under S. 47 to set aside the sale as in Durga Charan v. Kali Prasanna (1). If it be true that S. 47 permits the defendant in a subsequent ejectment suit to assert by his defence the invalidity of the sale it may be that the same question can arise in a suit. It was thought to arise and it was dealt with in Murullah v. Sh. Burullah (2) and Dwarkanath Pal v. Tarini Sankar Roy (3).

In these cases the Court was proceeding on the footing of an erroneous doctrine laid down in Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth (4) to the effect that a non-transferable occupancy holding was not saleable in execution, a doctrine which has now been negatived in Chandra Binode v. Alabux (5). Apart from this doctrine and apart from the question whether S. 47 can apply to bar a defendant, Bhiram

Ali's case (4) appears to have proceeded on the ground, not that the sale was liable to be set aside, but that the plaintiff took nothing by his purchase. It may be doubted whether this reasoning was sound. If a judgment-debtor has no interest the purchaser takes nothing by his purchase. But if he has an interest and the execution Court purports to pass it by a sale the objection that it was not transferable or saleable would seem, in the defendant's mouth at least, to be an objection to the propriety of the sale; and if this objection is not based on want of jurisdiction in or fraud practised on the execution Court, it is not evident to me that the defendant in another Court can raise the point at all, unless indeed it can be said that apart from S. 47 the merits of an order in execution can be revised by a separate suit between the parties. The cases to which I have referred and Beni Madhab Rai Charan (6) thus raise more than one question of difficulty. It is not necessary here to discuss them all.

We are required to consider what consequences the legislature has intended to attach to a failure on the part of a judgment-debtor who has satisfied the decree, to get the satisfaction or adjustment recorded under R. 2, O. 21. For this purpose the rule has to be read with S. 47 of the Code which enacts that "all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit."

It is clear enough nor is it disputed that Cl. 3, R. 2, O. 21, prevents the adjustment from impeding in any way the course of execution. The decree-holder can insist upon and obtain an order for attachment, an order for sale, an order confirming the sale, a sale certificate and delivery of possession of the property sold. Is this intended by the legislature to be provisional, as a means whereby the execution Court may carry out its work with celerity but subject to the judgment-debtor's right to set it all aside by appropriate proceedings based on the ground of fraud or on other grounds. Now, the Code does provide instances of an intention that in some cases an execution Court should act subject to check or control by the result of a subsequent suit. Claims by third parties to property attached in execution are to be investigated in manner provided by O. 21, R. 60 and by R. 63 the losing party may bring a suit to establish his right. A similar arrangement is made by R. 103 as regards claims by a third party which arise or are preferred at the time of delivery of possession. But questions between decree-holder and judgment-debtor as to whether the decree has been satisfied or adjusted are not so treated by the Code, and it is clear enough that a judgment-debtor who has failed to have an adjustment recorded can neither bring a suit to set aside the sale on the footing of the adjustment nor apply under S. 47 for any such relief. The former course is forbidden by S. 47 and the latter by Cl. 3, R. 2, O. 21. He may bring a suit for damages for the decree-holder's breach of contract or for recovery of the money paid under the adjustment; these are not questions of execution of the decree nor are they proper to be raised in a Court whose duty is confined to executing the decree. They may in some wide sense be questions "relating to the discharge or satisfaction of the decree" but they are not within the meaning of these words as used in S. 47. Whether damages be recovered or not, the sale in execution will stand; and the executing Court will neither be troubled with a dispute as to the fact of an adjustment, nor required to adjust the rights of the auction purchaser on the footing that the sale has become void.

If these be admitted consequences of a failure to get an adjustment recorded, the question arises whether it is consistent with the language and intention of the legislature to suppose that the judgment-debtor who is so effectually debarred from challenging the sale either in the execution Court or as plaintiff in an independent suit, is at liberty, after retaking possession of the property, to challenging the validity of the sale as defendant to an ordinary suit in ejectment. This is the construction for which the defendants contend, and on the meaning of S. 47 he cites as authority: Bhiram Ali's case (5), already mentioned; also Nil Kamal v. Jahnabi (7); Durga Charan v. Karamat

These decisions have been doubted in Ramsona v. Naba Kumur (14): cf. also Malkarjun v. Narhari (15), and in my opinion they are wrong and should be overruled upon this question. I am unable to see that they are consistent either with the language or the purpose of the legislature in enacting S. 47. A question between plaintiff and defendant as to whether the decree has been satisfied or is a decree of which the plaintiff is entitled to have execution is clearly one of a class of questions which "shall be determined by the Court executing the decree." This does not mean merely that the execution Court must determine it, if it is raised in the course of the execution proceedings. It means that the Court executing the decree is given exclusive jurisdiction over this matter as being one which relates to the execution. The words "and not by a separate suit" show clearly that the section is forbidding for this purpose the use of the ordinary means whereby rights are determined. This is on my reading of the section an express negative to carry out and make clear the purpose of the section in pointing to a particular Court as the proper Court. This reading is enforced in my opinion by the facts that the Court to which the section points (1) is governed by particular rules which affect the rights of the parties e. g., O. 21, R. 2 (3) (2) is not governed under S. 141 by the same procedure as is applied to suits; (3) is a Court before which the parties are already arraigned by service of the prescribed notices and (4) is the Court which has seisin of the execution. To say that questions relating to the execution of the decree "shall be determined by the Court executing the decree" means more than that such Court has jurisdiction to determine them. How much more? Merely that the Court when called upon is not to shirk its duty? Certainly not. It means that a party to any suit which has been decreed, who finds it necessary to raise such questions as are mentioned must get them determined in the execution and cannot carry them for decision to another jurisdiction. As between parties and their representatives the act of the Court in effecting a sale is to confer title to property and not merely title to litigation:

"It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible per Lord Macnaghten Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (16)."

That is one part of the purpose of S. 47. Another part of its purpose is to ensure that execution matters shall be dealt with by the executing Court and on the principles laid down for execution cases. It seems to me that in S. 47 the prohibition of a suit is a provision in aid of the previous direction which means that questions within the scope of the section shall be determined in execution and not otherwise. In these circumstances the argument that the section says "and not by a separate suit" as distinct from "and not in a separate suit" seems to me to be pedantic rather than substantial. The ordinary rule on questions of jurisdiction is that relief which a Court cannot give to a plaintiff it cannot give at all. It is only in a Court which has jurisdiction to grant specific performance or rescission of a contract or the setting aside of a conveyance that a defendant can make good a defence which depends upon his right to have such relief Mostyn's case (17), Warren v. Murray (18), Walsh v. Lonsdale (19), Manchestor Brewery v. Coombs (20) and the case is even stronger when one is construing a section of which the purpose is to keep execution questions for the executing Court. It is in my

"could only have been determined by the order of the Court which executed the decree : cf. Prosunno Kumar's case (16) (at 688)."

when a judgment-debtor's property has been sold in execution and the judgment-debtor has been put out of possession by the Court's delivery of possession to the purchaser, it seems clear both on principle and authority that he cannot upon any allegation of fraud claim to ignore the sale. He may have a right to set the sale aside in appropriate proceedings and some cases this right may be admitted at least in equity as a defence to a claim. I will assume, without deciding the question, that this right may be asserted by a defendant even after the Limitation Act has made it impossible for him to institute proceedings to enforce it. But if there is no right to have sale set aside the case is very different. Here it has to be conceded that neither in execution nor by a suit could the defendant at any time have asserted that the sale was liable to be set aside at his instance. There is only one Court in which he could have claimed the relief and in that Court he had failed to do what was necessary to enable to set up his case. Upon what principle can he claim as a defendant to be in a better position to challenge the sale than he would have occupied in a proceeding brought by himself for the purpose? It seems to me that we have to choose in this case between two views of the intention of the legislature. On one view the failure to get an adjustment of the decree recorded involves that the defendant must treat the sale as valid and seek his remedy in damages or otherwise without challenging the sale. On the other view he must suffer ejectment under R. 95, O. 21 and can by no proceedings seek to be restored to possession, but, if he seizes possession, he can claim that the sale was never binding upon him and that he is the rightful owner. This it would seem to follow, he can do at any time, provided that his ouster of the decree-holder auction-purchaser was within twelve years of delivery of possession. In my opinion the former view is correct and the latter view is erroneous. It is part of the purpose of S. 47 to ensure that so far as regards parties to the suit the executing Court shall, where the decree itself is valid, settle and decide the right to have execution and give a title to the purchaser. It is no part of its purpose to put a premium upon the forceful or wrongful seizure of possession, or to make titles valid or invalid according as the one party or the other is plaintiff or defendant in any litigation subsequent to the sale—a thing which is matter of pure chance. How little the defendant's possession has to do with the matter can be seen by the circumstance that he cannot resist eviction under R. 95, O. 21. On the contrary, I agree in the conclusion arrived at in Jagneswar v. Kailash (21), that under R. 92, O. 21 an order confirming the sale is intended as a judicial determination between the parties that none of the objections exists upon which the validity of the sale could have been questioned. The legislature in enacting Cl. 3, R. 2, O. 21, cannot have been ignorant that decrees would be executed despite unrecorded adjustments, and that such cases would commonly, if not necessarily, raise a question of fraud. On a question of title and on a question of fraud it is highly difficult in my judgment to suppose that the legislature intended neither that the sale should hold good nor that the judgment-debtor should be able by proceedings of his own to have it set aside.

It remains to consider an argument adduced by the learned advocate for the defendant to the effect that the right he claims is given to him by S. 44, Evidence Act. That section refers, not to all judgment, orders or decrees that may be put in evidence, but to those only which are relevant under Ss. 40, 41 or 42. It is said that S. 40 has some application to this case.

"The existence of any judgment, order or decree which by law prevents any Court from taking cognizance of a suit, or holding a trial is a relevant fact when the question is whether such Court ought to take cognizance of such suit or to hold such trial."

I have not succeeded in understanding what judgment or order is thought to have been tendered by the plaintiff under this section. The plaintiff to prove this title produced his sale certificate dated 22nd May 1915 which was Ex. 3. He did not have to produce, and I do not find from the record that he did in fact produce, or exhibit the order for sale or the order confirming the sale. He produced the sale certificate as his title-deed just as he might with appropriate proof have produced a conveyance executed by the defendant. Nothing was at any time put in evidence for the purpose of saying that it prevented the Court from taking cognizance of the suit or any part of the suit or any part of the defence. This is not a case like Rajib. Panda v. Lakhan Sindh (22) where the plaintiff put forward a compromise decree to prove his right to khas possession. A sale certificate is not a plea of res judicata. The plaintiff does not say:

"We litigated before as to whether the land was yours or mine and the Court held it to be mine."

He says :

"The Court sold it to me in execution and by the act of the Court your title passed to me."

The defendant wishing to show that the act of the Court did not pass the title, is barred, not by S. 11 of the Code, but by S. 47. He is barred just as he would be barred if he brought a probate suit before a Munsiff, or a suit for a lac of rupees in the Small Cause Court. S. 40, Evidence Act, applies to a case in which the Court has jurisdiction to decide a matter and one party says that it should not do so because that matter has been decided before. In the present case the trial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the defence raised and it could so decide upon the pleadings upon a mere inspection of the defendant's own statement of his case. We were referred to the case of Gujju Lal v. Fatteh Lal (23), which is no longer authoritative in view of decisions of the Privy Council of Ram Ranjan v. Ram Narain (24), Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Prasad (25), Tepu Khan v. Ranjani (26); but in my judgment there is nothing in the reasoning of that case which assists the defendant on the present point.

I would in answer to the question referred to us say that an objection to an execution sale on the ground that the decree in execution of which the sale took place was satisfied prior to the sale cannot be pleaded by the judgment-debtor by way of defence in a suit by the plaintiff as purchaser for possession of the property sold in execution of the decree.

The second appeal should be allowed and the decree of the Munsiff restored with costs in all the Courts. Hearing fee before Full Bench ten gold mohurs.

Facts.—Certain land was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and compensation award was deposited in the office of the President of the Tribunal by the Collector under S. 31, Land Acquisition Act. The property acquired belonged to a Hindu Mitakshara joint family of which the petitioner was the karta. He applied for withdrawing of the compensation money on behalf of the family. The President of the Tribunal refused the application for withdrawing the compensation by the karta of the family, holding that the karta was not a person who had power to alienate the property as contemplated in S. 32, Land Acquisition Act. The petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained a rule. Their Lordships at the time of issuing the rule directed that notice of the rule should be served on the minors, the other members of the joint family.

Judgment.—We examined the records in these two rules and we are of opinion that those rules must be made absolute.

As regards the rule which was obtained by Mr. Sushil Sen there is not much difficulty because all the parties interested in the compensation money that was awarded are before us and they are agreeable that the compensation money should be allowed to be withdrawn by the karta of the family.

As regards the other rule, namely, the one obtained by Sir Benod-Mitter, in our view this case cannot be distinguished from case of Dindyal v. Ram Sahu (1). In the last mentioned case the karta of the family was allowed to withdraw the compensation money. We see no reason why a similar order should not be made in this case.

No order is made as to costs in either of these rules.

Appeal No. 1220 of 1926, Decided on 16th August 1928, from decree of 4th Addl. Dist. Judge, 24-Perganas, D/- 13th February 1926.

(a) Specific Relief Act, S. 42 — Cosharer granting lease of whole property—Other cosharer refusing to join—Lessee suing for possession and mesne profits — Lessee held entitled to get lease from the grantor and possession of his share and refund of proportional selami—Specific Relief Act, Ss. 14, 15 and 16.

A cosharer professed to grant a lease of the entire interest in a property of which he held a share only, had the draft of the kabuliyat made, agreed to give an amalnama or authority to the lessee to take possession of the property and received the full selami stipulated from the lessee and accepted rent. The other cosharers refusing to execute the kabuliyat, the cosharer refused possession of his share. Lessee sued for amalnama and possession.

Held : that the suit was not for specific performance of a contract and thus coming under Ss. 14, 15 and 16 but was for a declaration and consequential relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled. [P 381 C 2]

Garlick, J.—The facts of this case are that the plaintiff wanted a lease of 6 bighas of land 12 annas of which belonged to defendants 1 to 7 whom I shall call the Mitras and four annas belonged to defendants 8 & 9 who represent some minors whom we may call the Boses. The plaintiff negotiated with the Mitras. They agreed to give him a bemeadi lease for a selami of Rs. 300 and annual rent of Rs. 60. It was apparently assumed that the four annas cosharers would join in the lease. In pursuance of this agreement the plaintiff paid Rs. 300 as selami to the Mitras and executed a registered kabuliyat which had been drawn up in their cutchery. They agreed to give him an amalnama signed by the 16 annas cosharers. Defendants 8 and 9 however refused to join in the lease so the amalnama was never given. The Mitras offered to pay back to the plaintiff his Rs. 300 but he would not take it and insisted on getting a lease. As defendants 8 and 9 would not join in granting a lease he filed this suit against all the cosharers, praying for an amalnama, possession of the land and mesne profits. The defence of the Mitras was that the settlement was conditional on the four annas sharers agreeing to it. Defendants 8 and 9 denied that they ever made any agreement with the plaintiff. The first Court held that defendants 8 and 9 never agreed to grant a lease and that there was only a conditional contract by the 12 annas maliks to settle the land with the plaintiff provided that the other cosharers agreed. He held that the contract failed because the other cosharers never agreed. It was suggested in the lower Court that the plaintiff might get an amalnama and possession from the 12 annas sharers only. The Court of first instance refused this on the ground that this was never in the contemplation of any party and that a partial settlement would lead only to complications.

On appeal to the District Judge it was held that though the plaintiff was not entitled to a lease from the 16 annas cosharers he was entitled to a lease from the 12 annas cosharers in respect of their share. The order of the lower appellate Court was that the plaintiff be declared to be a lessee of the plaint lands in terms of the draft kabuliyat so far as the 12 annas share of the Mitras was concerned and that he should get possession of 12 annas share of the land jointly with the defendants 8 and 9. Defendants 1 to 7 were ordered to refund to the plaintiff  $\frac{1}{4}$  of Rs. 300 selami which they had received. The lower appellate Court also ordered an enquiry to be made as regards the amount of mesne-profits to be paid to the plaintiff. Defendants 1 and 7 have appealed and their main ground of appeal is that the plaintiffs' suit was a suit for specific performance of a contract and that a decree for partial performance such as has been given by the lower Court could not legally be given under Ss. 14, 15 and 16, Specific Relief Act. It is pointed out that the agreement if any, was an agreement to grant a lease by the 16 annas cosharers and not by the 12 annas cosharers. It is argued that the lower appellate Court has made a new contract for the plaintiff and also that it has allowed specific performance of a portion of a contract which was one and indivisible. It was also argued that the contract was conditional and that it came to an end when the condition became impossible of performance and that the plaintiff as a matter of fact had never prayed in his plaint for performance of a portion of the contract namely 12 annas share of it.

If the suit is regarded as a suit against the 16 annas maliks for a joint amalnama then it is a suit for specific performance. But in form it is rather a suit for declaration of title and for possession. In the plaint nothing was said about specific performance of a contract. The plaintiff alleged that his kabuliyat had been accepted and he claimed only an amalnama, possession and mesne profits. If it is a suit for specific performance it must come under either of Ss. 14, 15 and 16, Specific Relief Act. S. 14 applies when the portion of the contract which cannot be performed bears so small a proportion to the whole that the deficiency is trivial. That is not the case here. A fourth part of a contract is not an insignificant portion of the whole. S. 16 only applies when a contract can be divided into independent parts one of which can be enforced without regard to the other. That section does not apply here for a contract about a 12 annas undivided share cannot be regarded as an independent portion of a contract relating to 16 annas of the suit bond. The only section which might apply is S. 15. S. 15 applies if one party is unable to perform a considerable portion of his contract but the other party consents to accept performance of such portion as is possible of performance and is willing to forgo all compensation with regard to the rest of it. That section would apply here if the plaintiff were willing to take a lease from the 12 annas maliks and gave up his claim against the four annas maliks and also gave up all claim to compensation with regard to the four annas. But that was not the plaintiffs' case and that is not the relief which has been given to him. He has been declared to be a lessee of only the 12 annas cosharers of the land but not without compensation for the deficiency; for defendants 1 to 7 have been ordered to refund a quarter of the selami to him.

But the decree as a matter of fact is not a decree for specific performance of a contract. The decree is in the form of a declaration that the plaintiff is already a lessee of the plaint land to the extent of the 12 annas share of defendants 1 to 7 and that he will get possession of that share. He will get a refund of a part of the selami and will get mesne profits for the period subsequent to the date of the kabuliyat which he has already executed. This decision of the lower appellate Court seems to us to be in accordance with the admitted facts. Defendants 1 to 7 had agreed to give the plaintiff a lease of their share of the land and they had accepted from him a kabuliyat which was drawn up in their office. The lease had been actually granted so far as they were concerned. There is nothing further to be done by them. The plaintiff is already a lessee of that share. No amalnama is necessary. All that he requires is possession. The decree granted is not a decree for specific performance but is a declaratory decree with consequential relief. I see no reason why this decree should not be upheld. In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree. The case has been argued before us on the basis that the suit was one for specific performance of a contract and it is argued on the authority of the well-known case of Price v. Griffith (1), that there could not be a partial decree and that the plaintiff's entire suit should be dismissed. The facts as found by the learned Subordinate Judge are that the Mitters professed to grant a lease of the entire interest in the property, that they executed a memorandum giving the terms according to which the lease by the defendants should be executed. They had the draft of the kabuliyat made and corrected in their office by their own men, the manager of the Mitters gave an amalnama or authority to the plaintiff to take possession of the property, that the Mitters received Rs. 300 the full selami stipulated from the plaintiff and accepted from the plaintiff rent for one quarter of 1326. On these facts the conclusion arrived at by the learned Additional District Judge is that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in a suit for recovery of possession of land. The learned Judge has not put it in so many words; but what he means to find is that there was a concluded and completed contract of lease between the parties. It is not discovered that the Mitters are not able to give to the plaintiff title to the entire 16 annas. But so far as their 12 annas share is concerned, there was nothing more to be done in order to complete the lease. There is no question of specific performance of any contract in this case because so far as Mitters' share is concerned the lease was complete. It is a suit for declaration of title to land and for recovery of possession. The title of the plaintiff having been established, he is entitled to a decree for possession also.

With regard to the argument that has been so strenuously addressed to us as regards specific performance, the law does not seem to be so settled as the appellants take it to be. Price v. Griffith (1) has been explained in Hexter v. Pearce (2) where it is pointed out that the passage in Price's case which support the appellant's view was an obiter and is not to be followed in every circumstance. The case of Lumley v. Ravenscroft (3), following Price's case made certain reservations where it was observed:

"the case of course will be different. If nothing more than partial performance is possible by reason only of the default of the defendant, because no man ought to be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong."

Burrow v. Scamwell (4) is another case in point where it was held that a partial lease is possible where the grantor is unable to grant a lease in its entirety. This view was also taken in Shyama Charan Kotal v. Kumud Dasi (5) though some of the expressions used in the case seem to go beyond the law as appears to have been settled by authorities. As the Judicial Committee has pointed out in William Graham v. Krishna Chandra Dey (6) the law on this point must be taken to have been codified by Ss. 14 to 17, Specific Relief Act: and English authorities can only be resorted to for the purpose of explaining those sections. S. 15 for instance provides for partial performance of a contract under certain circumstances. Even if this case were a case where Specific Relief Act was applicable I would have had no hesitation in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit under S. 15, Specific Relief Act. The law as expressed in Mortlock v. Buller (7), that a plaintiff is entitled to what he has got is still good law. As I have said the case is a pure case of declaration of title and recovery of possession and the plaintiff according to the finding of the Court below has succeeded in establishing his title.

Appeal No. 238 of 1928, Decided on 11th February 1929, against appellate order of Sub-Judge, Zillah Mymensingh, D/- 28th February 1928.

Civil P. C., S. 2—Decree in a suit for possession and mesne profits—Partly final partly preliminary—Time for execution of the decree of possession, runs at the latest from the date of the final decree of the appellate Court—Lim. Act, Art. 182.

When a decree is made for possession, that portion of the decree is final; and when a decree is made for mesne profits in a suit it is only preliminary, because the final decree for mesne profits cannot be made unless the amount due is found upon further enquiry. In such a suit, although one decree is made, it is partly preliminary and partly final. The final part of the decree can be executed apart from the preliminary part and it falls within the provision of Art. 182, Lim. Act. Time for execution of the decree for possession runs at the latest from the date of the final decree of the appellate Court and not from the time when the decree ascertaining the mesne profits was passed. Annada Charan Karkoon—for Appellant.

Phanindranath De—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against an order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing his appeal in the matter of execution in which he raised an objection that the execution of the decree for possession had been barred by limitation. The suit brought by the respondent decree-holder was for possession of certain properties and for mesne profits apparently including the mesne profits even after the date of the suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff it was decreed. This decree which is dated 23rd January 1922 was for possession as well as for mesne profits; and an order was made by the lower appellate Court for sending the case to the trial Court for ascertainment of mesne profits. The defendant-appealed against that decree to the High Court which was dismissed on 17th July 1923. After that, an enquiry was made as to the amount of mesne profits which must have been for a period of three years, according to O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., after the date of the decree. This was made on 30th April 1926. The decree-holder did not take possession before that date. He applied for execution of the decree for delivery of possession as also for mesne profits on 24th March 1927. Both the Courts below have held that time should run from the date of final disposal of the case which, they thought, was the date when mesne profits were assessed, that is in April 1926. The judgment-debtor contends before us in his appeal that limitation for the execution of the decree for possession runs from 17th July 1923 when the appeal to the High Court was dismissed. The contention on behalf of the decree-holder respondent is that the Courts below were right in holding that limitation ran from April 1926 on the ground that it was an entire decree which the decree-holder was entitled to execute and so long as the mesne profits had not been ascertained, the decree was only a preliminary one. That contention of the respondent can hardly be supported on principle.
